There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 38) for the adjustment and settlement of losses sustained by the cooperative marketing associations.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, yesterday I offered an amendment to strike out the words "and/or cotton."

Mr. McKELLAR. The reason why I ask that those words be stricken out is that I am not familiar with the cooperatives so far as wheat and some other products in the West are concerned, but I am very familiar with the cooperatives so far as cotton is concerned. I think cotton ought not to be included. With the understanding that cotton is to be excluded I shall have no objection to the passage of the joint resolution.

LXXX—283

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, to what cooperatives does the joint resolution refer?

Mr. FRAZIER. It refers to grains, and I intend to offer an amendment to strike out cotton.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution is before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. FRAZIER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 8, after the word "grain", it is proposed to strike out the words "and/or cotton"; on page 2, line 6, after the word "grain", to strike out the words "and/or cotton"; and in line 8, after the word "grain", to strike out the words "and/or cotton", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That for the purpose of adjustment and settlement of losses sustained by the cooperative marketing associations dealing in grain during the stabilization operations of the Federal Farm Board in the years 1929 and 1930 when such cooperative marketing associations were induced and requested by the Federal Farm Board to withhold grain from the market and to make advances to their members in order to stabilize prices, the Federal Farm Credit Administration is hereby authorized and directed to make such adjustments and settlements in accordance with the understanding that such cooperative marketing associations had with the Federal Farm Board, and on the basis of a price or a sum equal to the amount directly loaned or advanced to such associations plus carrying charges and operation costs in connection with such grain from the date of the loans or advances to the date that such grain was finally taken over by the Federal Farm Board or delivered pursuant to its instructions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF EMIL HOYER (DECEASED)

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 1705, being House bill 685, and I ask the attention of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent to return to Order of Business 1705. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I objected yesterday to the consideration of the bill, but I have since talked with the Senator from Vermont and am glad to withdraw my objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 685) for the relief of the estate of Emil Hoyer (deceased) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of Emil Hoyer (deceased), the sum of $5,000, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States, or any employee thereof, for the fatal injury to Emil Hoyer as the result of his being struck by an Essex mail truck, no. 16604, owned by the United States Post Office Department, Boston, Mass., and operated by John Mohr, of Brookline, Mass., the accident occurring at 11 o'clock p. m., August 22, 1933, on Massachusetts Avenue, Boston, Mass., near the intersection of St. Botolph Street, the said Emil Hoyer, as a result of the injuries received, having died at 11:10 o'clock p. m., August 22, 1933, at the Boston City Hospital, Boston, Mass.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

NAVAL AIR STATION, MIAMI, FLA.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Calendar No. 1732, House bill 8372. This bill was objected to yesterday by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], but I believe we can now adjust the matter without difficulty.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I hope the request of the Senator from Florida will be granted. Yesterday when the measure was called for consideration I said I would have no objection to it if the Senate would accept the recommendation of the Navy Department to strike out all the bill after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the language which had been recommended by the Navy Department. I understand my friend the Senator from Florida is willing to accept that suggestion. I hope the Senate may consider the bill in order that I may offer the substitute tendered by the Navy Department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida to recur to Calendar No. 1732? The Chair hears none. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8372) to authorize the acquisition of lands in the vicinity of Miami, Fla., as a site for a naval air station and to authorize the construction and installation of a naval air station thereon.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the language which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept on the behalf of the United States, free from encumbrances and without cost to the United States, the title in fee simple to such lands as he may deem necessary or desirable, in the vicinity of Miami, Fla., approximately 650 acres, as a site for such naval development as, when, and if, in his discretion, he may consider warranted by naval necessities; the property to be returned to the grantor if not used by the United States for such purposes within 10 years.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not agree to the amendment; but in order to secure action in the Senate and so that the bill may go to conference I am willing to have it acted on at this time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in behalf of the Committee on Naval Affairs I will say that if the proposal is agreeable to the Senator from Florida, the Committee on Naval Affairs is likewise agreeable. The measure involves a gift of land near Miami, Fla., for a naval air station and it is desirable that some action be had.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. FLETCHER. I am willing to have the amendment adopted in order to have the bill go to conference.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS AND SAILORS OF REGULAR ARMY AND NAVY, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 9074) granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, etc., and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependents of such soldiers and sailors, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MCGILL. Mr. President, I reported this bill on behalf of the Committee on Pensions. In my judgment, it is entirely too complicated a measure to take up on this call of the calendar. In addition to that, a measure of a general character has been introduced which would cover such cases as are included in this bill. For that reason I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ACCEPTANCE OF BEQUEST OF THE LATE HENRY H. ROGERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3720) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States the bequest of the late Henry H. Rogers, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept on behalf of the United States the collection of ship models, with glass exhibit cases, bequeathed the United States Naval Academy by the late Henry H. Rogers, of Southampton, Long Island, N. Y.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to carry out the purposes of section 1 of this act.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Maine, who reported the bill, as to the nature of the bequest, and its probable value. I observe that $5,000 is appropriated to carry out the purposes of the bill.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Tennessee, I will say that in the will of the late Henry H. Rogers a bequest to the Government was made of a very fine collection of ship models which are valued at between $300,000 and $500,000. This bill provides for accepting the collection and authorizes the appropriation of a small sum of money to care for it.

Mr. McKELLAR. That answers the question.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this bill should not be enacted without a word of commendation.

The gift of the late Henry H. Rogers is that of a collection of model ships, the finest in the world, valued at about $300,000.

The purpose of the bill is to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States, to be placed in the Naval Academy, the bequest of the late Henry H. Rogers, of Southampton, N. Y., a collection of ship models and to authorize the appropriation of $5,000 to carry out the purposes of this act.

This collection consists of 107 ship models varying from 6 inches to 6 feet, the average being about 4 feet in length. It is estimated that the value of this collection is about $300,000 and is probably the most valuable collection of its kind in the world.

The passage of this bill is necessary before this bequest can be accepted, and the Navy Department has received notice of the pending probate of Colonel Rogers' will and is concerned lest its lack of authority to accept the specific bequest delay the probate. The committee strongly recommends that this bill be enacted.

The Navy Department favors this bill as indicated by the letter from the Secretary of the Navy to the Chairman of the Committee and made a part of the report.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not yet understand what it is that was bequeathed.

Mr. WALSH. A collection of 107 ship models that represent the development and expansion of shipbuilding. The collection is a very remarkable and very valuable one.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO HOMESTEAD SETTLERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3870) granting a leave of absence to settlers of homestead lands during the year 1936, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment at the end of the bill to insert a new section, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That any homestead settler or entryman who, during the calendar year 1936, should find it necessary, because of economic conditions, to leave his homestead to seek employment in order to obtain the necessities of life for himself or family or to provide for the education of his children, may, upon filing with the register of the district his affidavit, supported by corroborating affidavits of two disinterested persons, showing the necessity of such absence, be excused from compliance with the requirements of the homestead laws as to residence, cultivation, improvements, expenditures, or payment of purchase money, as the case may be, during all or any part of the calendar year 1936, and said entries shall not be open to contest or protest because of failure to comply with such requirements during such absence; except that the time of such absence shall not be deducted from the actual residence required by law, but a period equal to such absence shall be added to the statutory life of the entry: Provided, That any entryman holding an unperfected entry on ceded Indian lands may be excused from the requirements of residence upon the conditions provided herein, but shall not be entitled to extension of time for the payment of any installment of the purchase price of the land except upon payment of interest, in advance, at the rate of 4 percent per annum on the principal of any unpaid purchase price from the date when such payment or payments became due to and inclusive of the date of the expiration of the period of relief granted hereunder.

SEC. 2. Any homestead settler or entryman, including any entryman on ceded Indian lands, who is unable to make the payments due on the purchase price of his land on account of economic conditions, shall be excused from making any such payment during the calendar year 1936 upon payment of interest, in advance, at the rate of 4 percent per annum on the principal of any unpaid purchase price from the date when such payment or payments became due to and inclusive of the date of the expiration of the period of relief granted hereunder.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETIREMENT OF EMPLOYEES OF LEGISLATIVE BRANCH

The bill (H. R. 3044) to amend the act of May 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 349), for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service and in certain positions in the legislative branch of the Government to include all other employees in the legislative branch was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG, Mr. KING, and other Senators. Let the bill go over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if those who object to the consideration of this bill will withhold their objections for a moment, with the permission of the chairman of the Committee on Rules, I should like to say a word about the bill.

This measure is intended to give the benefits of a very small retirement fund to employees in the legislative branch who are not now provided for in the regular pension law.

We have here in the Senate, in the persons of the Sergeant at Arms, the assistants on both sides of the Chamber, the Secretary, and others, and some clerks in our offices—I think I perhaps have one; I am not sure—officers and employees who have done valiant service for the Government through a great many years. The provision proposed in this bill is identical with the benefit extended to civil-service employees.

There is an impression, I think, that civil-service employees contribute, and thereby have the benefits of retirement through their own financial participation. As a matter of fact, every single civil-service employee has an outright grant of $30 a month. Then, under the general law, they may make monthly contributions from their salaries which accumulate and on their retirement will be added to the original $30.

The purpose of the pending bill—which was discussed on two different occasions at special meetings of the Committee on Rules—is that the benefits which are now given to all other employees of the Government may be extended to our clerks and our employees in the legislative branch.

I do not know that it is possible for me to convert the many Senators who objected to the bill; but it seems to me they objected because they did not exactly realize the significance and the propriety of the measure.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have a great deal of sympathy with the purpose of the bill, but it is a question of how it can be worked out.

Suppose a man is appointed to the Senate, and serves, say, 3 months. I have known Senators to serve less than 3 months. The Senators have full quotas of clerks, even in that short space of time. Since I have been here, as I recall, one Senator served less than 5 weeks; and under the Senator's bill his clerks would all be under civil service.

Mr. COPELAND. No; the Senator from Tennessee is entirely mistaken. If what he says were the case, I should be in full sympathy with the opposition of the Senator. The clerk must have been 15 years in the service, and 50 years of age, before being eligible for this benefit.

Mr. McKELLAR. Take such a case: The appointment is purely personal to the Senator. The Senator may depart at any time, as we all know; and I do not believe the plan outlined in the bill will effect right and justice.

Mr. COPELAND. On the contrary, I will say to the Senator, that all those objections have been met by the bill. The bill was given very serious study in the committee, and amendments have been reported proposing to safeguard every single step in the procedure.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. This bill, as it is now presented to the Senate, does not place Senate clerks under the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. COPELAND. No; it does not.

Mr. ROBINSON. It merely gives them the privilege of retirement, as stated by the Senator from New York, after they shall have served 15 years and reached the age of 50 years.

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. The bill does not interfere with the right of a Senator to choose his own clerk or confidential employees.

Mr. COPELAND. Or to dismiss them.

Mr. ROBINSON. Or to dismiss them. It merely gives to those who are fortunate enough to have had the required service and also who have reached the required age an opportunity for retirement.

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. I myself raised in the committee, as the Senator from New York will recall, the suggestions which are now being made by the Senator from Tennessee. I became satisfied that those objections were removed in the final draft of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I believe objection has already been made to the consideration of the bill; but I should like to ask the Senator from New York to let it go over and let me look into the measure.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well. At this point I ask that a letter from the Civil Service Commission be inserted in the RECORD so that the record will be complete.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD; and, objection having been made, the bill will be passed over.

The letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., March 18, 1936.

Mr. CHESLEY W. JUNEY.

Sergeant at Arms, United States Senate.

DEAR MR. JUNEY: Receipt is acknowledged of your communication of March 17, 1936, inquiring whether the Civil Service Commission would have anything to do with the appointment of employees at the Capitol in the event either the House or Senate bills providing for retirement of employees in the legislative branch of the Government should pass. It is assumed that you refer to H. R. 3044, introduced by Mr. RAMSPECK, and S. 3205, introduced by Senator NEELY.

In reply you are advised that if either bill should become law this Commission would have nothing whatever to do with appointments to positions at the Capitol. The civil-service retirement law in no way limits or repeals the power of appointing officers in the matter of making appointments. Certain employees of the legislative branch of the Government, such as employees of the Architect of the Capitol and Library of Congress are now subject to the provisions of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, whose appointments are made without regard to Civil Service Act and rules, the Commission exercising no control over such appointments.

Of course, under both bills records of service would be necessary. Section 15 of the Civil Service Retirement Act provides in part:

"The Civil Service Commission shall keep a record of appointments, transfers, changes in grade, separations from the service, reinstatements, loss of pay, and such other information concerning individual service as may be deemed essential to a proper determination of rights under this act."

If H. R. 3044, as passed by the House of Representatives, should become law, such records would be prepared under regulations approved by this Commission, but so far as appointments are concerned they would not come under the jurisdiction of this office.

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY B. MITCHELL, President.

SANTA BARBARA NATIONAL FOREST, CALIF.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6544) to conserve the water resources and to encourage reforestation of the watersheds of Santa Barbara County, Calif., by the withdrawal of certain public land, included within the Santa Barbara National Forest, Calif., from location and entry under the mining laws, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the public lands of the United States, within the boundaries of the Santa Barbara National Forest, located in the State of California and hereinafter described, are hereby withdrawn from location or entry under the mining laws of the United States:

All Government lands in sections 1, 2, 3, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 34, 35, and 36, township 7 north, range 28 west, San Bernardino meridian.

All Government lands in sections 5, 8, and 17, township 6 north, range 24 west, San Bernardino meridian.

All Government lands in township 6 north, range 25 west, San Bernardino meridian.

All Government lands in township 6 north, range 27 west, San Bernardino meridian, except sections 19, 30, and 31.

All Government lands in sections 1, 2, and 12, township 6 north, range 28 west, San Bernardino meridian.

All Government lands in sections 6, 7, 18, 19, 30, and 31, township 5 north, range 24 west, San Bernardino meridian.

All Government lands in township 5 north, range 25 west, San Bernardino meridian.

All Government lands in township 5 north, range 26 west, San Bernardino meridian, except in sections 31 and 32.

All Government lands in sections 1, 2, 3, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, township 5 north, range 27 west, San Bernardino meridian: Provided, That this act shall not defeat or affect any lawful right which has already attached under the mining laws and which is hereinafter maintained in accordance with such laws: Provided further, That the President upon recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture, may, by Executive order, when in his judgment the public interest would best be served thereby, and after reasonable notice has been given through the Department of the Interior, restore to location and entry under the mining laws, any of the lands hereby withdrawn therefrom: Provided further, That any person desiring to locate and enter upon any such withdrawn lands under the mineral land laws may make such location and entry upon a showing satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture that the lands to be entered are chiefly valuable for minerals.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill? It seems to be more or less important.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I simply know that this is a House bill which has come over here with the approval of the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture. The reports of both Departments are annexed to the report of the committee, and the Senator will see if he will examine his records, approving the bill, and making no objection to it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from California if he knows the cost that will be involved to the Federal Treasury as a result of the enactment of this measure.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is a matter of withdrawal of lands. I do not see how there can be any very great cost, or in fact any cost.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I will state that, after examination, if it shall be ascertained that no valuable minerals are on the lands, it is desirous of incorporating them in the Santa Barbara National Forest for the purpose of conserving the watersheds of Santa Barbara County.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

HELEN CURTIS

The bill (S. 4135) for the relief of Helen Curtis was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Helen Curtis, widow of James L. Curtis, late American Minister to Liberia, the sum of $5,000, equal to 1 year's salary of her deceased husband.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL FIREARMS ACT

The bill (H. R. 3254) to exempt certain small firearms from the provisions of the National Firearms Act was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (a) of section 1 of the National Firearms Act, relating to the definition of "firearms", is amended by inserting, after "definition", a comma and the following: "but does not include any rifle which is within the foregoing provisions solely by reason of the length of its barrel if the caliber of such rifle is .22 or smaller and if its barrel is 16 inches or more in length."

FILING OF COPIES OF INCOME RETURNS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11365) relating to the filing of copies of income returns, and for other purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, what does this bill provide?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, under section 55 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1934 copies of income returns are authorized to be made available to States for the administration of State and local tax laws. It is estimated that over 6,000,000 returns will be filed this year. Of these approximately 2,500,000 will be sent to Washington, from which will be selected approximately 750,000 returns for investigation. These investigations produce additional revenue of approximately $300,000,000, although the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the time allotted to perform this work cannot complete more than 400,000 investigations.

To permit the original returns to be available for inspection would result in a great deal of delay in the auditing and investigation of returns, with a consequent loss of millions of dollars in revenue. It is necessary that copies thereof be available for the purposes of such inspection, but to impose upon the Treasury Department the work of making copies of a great number of returns would seriously interfere with the work of audit and investigation, as the returns would have to be withdrawn from use by the Treasury during the process of making copies.

Moreover, the Bureau of Internal Revenue today is not equipped to make any large number of copies of income returns, since it has only three photostating machines. These machines cost approximately $1,300, and at least one machine will be required in each of the 64 collection districts, with a number of machines required in some of the larger districts. Since it will be necessary also to employ a considerable number of additional personnel to prepare copies, it is evident that a large additional appropriation will be required if the burden of preparing a great number of copies of returns is placed on the Bureau.

The Treasury Department has issued regulations requiring taxpayers to file copies, but the only method of enforcing such regulations is a criminal penalty for willful failure. The bill, therefore, provides for the assessment and payment of $5 in the case of failure by an individual to file a copy, and $10 in the case of failure by a corporation, partnership, or fiduciary to file such copy.

Although forms have been distributed to taxpayers which contain a statement that the taxpayer must file a copy with the original return, nevertheless, further opportunity is provided in the bill for taxpayers to become familiar with the requirement of filing a copy. It is provided that in case of returns for the calendar year 1935, and fiscal years beginning in 1935, such assessment shall only be made after the taxpayer has been mailed a request to file the copy required within 15 days. The bill, therefore, provides for a reasonable, yet effective, means of enforcing the requirement of filing copies of returns.

Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is to save the time of the Department, and the expense which would be involved if the Department itself had to make these copies for the several State governments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then it does not do away with the law which provides that States may have this information? It is merely to expedite and give the Treasury Department less trouble?

Mr. WALSH. It seeks to enforce the regulation that copies shall be filed with the income-tax returns.

Mr. McKELLAR. It seems to me that is proper. I thought at first it was a bill to repeal the provision of the law referred to.

Mr. WALSH. It is unanimously reported by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRANT OF LAND TO THE NORTHERN MONTANA AGRICULTURAL AND MANUAL TRAINING SCHOOL

The bill (S. 1871) granting certain public lands to the State of Montana for the use and benefit of the Northern Montana Agricultural and Manual Training School was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let that bill go over.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I observe from the report submitted with this measure that the recommendation of the Interior Department is adverse. Some Senator suggested that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

GRADING OF ENLISTED MEN IN THE ARMY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4132) to amend section 4b of the National Defense Act, as amended, relating to certain enlisted men of the Army, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4b of the National Defense Act, as amended, be, and the same hereby is, amended by striking out the present wording and substituting therefor the following:

"Sec. 4b. Enlisted men: On and after July 1, 1936, the grades and ratings of enlisted men shall be such as the President may from time to time direct, with monthly base pay in each grade and pay for each rating as prescribed by law. The numbers in grades and/or ratings of enlisted men shall be such as are authorized from time to time by the President by Executive order: Provided, That nothing in this section shall operate to reduce the pay which any enlisted man is now receiving, during his current enlistment and while he holds his present grade and rating, nor to change the present rate of pay of any enlisted man now on the retired list, nor to change existing provisions of law relating to flying cadets: Provided further, That the transportation privileges authorized by section 12 of the act of Congress approved May 18, 1920, shall apply only to enlisted men of the first three grades."

SEC. 2. All laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are repealed as of the effective date of this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this bill enables the President to rearrange grades and ratings of enlisted men without increasing the total number. It is an administrative measure, which gives the Department greater flexibility in these respects.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether it would increase the cost to the Government?

Mr. SHEPPARD. As to whether there would be any actual increase in appropriations would depend on the appropriations made by Congress for the Army from time to time.

Mr. KING. If the ratings and grades changed the status and gave the men advanced status, obviously it would increase the annual expenses of the War Department.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Final power in the matter would rest with the Committees on Appropriations and Congress. The Navy Department has the same flexibility in rearranging grades and ratings.

Mr. KING. Is there any limitation as to the grades and the compensation in the respective grades? Suppose the President should transfer all the men to the highest grade; what would be the result?

Mr. SHEPPARD. He is supposed to exercise his discretion in the matter within the enlisted strength allowed by law.

Mr. KING. Does the law fix the grades and the compensation in each grade?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It does at present. Under the National Defense Act there are established for the enlisted men in the Army seven grades and six specialist ratings, the specialist ratings carrying extra pay applicable to men in the sixth and seventh grades. In addition there are two specialist air-mechanics ratings applicable to the Air Corps.

This bill would permit the President by Executive order from time to time to establish the numbers of enlisted men of the Regular Army in grades or ratings in accordance with changed circumstances and conditions. Its effect would be to eliminate from the National Defense Act the provisions specifying the numbers in enlisted grades and specialist ratings.

The War Department advises that the Navy already has this administrative freedom to adjust its allotments. In recommending this legislation for favorable action the War Department contends that the bill will have no effect at all of endangering the control of expenditures for enlisted pay, and that since the appropriation for enlisted pay has been the basic control factor in the past and will so continue in the future, the enactment of the bill would not increase the cost of the Military Establishment.

Mr. KING. Obviously the latter statement of the War Department is not quite accurate, because if we should lift from a lower grade to a higher grade any considerable number, it would be bound to increase the expenditures, and though the Committees on Appropriations finally have the say as to what the aggregate appropriations for the Army shall be, if enlisted men are lifted from grades A, B, and C to higher grades, and serve in those grades, obviously when the Committees on Appropriations are asked to make appropriations they would take into account the fact that those grades had been filled by persons of lower grades, and it would be their duty, it seems to me, to make the necessary appropriations to meet the larger expenditures.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is a matter of policy, of determination as to what should be done in the best interest of the Army. The same rule we are trying to adopt by this bill prevails in the Navy.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, we are in the habit of citing the case of one department that has had some favorable consideration, and had a set-up that becomes a precedent, in an endeavor to provide certain set-ups in all the departments. That is true in the civil service; employees are moved to grades, and because Mr. A has been elevated to a higher grade, then Mr. B must be elevated to a higher grade. The result is that in the higher grades there is, in my opinion, a superabundance of employees.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not think the War Department has anything like that in mind. I think they are actuated by a desire to use the best method of classifying enlisted men.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not object to the consideration of the bill, but I shall vote against it, because I think it is unwise legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STUDIES OF SUB-BITUMINOUS AND LIGNITE COAL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3748) to authorize the Bureau of Mines to conduct certain studies, investigations, and experiments with respect to sub-bituminous and lignite coal, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with an amendment, on page 2, line 15, after the word "act" and the period, to insert the words, "the above amount to be expended over a period of 3 years, as follows: $40,000 to be expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937; $30,000 to be expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938; and $30,000 to be expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Bureau of Mines, under the general direction of the Secretary of the Interior, is authorized to conduct investigations, studies, and experiments on its own initiative and in cooperation with individuals, State institutions, laboratories, and other organizations, with a view to (1) the development of a commercially practicable carbonization method of processing sub-bituminous and lignite coal so as to convert such coal into an all-purpose fuel, to provide fertilizers, and obtain such other byproducts thereof as may be commercially valuable; (2) the development of efficient methods, equipment, and devices for burning lignite or char therefrom; and (3) determining and developing methods for more efficient utilization of such sub-bituminous and lignite coal for purposes of generating electric power.

SEC. 2. The Bureau of Mines is further authorized, under the general direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to erect such plants, construct and purchase such machinery and equipment, and to take such other steps as it may deem necessary and proper to effectuate the purposes of this act.

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000 for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act. The above amount to be expended over a period of 3 years, as follows: $40,000 to be expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937; $30,000 to be expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938; and $30,000 to be expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, this bill carries a comparatively large authorization, the sum of $100,000. It is true that the expenditure of the fund would be restricted to $40,000 during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937; $30,000 during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and the remainder during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939. It provides for certain studies and experimentation. I think the obligation is on the author of the bill to justify its provisions.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, it will be noted, from the report of the Secretary of the Interior, that the bill is recommended by the Bureau of Mines, by the Interior Department, and also by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, and they suggest an amendment, which has been included. The bill was discussed before the Committee on Mines and Mining, of which the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] is chairman, and was reported unanimously.

There is a great deal of lignite coal in several States, especially in four Western States. According to the Bureau of Mines, over 60 percent of all the coal in the United States is in the form of lignite and sub-bituminous coal, in four States, Wyoming, North Dakota, Montana, and Colorado, and owing to the excessive amount of moisture contained in the lignite coal, it is not practical to ship it any great distance; it does not keep well. The desire is to experiment further in the carbonization of the coal. Some work along this line was done some years ago, as is set out in the report of the Secretary; but the Bureau did not have enough money to complete the work. It was along the line of carbonizing the coal and compressing it into briquets, which make an excellent fuel. It will also burn under certain conditions in the form of char as it comes from the carbonization process. There is a desire also to experiment in the generation of electricity by the use of this lignite coal, which is a very cheap process, according to engineers who have made an investigation of it. They say it is even cheaper than water power. There is no water power in some of the lignite-coal States where there is such an abundance of lignite coal. The Bureau of Mines estimates that in North Dakota lignite coal exists to the extent of 600,000,000,000 tons, and it is mined only to a small extent.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Have not studies long since been made as to this kind of coal? It seems to me the owners of the land, and others interested in such a vast project, have all the information that could possibly be obtained by the Bureau now; that the information has already been obtained and is before the public.

Mr. FRAZIER. It is very true that a great deal of experimental work has been done, but coal is still shipped from the head of the Lakes to the section of the country to which I have referred; that is, it comes from West Virginia and Pennsylvania, and it is sold out there at seventeen or eighteen dollars a ton, instead of the lignite coal being used, because so many people do not know how to burn the lignite coal. It burns very well if there is just the proper kind of grates in the stoves and furnaces and the proper sort of drafts. But we desire that there shall be more experimentation in this regard. Then, the electric feature is very important. It would work right in with the rural electrification program which is being carried on at the present time.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether the lignite land is not all privately owned?

Mr. FRAZIER. It is not all privately owned. It is not a question of the land. The State owns a good deal of coal land in North Dakota, and I presume the same is true in the other States, but the bill authorizes the Bureau of Mines to cooperate with State institutions, like the schools of mines in those States, or private institutions, in making the investigation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is any part of the money to be used in teaching people how to use this particular kind of coal?

Mr. FRAZIER. It may be used to demonstrate, under the direction of the Bureau of Mines, how that coal can be burned, and the process of making briquets by carbonization. It is also to be used in the generation of electricity. It is claimed that 2½ tons of lignite coal will make a ton of first-class briquets, which have the heating quality of anthracite coal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rule, the Senator's time has expired. The Senate is operating under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, yesterday, under the 5-minute rule, certain Senators spoke for an hour and a half. I ask unanimous consent to have a little more time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Chair will recognize the Senator from North Dakota for 5 minutes more. The Chair feels that he should enforce the rule. Everything done yesterday was done by unanimous consent. The Senate is operating under a rule, and should recognize it if the rule is to continue to exist.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is to be observed that the bill as originally introduced by the Senator from North Dakota contemplated that the appropriation should be made without express limitation on the time for its expenditure.

Mr. FRAZIER. The expenditure is under the direction of the Bureau of Mines, of course.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. It will be noted also that the approval of the bill by the Department is on condition that the investigations be continued over a period of 3 years.

Mr. FRAZIER. There is no objection to that.

Mr. ROBINSON. I know; but I am wondering if there is not really an objection to it. Considering the research which has been made, the progress which has been had in the matter, why is it necessary to have a 3-year investigation?

Mr. FRAZIER. The Department seems to think—and I suppose the suggestion came from the Bureau of Mines—that it would be necessary to carry out experiments through a period of 3 years. Personally, I had not thought it would take that long; but I was perfectly willing to comply with the request of the Department. I have talked several times with officials of the Bureau of Mines in regard to a proposition of this kind. In fact, the Bureau of Mines made the request for funds from the P. W. A. for this purpose; but its request was not granted, either because the money at that time was allocated, or because there were so many requests for money that they could not be accommodated.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. KING. I shall speak in my own time.

I have visited the lignite- and brown-coal mines in Germany, from which are produced coal which has a lower heating content than the lignite coal of the Senator's State. I am familiar with the coal of the Senator's State as well as the coal of South Dakota. In Germany lignite and brown coal are used effectively. I saw the German coal mines in 1923 and again in 1926. Their great chemists years ago had worked out processes by which were removed all the carboniferous content and the heating content of the coal. All that is necessary to be done is to get a good chemist to analyze the coal. If we have none in the United States, we can send over to Germany and immediately get all the information that is desired; and if the proposition is a feasible one, the chemist will tell us in a short time.

Mr. FRAZIER. I appreciate the remarks of the Senator from Utah. One of the important things is the generation of electricity by the use of lignite coal. I started to make a statement in that connection.

In making a ton of briquets out of 2½ tons of lignite coal, natural gas or coal gas is eliminated by the carbonization process. It is claimed by engineers who have experimented on it, and who are ready to stake their reputations on it, that that gas can be used as fuel for gas engines to propel motors to generate electricity. The exhaust of the gas engines is very hot and will carbonize the coal, and in that carbonization process there is given off the gas which can be used as fuel. If that is correct, then in the States where lignite coal is found, communities can be taken care of by a project of this kind for furnishing electric light and electric power; and I think it would work very well with the rural electrification program which is now under way. The Bureau of Mines is strongly in favor of it, and I hope the bill may be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF SUWANNEE RIVER, FLA.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8300) to authorize a preliminary examination of Suwannee River in the State of Florida from Florida-Georgia State line to the Gulf of Mexico.

REFERENCES TO DEBATE IN HOUSE OF COMMONS (LONDON) ON THE AMERICAN FOREIGN DEBTS—REPLY TO SPEECHES

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I ask the Senate to indulge me for one or two moments. I should like to have the attention of the eminent Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]—these who have ever joined me in the preservation of American rights.

Mr. President, the public press brings us information this morning that yesterday, in the House of Commons in England, Mr. Lloyd George, known to fame and recorded in history, impeached the conduct of England for repudiating her debt to the United States. He called attention to the fact that while England was accusing Germany of violation of a treaty in moving her troops to the border of the Rhine, she—England—at the same time was violating the treaty she made with the United States of America and failing in her promise to pay her debt due this country; and he pounded the query:

What is the difference between the violation by Germany of a treaty and that which you (England) are doing in violating your agreement as against America?

At the same time, sirs, he was responded to by the officer of the exchequer, who answered that they are not repudiating their debts, and observed that they cannot do that which is impossible. It is at this point that I attract the attention of those who, like myself, are interested in seeking to obtain our rights from these governments in collecting money due us. I summon all to the knowledge that when the able officer of England cries out that the payment to us by his Government is impossible, we cannot refrain from calling the attention of the world to the fact that while England says it is impossible to pay, and assumes to deny and refute the charge that she is repudiating her debt, England gives out to the public that she is paying her debts, is reducing her taxes, and now has a surplus in her Treasury, and boasts of it, as rightfully she should, if the facts be as she states.

In addition to this, sirs, let it be recalled that this noble nation announces the extra and additional expenditure of $1,000,000,000 for extra armament in preparation for assault upon nations, or to prepare against those which she assumes will be involved in conflict against her. At the same time, Senators, we see from financial international records that England is to lend the equivalent of one-half billion dollars to France in money, part of which is contracted for to be turned over to Rumania as one of the lesser adjuncts of France in anticipation of military conflict, and preparation for what is called by Mr. Lloyd George "a new world war." Yet this eminent officer of the exchequer cries that to pay some installments on our debt is impossible!

I invite the Senate to the thought that even if it were true, as a justification, that there was any impossibility to pay the debt, where was the impossibility to acknowledge the debt, to include it in the budget as due, which they refuse to do? Where, we ask, was the impossibility to carry out the last contract, separately made, to pay interest upon the debt contracted after the war?

Sirs, not only is this interest not paid but a short while ago, in our presence here in Washington, through the representative of this great Government, it was asserted that there was no change in the denial of the debt; that "things had not changed." What things? Why, the things in which they had announced their refusal to pay us; their declining to include in their budget the acknowledgment of the debt; and their further declining even to treat with us in respect to the now-due interest.

Mr. President, in this same connection I invite my colleagues to recall what happened in the late days with our other ally debtor, great France. Herriot, making a campaign to return to his previous premier position, announced that the first duty of France is to pay her debt to America. The labor member in England on the floor of the house joined Mr. Lloyd George in denunciation of the course of England in repudiating the debt to America and defeating the just demands of our country in return for the largess and generosity we have displayed to them. In France at the same time the labor forces, partly Socialists, joined Herriot in demanding that the debt due by France shall be paid to America, while one high official representing the Government of the French Republic announced: "We owe no money to America. If there be anything owed, it is by America to us for saving her from being run over, ravished, and destroyed by Germany."

In addition to this, there arises an eminent source in this great body of French statesmen who asserts to the world that instead of France owing America, America should credit France with amounts she owes France, "of money lent to save America in her revolution against England." And this is the attitude lately again expressed at a time when, as I behold the situation, these two great Nations of Europe should be remembering the kindnesses of this America in advancing to each of them, in the hour of their travail and danger, the money which rescued them from devastation and death.

Mr. President, what do these eminent men mean? Do they really mean that they are disguising the truth, that they are deceiving the country? Is it not the witches, Senators, who, referring to their attitude as to Macbeth, cry out, as a model of execution?—

Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover through the fog and filthy air.

Mr. President, the United States of America is seeking nothing from these lands as a favor. We are asking nothing from them, sir, that is not due us. In the meantime, while they are seeking trade relations with us, they are denying every opportunity to give us a fair profit from a just trade. They are embarrassing us with every obstruction, of which we are not complaining. They are expending large sums preparatory to a conflict which they feel and openly assert in all instances will involve us, with the assertion on the part of their great leader that we—to use the exact language of the quotation—"cannot escape being brought in" to preserve what they call our rights.

Mr. President, I resent the intimation that it is impossible to recognize this debt. I resent the more the effort to avoid its existence; and, sir, I both repudiate and resent it as bad manners, their refusal even to negotiate with us, or even to include the subject in a memorandum, as they presume upon the theory that this, the Nation of America, will forget the obligation. It is assumed we will ignore it, because it is known that certain large financial interests in the United States, which wish to dispose of new bonds, are exerting themselves to have the debt wiped out, canceled, to the end that the new bonds will become a first lien. In this prospect they hope to negotiate further loans from America, while they would deprive us of all the benefit of the loans of European debtors now due America.

As to the masters of finance who manipulate this trickery, I denounce them in their combination with the English policy and that of the French design. For myself, I announce that the time has come when Government, through whoever speaks for it, will proclaim that the American people exact something in the name of America, and that we here today again remind these honorable debtors that America will not forget the debts due us; she will not cancel them, and she will not excuse the insult unnecessarily heaped upon her.

We will inform the world that as to America our position is, as against these debtors to us, that the debts should be paid, particularly at a time when our needs are so great to compensate the woes and agonies of the farmers and to assuage the distress of the toiler in his need and to restore the ravaged lands upon which the rivers and great floods have belched their infliction and devastation. For the relief of all these we seek this money due, that we may repair these damages and these destructions. For these causes it is seen that we are not seeking favor, sirs; we are demanding our right; and, for myself, I trust I may have the cooperation of my honorable colleagues as we announce to the world that we expect to force, by every means that friendly pressure can bring, the payment of these debts due us, in order that before the world we may continue to stand as independent, courageous America.

FOREIGN DEBTS DUE TO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in support of the remarks made by the able Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] with reference to the international debts due the United States.

The debate which took place in the House of Commons in Great Britain on yesterday, taken in connection with the things which had preceded, indicates unmistakably that it is not the intention of the Government of Great Britain ever to pay its debt to us. I can reach no other conclusion.

No international debts could be grounded upon more just, equitable, and moral grounds than those which underlie the debts now due to the people of the United States from European countries. No international obligation could rest upon grounds more binding. It must be borne in mind that these debts do not represent the amount of money which was loaned to the Allies during the world conflict. They represent the amount which was agreed upon long after the war closed, and after full consultation upon the part of the parties in interest and after the presentation of all facts touching matters which could be considered in the nature of equitable offsets. These debts represent a settlement after full discussion upon the basis of what the governments could pay and what the governments should pay. The money had been loaned, and the obligation incurred, and thereafter a free and full adjustment made.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. They really represent an adjustment and compromise of very, very much larger sums which the nations actually owed us.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is quite right. These debts taken as a whole represent a settlement upon the basis of about 50 cents on the dollar. With one nation we settled on the basis of about 28 cents on the dollar. It is true that the proportion in the case of Great Britain was higher than that, but taken as an average the debts represent a curtailment, or settlement, or adjustment, on the basis of about 50 cents on the dollar of the amounts which were actually loaned.

These debts are not, therefore, debts which were incurred at a time of national conflict, representing the entire amount which was loaned. They are debts representing a contractual relation made in time of peace, when all parties had an opportunity to present their case. In my opinion the actions of these governments during the last few years indicate unmistakably that they are not intending to pay the amounts of the debts as adjusted after the war was over. The repudiation of these debts when all circumstances are considered is without precedent in international affairs.

It will be recalled that the great Premier of England, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, according to press reports, stated months ago in the House of Commons, in answer to a query, in substance, that you need not give yourselves any uneasiness further about the debt due to the United States. The statement was construed and could be construed in no other light than that the debt obligation had passed out of the mind and purpose of the British Government. They were not proposing to include the debt in the budget, or apparently to give any further consideration or take any cognizance of it thereafter. There followed repeatedly acts upon the part of the governments which have indicated their attitude.

Mr. President, not a person in the United States would insist upon Great Britain or any other government paying a debt which they were actually physically unable to pay at a particular time, as the Chancellor of the Exchequer has said was the case with Great Britain.

What we do expect, what we have a right to expect, what the integrity of international contracts demands, is a recognition of the obligations and an assurance of an intention to meet them as soon as the nations are able to meet the debts. There is no indication of that kind upon the part of these governments; no indication that when they are more able to meet the obligations they will do so. Apparently they have wiped them away and off the record, and do not propose at any time in the future to meet their obligations.

The distinguished war Premier of Great Britain, Mr. Lloyd George, made the following statement upon yesterday:

It is an essential principle of the law of nations that no power can liberate itself from an engagement of a treaty or modify the stipulations thereof except with the consent of the other contracting party.

The whole structure of international order depends upon adhering to, obeying, and carrying out international agreements, and there is not a contract or a treaty involved in the chaotic conditions which now embroil Europe which entails any obligation, legal or moral, more binding than the obligation to pay these debts.

It is claimed that Germany has ignored the obligations of the Versailles Treaty, and that Italy has ignored the obligations of the Covenant of the League of Nations, and that by reason of these actions Europe has been placed again in a state of chaos of turmoil. There is no difference in law and in morals, in international obligations, between the act of Germany and the act of Italy, and the acts of these nations in repudiating these debts which they contracted to pay upon an investigation. Greater consequences may flow from one than from the other, there may be differences in that respect, but so far as moral or legal obligation goes, the nations are just as much bound to respect these obligations as Germany was to respect the Versailles Treaty, and infinitely more so, because Germany signed the Versailles Treaty under duress, at the point of the bayonet, while these debt contracts were made after full, free, deliberate investigation and agreement to pay.

If we are not to give consideration to such contracts as that, I ask, how we can expect international contracts to be respected by any nation which has the slightest interest in disregarding them. What element of integrity, of validity, of honor, is absent in these solemn contracts entered into for the highest consideration, and after the most thorough investigation the great war Minister in urging payment is speaking for the honor of the nation and for the validity of international agreements.

It is not alone a question of the dollars and cents involved. That is very great, because the amount now due, interest and all, is about $12,000,000,000, and about $10,000,000 of it in default. That is an item of very great moment. But of even greater moment than that is the fact that these nations came here when in distress, and came here to this Chamber and spoke from the Senate to our people in behalf of their people. And the people of the United States, the taxpayers, went down in their pockets and contributed, and we took the obligations of the nations who borrowed from us. It is an obligation due to the taxpayers of the United States. After the war was over and all the equities which might inhere were disposed of, we entered into an agreement.

I ask what reason there can be for entering into any agreement with any of these nations in the future if they disregard an obligation of that kind? It is striking at the very heart of international order, of international amity, of international good faith to disregard the obligation.

Mr. Chamberlain says, in reply to the ex-Premier:

His Majesty's Government never repudiated its obligations to the United States. No country, no person, can be bound to fulfill the impossible.

I ask, in reply to that peculiar answer, what has the Government of Great Britain indicated by word or act as to their intention to meet these obligations in the future? Have they said to the American people "that under the depressed conditions which now prevail we are unable to meet the debts, but we propose to meet them"? Have they indicated that in the future, when conditions are different economically and financially, they will meet them? Certainly not. They have eliminated them from their budget. He is careful to utter no word that would indicate their intention to meet these obligations in the future.

They have stated from the floor of the Houses of Parliament that there is no reason further to regard them. We must reach the conclusion that Great Britain has concluded to repudiate her debt to the people of the United States. If she has not reached that conclusion, it is time that she say to the people of the world that "We propose to pay as soon as it is possible for us to pay." Her reputation calls for an assuring statement that the default is temporary.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I say in that connection that Great Britain could not possibly offer the excuse of not being able to pay because she is today continuing to build one of the greatest navies that the world has ever seen and is adding tremendously to her Army expenditures? With all the money that she has she could easily reduce the expenditures on the Navy and Army alone and pay along on her debts.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, whatever argument Great Britain may advance as to her present inability to meet the situation, and certainly in the present conditions as they obtain, they would all be considered sympathetically. Whatever argument she might advance, she can advance no argument against the attitude of mind which she has unmistakably manifested with reference to these debts.

Mr. President, Great Britain alone is not responsible for this situation. We have had numerous travelers abroad—and some of them much more regarded abroad than at home—advising the people of Great Britain and the people of Europe that they should not pay the debts, that the people of the United States do not expect them to pay the debts, and undoubtedly that has had its effect in molding the policy of Great Britain and the other nations. For a little attention abroad they betray the rights of their own people.

Who can speak for the taxpayers of the United States? This Government has no right to compromise their claim, and it should not permit any act or policy which would indicate that they propose to do so.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Have the members of the Committee on Foreign Relations requested or examined any correspondence which has passed between the departments of the Federal Government and the Government of Great Britain and other debtor countries in connection with these claims?

Mr. BORAH. Not that I know of.

Mr. WALSH. Does anyone know just what moves have been made by officials of the Federal Government to urge and impress upon the Government of Great Britain and the other debtor governments what the attitude of the American Government is?

Mr. BORAH. I will say to the Senator that I was not speaking of any act upon the part of any official of our Government.

Mr. WALSH. I understand that. The Senator is speaking for the taxpayers, but I do think there ought to be some protest made other than on the floor of the Senate or the floor of the House.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know why the Members of the body which made this contract should not have an opportunity to discuss it and to manifest our disposition toward it. I do not know why we should be silent. We were the people who loaned this money. The Congress is responsible for the loan and for the settlement.

Mr. WALSH. I did not intend to infer any criticism of the Senator. I think he is pursuing exactly the proper course, but I did want to inquire what else was being done besides making protests on the floor of the Senate and the floor of the House.

Mr. BORAH. In my opinion, nothing.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the Senator think something ought to be done?

Mr. BORAH. I do. I feel a firm, decisive attitude on the part of our Government would restore payment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think I am speaking entirely within the record when I speak in answer to the question propounded by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] that the President of the United States in a recent utterance indicates that Congress has declared upon this question, and, as the Chief Executive, he took the same view.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not controverting that proposition. But the question was asked me what was being done except recording the protest. I do not know of anything being done except that.

Mr. WALSH. It seems to me that the Foreign Relations Committee might well ask what correspondence has passed between these debtor countries and what available information there is.

Mr. BORAH. A few days ago, Mr. President, the distinguished Senator—he is not present, and I hesitate therefore to refer to the matter—the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. McAbol] introduced a resolution looking to a further compromise of the debt, a further reduction of the debt. That can be construed across the water in only one light, and that is we do not expect the payment according to the present contract. The contract is out. It is their contract. They entered into it. They presented the facts. Upon them they were willing to contract, and that contract should stand. There is no occasion for indicating that we propose to make another contract which in due time may also be repudiated. We have been just and fair and patient. We should insist on payment according to the terms of the agreement.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF SUWANNEE RIVER, FLA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8300) to authorize a preliminary examination of Suwannee River in the State of Florida from Florida-Georgia State line to the Gulf of Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXAMINATION OF ONONDAGA CREEK, N. Y.

S. C., title 24, sec. 281), and the act of June 13, 1935 (Public. Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the report of the committee accompanying the bill may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report (No. 1690) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Report to accompany S. 4190

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4190), to amend the act approved February 7, 1913, so as to remove restrictions as to the use of the Little Rock Confederate Cemetery, Arkansas, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with a recommendation that it do pass.

In 1913 the city of Little Rock conveyed to the United States the Confederate Cemetery in Little Rock. The War Department submits that a large portion of the tract so conveyed will never be required for the burial of Confederate veterans, and the purpose of S. 4190 is to authorize the Secretary of War to accept a conveyance from the city of Little Rock without restriction to the end that the Confederate area may be available for the future interment of those individuals who, under existing law, are entitled to burial in national cemeteries. The original donors, the city of Little Rock, are agreeable to this change, and the measure is recommended for enactment by the War Department. Attention is called to the fact that the wall formerly separating the National and Confederate Cemeteries has been removed, and the entire tract now comprises one cemetery. The Secretary of War has advised that the National Cemetery area will soon be filled, and that this additional space made possible under the provisions of S. 4190 will provide ample burial space for many years.

JANUARY 24, 1936.

HON. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Chairman, Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: There is enclosed the draft of a bill to "Amend the act of February 7, 1913, so as to remove restrictions as to the use of the Little Rock Confederate Cemetery, and for other purposes", which the War Department presents for the consideration of the Congress with a view to its enactment into law.

Existing laws which will be affected are as follows:

The act of February 7, 1913 (37 Stat. 663), authorizing the Secretary of War to accept a conveyance to the United States of the Confederate Cemetery in Little Rock, Ark., and restricting its use for the burial of men who served in the military or naval service of the Confederate States of America only.

Revised Statutes 4878, as amended by the act of April 15, 1920 (41 Stat. 532; U. S. C., 24:281), and the act of June 13, 1935 (Public. No. 132, 74th Cong.), authorizing burials in national cemeteries.

By deed dated June 9, 1913, the city of Little Rock conveyed to the United States of America the Confederate Cemetery in Little Rock, which property was accepted by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of February 7, 1913, supra, for the purposes therein specified. A large portion of the tract so conveyed will never be required for the burial of Confederate veterans, and it is desired to amend said act in order that a conveyance may now be accepted from the city of Little Rock, without restriction, to the end that the Confederate area may be available for the future interment of those individuals who, under existing law, are entitled to burial in national cemeteries. The wall formerly separating the national and Confederate cemeteries has been removed, and the entire tract now comprises one cemetery. The national cemetery area will soon be filled, and this additional space will provide ample burial space for many years. The proposed amendment removes the restrictions in the act of February 7, 1913, authorizes the acceptance of a new conveyance and adds appropriate language to permit the burial of all classes of soldiers, sailors, marines, and officers and enlisted men of the Coast Guard entitled to interment in a national cemetery.

The original donors, the city of Little Rock, are agreeable to this change.

The Acting Director, Bureau of the Budget, has advised that the proposed legislation would not be in conflict with the financial program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

GEO. H. DERN, Secretary of War.

Supplemental report from the War Department follows:

FEBRUARY 15, 1936.

HON. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Chairman, Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: Referring to my letter to you of January 24, 1936, requesting the introduction of a bill to "Amend the act of February 7, 1913, so as to remove restrictions as to the use of the Little Rock Confederate Cemetery, Arkansas, and for other purposes", it is further requested that this draft of bill be amended, before its introduction, if practicable to do so: (a) By inserting immediately after the word "marines", appearing in line 16 of the War Department draft, the words "and all officers or men of the Coast Guard", and (b) by inserting immediately after the word "dying", appearing in line 17 of the War Department draft, the words "in a destitute condition."

The foregoing amendments are deemed advisable in order that the bill will conform to title 24, section 281, United States Code.

Sincerely yours,

GEO. H. DERN, Secretary of War.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection?

Mr. CLARK. I will be glad to withhold it.

Mr. KING. This bill is very important. It has been unanimously reported by the respective committees of the House and the Senate. It has the approval also of the District Commissioners and the Public Utilities Commission. They are very much in favor of it.

Mr. CLARK. I will ask the Senator to let the bill go over. I should like to have an opportunity to examine it. I regard the Washington Gas Light Co. as the most unconscionable monopoly that I know of in the utilities field in the United States. PENALTIES FOR RECKLESS DRIVING IN THE DISTRICT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3976) to amend the act approved February 27, 1931, known as the District of Columbia Traffic Act, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like an explanation of the bill. Mr. BORAH. I wish to inquire what this bill proposes with reference to the District of Columbia Traffic Act?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the bill now before the Senate deals only with the question of reckless driving. Under the present law the penalty for reckless driving is, as I recall, $100 and 30 days in jail. The Commissioners recommended

6 months' imprisonment and $500 fine. The committee, or some members of the committee, believed that was a little too extreme, and they amended it by providing for a $250 fine and 3 months' imprisonment for reckless driving.

Mr. BORAH. What is the fine now?

Mr. KING. It is $100.

Mr. BORAH. And I presume it is not inflicted once in a thousand times?

Mr. KING. Oh, yes; it is.

Mr. BORAH. I never heard of it being done.

Mr. KING. I may say that the District authorities are administering the present act very effectively, and every day, if the Senator will note the newspapers, he will see that many, many drivers' licenses are suspended.

Mr. BORAH. That may be true, but they assess a fine of $5, and sometimes even remit that.

Mr. KING. That is a matter for the judges, but this bill provides a greater penalty for an offense of which, I am sorry to say, some people are guilty.

Mr. ROBINSON. The bill, as I understand, authorizes both fine and imprisonment?

Mr. KING. Exactly, and increases the penalty. I should like to see it a little more severe.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand, it does not provide for both penalties, but either may be inflicted.

Mr. ROBINSON. Well, it may be both. The clause is in the usual form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported by the committee will be stated.

The amendments of the Committee on the District of Columbia were, on page 1, at the beginning of line 11, to strike out "$500" and insert "$250", and in the same line, after the word "than", to strike out the word "six" and insert the word "three", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (c) of section 9 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to amend the acts approved March 3, 1925, and July 3, 1926, known as the District of Columbia Traffic Acts, etc.", be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows: "(c) Any individual violating any provision of this section where the offense constitutes reckless driving shall upon conviction for the first offense be fined not more than $250 or imprisoned not more than 3 months, or both; and upon conviction for the second or any subsequent offense committed within 2 years from the date of any such previous offense such individual shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both."

The amendments were agreed to.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to negotiate for the purchase from the present owner or owners, and to enter into a contract for the purchase, if the price be satisfactory and within the limits hereby authorized, of all that tract or parcel of land shown on plat book of the District of Columbia as parcels 89/16, 89/17, 89/18, and 89/19, located adjacent to and on the south side of the existing reservation of the Walter Reed General Hospital, and extending from Sixteenth Street on the west through to Georgia Avenue on the east, and containing 22.78 acres, more or less, exclusive of all lands therein set apart for streets; and if said land be acquired, the said Walter Reed General Hospital, by the Secretary of War, is hereby authorized and empowered to use for hospital purposes all land indicated upon said plat book as reserved and set apart for streets within said tract of land, and all of said land when so acquired shall be for use in connection with the Walter Reed General Hospital.

Sec. 2. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated a sum not exceeding $204,162 to enable the Secretary of War to carry out the provisions of this act.

Sec. 3. If the Secretary of War be unable to negotiate a contract for the purchase of said tract of land from the present owner or owners thereof at a price that he shall deem to be fair and reasonable, and not exceeding the sum of $204,162, then and in such event the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to cause condemnation proceedings to be instituted in the name of the United States for the condemnation of said tract of land for the purposes herein stated, under the provisions of the act of Congress of May 18, 1933, being Public Law No. 17 of the Seventy-third Congress, and entitled "An act to improve the navigability and to provide for the flood control of the Tennessee River; to provide for reforestation and the proper use of marginal lands in the Tennessee Valley; to provide for the agricultural and industrial development of said valley; to provide for the national defense by the creation of a corporation for the operation of Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals, in the State of Alabama; and for other purposes." Section 25 of said act, with reference to the procedure in condemnation proceedings, is hereby made a part of this act by way of reference and for the purpose of prescribing the mode and manner of exercising the right of eminent domain for securing for the uses of the Government of the United States the land hereinbefore mentioned. The provisions of this section shall not be construed to be in substitution for but shall be supplemental to any method of acquiring land or interests therein provided in existing law.

Sec. 4. In the hearing upon said condemnation proceedings it shall be in order to introduce in evidence the tax assessments as to said real estate of the taxing authorities of the District of Columbia for the 10 years preceding the institution of such condemnation proceedings, and it shall be further in order to offer in evidence in the course of said condemnation proceedings testimony as to the prices for which parcels of real estate situate within 1,000 feet of any portion of the land hereby sought to be acquired for the uses of the United States Government, whether such sale was by private contract between the seller and buyer, or at any judicial sale, whether for the partition of real estate or for the satisfaction of any lien, or for the satisfaction of any execution based upon judgment, and any other facts logically and naturally indicating the fair and reasonable value of said parcel of real estate shall be competent to be introduced in evidence in such condemnation proceedings, irrespective and notwithstanding any existing rules of evidence heretofore prevailing in the United States courts in the District of Columbia or elsewhere.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I notice that the War Department opposes this measure. I am not familiar with it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the purpose of this bill is to authorize the Secretary of War to negotiate for the purchase of a tract of land of some 22 acres lying immediately south of the present Army Medical Center here in Washington, which includes Walter Reed Hospital. The War Department points out that this land is needed for additional facilities, primarily for quarters. Eighty-three officers of the 105 on duty at Walter Reed General Hospital now reside at varying distances therefrom, and at an annual commutation cost to the Government of about $100,000. The War Department calls attention to the fact that savings would eventually accrue to the Government by the enactment of this legislation, and that in addition it is considered necessary for the efficient functioning of the hospital that a greater number of the officer personnel on duty at the hospital should reside in closer proximity thereto.

The land for which provision is made in the bill is the only available land remaining for the expansion of Walter Reed General Hospital, expansion in any other direction being precluded by existing street and building developments. The bill authorizes an appropriation of not to exceed $204,162 to enable the Secretary of War to carry out the provisions of the measure. In view of the fact that the Bureau of the Budget points out this proposed legislation is not in accord with the President's financial program, the War Department does not recommend favorable action. However, in its report on the bill the needs for the additional land for Walter Reed are clearly set forth, and in view of these needs the Military Affairs Committee, after giving careful consideration to House bill 3629, has reported it favorably with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TIMBER RIGHTS ON GIGLING MILITARY RESERVATION, CALIF.

The bill (H. R. 10182) to authorize the Secretary of War to acquire the timber rights on the Gigling Military Reservation (now designated as Camp Ord), in California, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, all the rights and interests which were reserved by the former owners on conveyance to the United States of the land embraced in the military reservation known as the Gigling Military Reservation (now designated as Camp Ord), in Monterey County, Calif., relative to the cutting of timber thereon and the preparation and removal of forest products, and to terminate all easements, rights, and privileges insofar as they have application to timber operations for private benefit; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $25,000 to carry out the provisions of this act.

RELIEF OF STATE OF ALABAMA

The bill (H. R. 3369) for the relief of the State of Alabama, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of Alabama be, and is hereby, relieved from all responsibility and accountability for certain quartermaster and other property to the approximate value of $22,361.43, the property of the War Department in possession of the Alabama National Guard, which was lost, destroyed, or used for emergency relief work incident to the Elba (Ala.) flood of March 1929, and the tornadoes which occurred over large portions of said State in March 1932; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to terminate all further accountability for said property.

ARMY BASE TERMINAL, CHARLESTON, S. C.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3789) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to convey the Charleston Army base terminal to the city of Charleston, S. C., which had been reported to the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 1, after line 7, to strike out the words "leased by the United States Shipping Board to the Port Utilities Commission of Charleston, S. C., on December 3, 1930, with the exception of such portion of said land as has been transferred by the War Department by Executive order" and to insert in lieu thereof "transferred to the United States Shipping Board by Executive Order No. 3920 dated November 3, 1923, with the exception of such portion of said land as has been retransferred to the War Department by Executive order, or is now under consideration for retransfer, and also subject to all the rights and privileges now enjoyed by the War Department as specifically set forth in said Executive Order No. 3920, or as may hereafter be agreed upon by Secretary of War and the city of Charleston: Provided, however, That the charges for water and electric current furnished the War Department shall not exceed rates prevailing in the city of Charleston and vicinity for such services", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce is authorized and directed to convey by quitclaim deed to the city of Charleston, S. C., that portion of the Charleston Quartermaster Intermediate Depot, including improvements thereon, which was transferred to the United States Shipping Board by Executive Order No. 3920 dated November 3, 1923, with the exception of such portion of said land as has been retransferred to the War Department by Executive order, or is now under consideration for retransfer, and also subject to all the rights and privileges now enjoyed by the War Department as specifically set forth in said Executive Order No. 3920, or as may hereafter be agreed upon by Secretary of War and the city of Charleston: Provided, however, That the charges for water and electric current furnished the War Department shall not exceed rates prevailing in the city of Charleston and vicinity for such services.

SEC. 2. The deed executed by the Secretary of Commerce shall contain the express condition that in the event of a national emergency the property so conveyed, with all improvements placed thereon, may be taken upon order of the President by the United States for the use of the War Department during the period of such emergency.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IRRIGATION CHARGES ON INDIAN RESERVATION PROJECTS

The bill (S. 1318) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to adjust irrigation charges on projects on Indian reservations, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withhold his objection in order that I may make an explanation of the measure.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall withhold it to hear what the Senator has to say.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. This is a measure to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior to make an investigation into the question of irrigation charges to white settlers on certain Indian reclamation projects. As long ago as 1914 a law was enacted by Congress which made reimbursable to the Federal Government all expenditures that had been theretofore or might thereafter be made on Indian reclamation projects. The result has been that in numerous cases whites who purchased lands within certain projects were by that act of Congress made responsible for the repayment pro rata of expenditures which had previously been made.

In 1932 Congress enacted a law authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make investigation with respect to Indian-owned lands and to adjust the charges, so that the lands now owned by whites are in a different status from those owned by Indians. The bill merely authorizes the Secretary to make investigation and report to Congress. No modification of charges can be made without an act of Congress after the report is submitted.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I invite the Senator's attention to the report of Secretary Ickes, who said:

The foregoing facts, and the substitute draft of legislation, were submitted to the Bureau of the Budget on April 22 for consideration and appropriate recommendation. The Acting Director of that Bureau advised on May 28 that neither S. 1318, nor the proposed substitute therefor, would be in accord with the financial program of the President. His reasons are set forth at some length, as will be noted from the enclosed copy of his letter to me.

That is signed by Secretary Ickes. In the report of the Acting Director of the Budget, who is the present Budget Director, I find this statement:

In this view of the situation you are advised that neither the bill S. 1318, nor the proposed substitute therefor, would be in accord with the financial program of the President.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The committee has met that objection.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why did they overrule the objection?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The committee did not overrule the objection as a matter of fact, but met it by eliminating from the bill the provision which would have made the recommendations of the Secretary effective within 60 days after being reported to Congress unless rejected. That provision is no longer in the bill, so that nothing can be made effective without special act of Congress. Therefore the Bureau of the Budget and the Secretary of the Interior will have ample opportunity to raise objections if any financial problem should be involved.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator state in a word what is the purpose of the bill?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The purpose of the bill is to enable the Secretary of the Interior to make recommendations to Congress for the modification or cancellation of certain charges upon the old Indian projects where white settlers, having moved in and having purchased the land in good faith, are now being bound by expenditures which were made before they purchased the land.

Mr. McKELLAR. The effect of the bill would be to give the Secretary a power which he does not want to assume and does not think proper to assume, and he reports against the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Only because of the provision regarding the budgetary objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. KING. May I inquire whether the investigation contemplated by the act is limited only to the State of Wyoming or will it embrace investigations in other States where white settlers have obtained Indian lands and many of whom now are unable to get water, though water was promised by the Government when they purchased the land.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It will apply to all Indian reclamation projects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1318) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to adjust irrigation charges on projects on Indian reservations, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to cause an investigation to be made to determine whether the owners of non-Indian lands under Indian irrigation projects and under projects where the United States has purchased water rights for Indians are unable to pay irrigation charges, including construction, maintenance, and operating charges, because of inability to operate such lands profitably by reason of lack of fertility of the soil, inadequacy of water supply, defects of irrigation works, or for any other causes. Where the Secretary finds that said landowners are unable to make payment due to the existence of such causes, he may adjust, defer, or cancel such charges, in whole or in part, as the facts and conditions warrant. In adjusting or deferring any such charges the Secretary may enter into contracts with said landowners for the payment of past due charges, but such contracts shall not extend the payment of such charges over a period in excess of 10 years.

SEC. 2. Where the Secretary finds that any such lands cannot be cultivated profitably due to a present lack of water supply, proper drainage facilities, or need of additional construction work, he shall declare such lands temporarily nonirrigable for periods not to exceed 5 years and no charges shall be assessed against such lands during such periods.

SEC. 3. Where the Secretary finds that any such lands are permanently nonirrigable he may, with the consent of the landowner, eliminate such lands from the project.

SEC. 4. Where irrigation assessments against any such lands remained unpaid at the time the Indian title to such lands became extinguished and no lien existed and attached to such lands for the payment of charges so assessed and no contract for the payment of such charges was entered into, the Secretary shall cancel all such charges.

SEC. 5. The Secretary shall have power to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 6. The Secretary shall make reports to the Congress on the first Monday of each regular session, and from time to time thereafter, showing the action taken under the provisions of this act during the preceding year. No proceedings under this act shall become effective until approved by the Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and adjust irrigation charges on irrigation lands within projects on Indian reservations, and for other purposes."

MANNER OF INFLECTING THE PUNISHMENT OF DEATH

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3836) to amend the Criminal Code with respect to the manner of inflicting the punishment of death, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 323 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States", approved March 4, 1909, is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 323. The manner of inflicting the punishment of death shall be the same as that provided by the law of the State, Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia, in which the judgment of death is rendered, but if the laws of any such State, Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia do not provide for the penalty of death or for the manner of inflicting the punishment of death, then the manner of inflicting such punishment shall be by hanging. Such punishment may be inflicted at any place within the State, Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia in which the judgment of death is rendered."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think the Senator in charge of the bill should explain it.

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, the present law where the penalty is death provides as follows:

The manner of inflicting the penalty of death shall be by hanging.

The bill would amend that provision of the statute so as to make the punishment accord to the State practice. In those States whose law provides for electrocution, the death penalty would be inflicted by electrocution. Arizona uses lethal gas to inflict the death penalty. Other States have different means of inflicting the death penalty. This measure would make the punishment accord to the State practice.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VAN NUYS. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. There is so much disturbance in the Chamber I cannot understand the explanation which the Senator is making.

Mr. VAN NUYS. The only purpose of the bill is, where the death penalty is inflicted under the Federal statute, to provide that the penalty shall be inflicted in the manner provided by the laws of the different States. In Indiana it would be by electrocution. In Arizona it would be by lethal gas. Other States have different means of inflicting capital punishment.

The Federal law is arbitrary as it stands today and death must be by hanging. For instance, in the United States District Court of Indiana recently there was convicted a man who under the present law had to be hanged. The United States marshal had to search several States to procure a gallows to inflict the punishment according to the Federal statute as it now reads. Under the amendment proposed by this bill that man could have been electrocuted in the State penitentiary in the form provided by the State statute.

Mr. BORAH. It simply provides that the Federal Government in the matter of execution shall conform to the practice in the States?

Mr. VAN NUYS. That is all there is to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL JURISDICTION UNDER THE BANKRUPTCY ACT

The bill (H. R. 10490) to amend chapter 9 of the act of July 1, 1898, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 79 of chapter 9 of the act of July 1, 1898, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 79. Additional jurisdiction: Until January 1, 1940, in addition to the jurisdiction exercised in voluntary and involuntary proceedings to adjudge persons bankrupt, courts of bankruptcy shall exercise original jurisdiction in proceedings for the relief of debtors, as provided in this chapter of this act."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I say with reference to the bill just passed that it merely extends the time in which debtors may be adjudged bankrupts.

OPERATION OF FOREIGN AND AMERICAN SHIPS IN THE FOREIGN TRADE

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 260) requesting certain information concerning the operation of foreign ships and of American ships engaged in foreign trade.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, there are on the desk some amendments which have been considered and reported by the Commerce Committee. I ask that they may be now considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendments.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 3, after "of", insert "all"; on page 1, line 3, after "the", strike out "most important"; on page 2, line 13, after "of", strike out "the six" and insert "each of the"; on page 2, line 13, after "operating", strike out "the largest"; on page 2, line 14, after "for", insert "each of"; on page 2, line 14, after "1926" strike out all down to and including "and" in line 15 and insert "to"; on page 2, line 15, after "1935", insert a comma and the following: "inclusive"; and, on page 2, line 19, after "contracts", strike out all down to and including "mail" in line 22, so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce is requested to furnish to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the following information: (1) A list of all the acts of Congress governing the operation of American ships in foreign trade; (2) a brief summary of the handicaps which confront American-flag ships when competing with ships of a foreign flag; (3) show how these handicaps result in higher operating costs to the American shipowner; (4) whether it is the general practice of American shipowners to purchase fuel and supplies in this country or abroad, and the approximate annual amount of such purchases for all foreign-trade ships of the American merchant marine; (5) whether it is the general practice of foreign shipowners to purchase fuel and supplies in this country or abroad, and the approximate annual amount of such purchases for all foreign-flag ships trading with the United States and its possessions; (6) the estimated percentage of the relative operating costs of ships flying the flags of Great Britain, Germany, France, Italy, and Japan on the basis of 100 percent for ships flying the flag of the United States; (7) the percentage of American trans-Atlantic cargo carried by American-flag ships and the percentage carried by foreign-flag ships; (8) the percentage of American trans-Pacific cargo carried by American-flag ships and the percentage carried by foreign-flag ships; (9) the profit or loss of American lines operating American-flag tonnage for each of the years 1926 to 1935, inclusive; (10) the operating expenses of the same lines for the same years and their gross incomes for such years; (11) how many of such lines held mail contracts, either on a poundage or per-mile basis, and the aggregate amount of money paid to them under such contracts.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I have a number of amendments which I desire to offer to the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments offered by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 10, after the word "ships", it is proposed to insert "during each year from 1918 to 1935, inclusive."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 12, it is proposed to make the same amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 12, it is proposed to strike out the words "the profit or" and all of lines 13 and 14, and in line 15 to strike out "1934, and 1935" and to insert in lieu thereof:

The profit or loss of all American lines now holding foreign ocean mail contracts for each of the years from 1926 to 1935, inclusive, showing in each instance the percentage that such profits or losses bears to the capital stock of the company reported upon, and showing in each instance all commissions and compensation of any nature paid by such lines to all affiliated, associated, subsidiary, or holding companies of such lines.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, before action is taken upon that amendment, I wish to ask the Senator from Alabama a question. The amendment has not been printed, has it?

Mr. BLACK. It has not.

Mr. McNARY. This is the first exposition we have had of the amendment, and there has been no discussion of it. A number of absent Senators are interested in this matter.

Mr. BLACK. No; there has been no discussion of it. I may state to the Senator that I did explain to the Senator from Maryland the type of amendment I desired to offer. This is a resolution calling for information only.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate that fact; but, in view of the absence of some Members on this side of the Chamber, I ask that the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

Mr. COPELAND. Would it not be well to have the amendments printed so that they will be available?

Mr. McNARY. Of course, my request would include the printing of the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be printed and lie on the table.

ENFORCEMENT OF TWENTY-FIRST AMENDMENT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8368) to enforce the twenty-first amendment, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, in section 11, page 7, line 12, after the word "act", to insert "and nothing in this act shall apply to the Canal Zone", so as to make the section read:

Sec. 11. Nothing contained in this act shall repeal any other provisions of existing laws except such provisions of such laws as are directly in conflict with this act and nothing in this act shall apply to the Canal Zone.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah explain this bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a number of amendments have been submitted in part to meet typographical errors and because of the necessity of renumbering the paragraphs and sections. There is one amendment which strikes out a provision which is found in another bill which has passed the House and will be reported by the Finance Committee within a few days. The primary purpose of the bill is to protect the dry States against the transportation of liquor into the same.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have not had an opportunity to read the bill. What do I understand the Senator to say to be the object of the bill?

Mr. KING. It is to protect the dry States.

Mr. BORAH. In what way?

Mr. KING. In matters arising under the twenty-first amendment; that is, following the repeal of the eighteenth amendment and the adoption of the twenty-first amendment, it became necessary to provide by Federal law for the protection of the so-called dry States.

Mr. BORAH. I understand; but how is it proposed to protect the dry States?

Mr. KING. So that liquor may not be transported into dry States, or, if so, then, with respect to its movement or use, it shall be subject to the laws of such States.

Mr. BORAH. Does the bill undertake to deal with the matter of transporting liquor into the States?

Mr. KING. As I understand the bill, it forbids it.

Mr. BORAH. It forbids the shipment of liquor into dry States?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. And provides a penalty for such shipment?

Mr. KING. Yes; that is my understanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, inadvertently, when the Senate considered House bill 8368, there were a number of amendments not disposed of. I now enter a motion to reconsider the votes whereby the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed; and when the Senate again meets, I shall ask to have the bill again considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Utah will be entered.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 4197) relating to the admissibility in evidence of certain writings and records made in the regular course of business was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in that bill there is a word which I think I should like to explore further before I ask the Senate to consider the bill. I ask to have the bill go over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

TERMS OF DISTRICT COURT, MIDDLE DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

The bill (H. R. 11098) to provide for terms of the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania to be held at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I should like to take a moment on the next bill.

My able friend from New York, the senior Senator from that State, has objected to this bill. With reluctance and regret, my conception of my duty will require me to move to proceed to the consideration of the bill as soon as the call of the calendar shall have been completed. Not as a threat, not in any bad humor, but, carrying out what I believe to be my duty, I now respectfully give notice that just as soon as the call of the calendar shall have been completed I will move to proceed to the consideration of this bill, for reasons which I shall then give.

I ask to have the notice entered that I shall make the motion and crave the recognition of the Chair when the calendar shall have been completed.

STATUE OF ALBERT GALLATIN

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 215) authorizing the selection of a site and the erection of a pedestal for the Albert Gallatin statue in Washington, D. C., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That authority is hereby granted to any association organized within 2 years from date of the approval of this resolution for that purpose to erect a statue of Albert Gallatin, Secretary of the Treasury, from May 14, 1801, to February 9, 1814, opposite the west entrance to the Treasury Building in the city of Washington within the grounds occupied by such building, or at such other place within such grounds as may be designated by the Fine Arts Commission, subject to the approval of the Joint Committee on the Library, the model of the statue so to be erected and the pedestal thereof to be first approved by the said Commission and by the Joint Committee on the Library, the same to be presented by such association to the people of the United States.

Sec. 2. That for the preparation of the site and the erection of a pedestal upon which to place the said statue, under the direction of the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital, the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

CONSTRUCTION OF BASIN FOR TESTING MODELS OF NAVAL CRAFT

The bill (H. R. 10135) to authorize the construction of a model basin establishment, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, what is the proposed model basin?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this is a bill which has already been passed by the House. The naval appropriation bill contains an appropriation of the amount mentioned in the bill, which authorizes the appropriation of $3,500,000.

I can best explain what the naval experimental model basin is by reading some of the testimony presented to the Naval Affairs Committee by Admiral Land.

Mr. BORAH. I will not ask the Senator to do that; but I do not understand the object of the basin. Is it a bathing basin?

Mr. WALSH. No, sir. Before ships are built, models of them are made, and tests are made of the speed and strength of the models; tests are made of the material of the different parts of the mechanism, and so forth; and that is true also of airplanes. There is now in every country such a basin. We now have one at the Washington Navy Yard, but it is obsolete and is unable to perform the functions that are required. Great Britain has two such model basins; Germany has one; Japan is planning one; nearly every maritime country in the world has one. The one at the Washington Navy Yard is obsolete and inadequate and too small for the purposes required.

Mr. BORAH. This basin is necessary as a part of the Naval Establishment; is it?

Mr. WALSH. In order correctly to build a ship, it is necessary to have a basin of this kind, not only for the Navy but for our merchant marine. Private shipping interests hire the use of this basin for the purpose of testing out their models; and it is expected that one-half the expense will be borne by income received from American shipping interests which now have to go to foreign countries to have this work done.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I notice in the bill it is provided, in line 11, page 1—

Including aircraft and the investigation of other problems of ship design, at a cost not to exceed $3,500,000.

Is the Government to expend $3,500,000 for this purpose?

Mr. WALSH. This bill merely authorizes the appropriation. The naval appropriation bill, which is before the House and is about to reach the Senate, will have in it an item for this purpose; and at that time the Senator will be able to question the appropriation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it not a fact that without a basin of this kind not only war craft but all merchant marine ships cannot be tested as to displacement, safety devices, speed, oil carriage, how they heel in rough water, the angle of pitch, and many other things that are necessary to be determined in the design of a ship? Models of all the ships that are being built in this country are tested in foreign countries except those that will fit in the present antiquated basin in Washington; and unless this proposed basin shall be built it will be necessary to prepare large models of ships that are to be constructed, send them abroad, have them tested in foreign model basins, and pay the fee over there. While every other maritime country in the world has one of these model-testing basins, we have none that will now fit the needs.

Mr. WALSH. It is a matter of great humiliation that we have no such basin.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator will withhold his question for a moment, I desire to read what Admiral Land says:

The naval experimental model basin is one of the most vital projects that face the country as a whole. That is evident, because it has not only to do with ships or shipping but also has to do with aviation.

The model basin which we now have is in the Washington Navy Yard and was designed in 1895. It is quite obsolete in its size and in everything pertaining thereto. Its poor foundations—

By the way, it is necessary to have a rock foundation. That is why it is contemplated to build this new basin away out in the District of Columbia, up the Potomac River, where a suitable rock foundation may be had.

Its poor foundations make it extremely difficult to obtain better designs by the designing Bureau of the Navy Department. They cannot expand because of the lack of space. It is in a congested area and is quite unsatisfactory.

Other maritime countries of the world have produced, or have built, far more efficient model basins in the last few years, the data of which is available in this House Pamphlet No. 484. Those countries are: Two in England, 3 in Germany, 1 in Austria, 2 in Italy, 1 in France, and a projected one in Japan.

I hope the Senator will not object to the consideration of the bill, because I really think this model basin is a basic necessity for the building of proper naval sea and aircraft.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am unwilling now to vote for an authorization of $3,500,000 for building such a basin. That is what it amounts to. Let the bill go over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah objects. The clerk will state the next bill on the calendar.

LAND FOR NAVAL AIR STATION, CALIFORNIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4020) to authorize the acquisition of lands in the city of Alameda, county of Alameda, State of California, as a site for a naval air station and to authorize the construction and installation of a naval air station thereon, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase in behalf of the United States as a site for a naval air station, at a cost not to exceed $1, and to accept the title in fee simple to all that certain piece or parcel of land situate, lying and being south of the Alameda Mole, in the city of Alameda, county of Alameda, State of California, and more particularly described as follows: Commencing at a point on the United States bulkhead line, said point being distant due south thereon 202.1 feet from point "K" as said line and point are delineated and so designated upon that certain map entitled "Harbor

Line Survey, San Francisco Bay, 1910, Sheet No. 6", on file in the United States engineer's office, Customs House, San Francisco; and running thence north 73°58' west 409.95 feet to a point, said line being parallel with and distant southerly 122.7 feet measured at right angles from center line of the South Pacific Coast Railway Co.'s right-of-way; thence north 83°28' west 342 feet to a point; thence north 76°5' west 500 feet to a point; thence north 81°15' west 680 feet to a point; thence north 89°50' west 1,687.88 feet to a point on the United States Pierhead Line; thence south 47°50'53" west 482.14 feet to a point, which point is the intersection of the United States pierhead line with the southwesterly line of the city of Alameda (also easterly line of the city and county of San Francisco); thence south 27°50' east 11,529 feet along the southwesterly boundary line of the city of Alameda to a point, which point is the intersection with the westerly line of Benton Field; thence north 16°2' east 9,344.13 feet to a point; thence north 73°58' west 4,190.05 feet to the point of beginning, containing 929.337 acres, more or less, free from all encumbrances, except a certain lease entered into by and between the city of Alameda and the Alameda Airports, Inc., a subsidiary of the Curtiss-Wright Corporation. Title to the above-referred-to property is accepted by the United States upon the understanding that at least $1,000,000 will be expended by the Government of the United States in development work by December 31, 1939, otherwise title to said lands will revert to the city of Alameda.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Navy is further authorized to construct, install, and equip at said naval air station such buildings and utilities, technical buildings and utilities, landing field and mats, and all utilities and appurtenances necessary for the operation, maintenance, and repair of landplanes and seaplanes, including ammunition storage, fuel and oil storage, and distribution systems therefor, roads, walks, aprons, seaplane ramps, docks, runways, sewer, water, power, station and aerodrome lighting, telephone and signal communications, and other essentials, including the necessary bulkheading, dredging, grading, and filling and the removal and remodeling of existing structures and installations.

SEC. 3. There is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the following sums: (a) Not to exceed $296,000 for the purpose of acquiring the Curtiss-Wright Corporation leasehold interest and all improvements of every kind and nature on said tract of land; (b) $4,000 to be paid to the city of Alameda, Calif., to reimburse said city for the expenses of a special election held for the purpose of authorizing the city council of the city of Alameda to convey to the United States the above-described parcel of land for the above-specified purpose, and for incidental expenditures in connection with such conveyance; and (c) $1,000,000 to be used for any of the purposes as set forth in section 2 of this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of this bill. I notice that it requires the expenditure of at least a million dollars in the development of work by December 31, 1939.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator is in error in saying that it requires that expenditure. The grant is made upon the condition that by the time referred to a certain amount of work will have been done on this particular project.

Mr. KING. It is provided:

Title to the above-referred-to property is accepted by the United States upon the understanding that at least $1,000,000 will be expended by the Government of the United States in development work by December 31, 1939.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is something over 900 acres of land, and a portion of 95 acres in use as an airport. In addition to that there are eight-hundred-and-some-odd acres of tide lands. The city has held a referendum on the grant of the site to the Navy Department, and upon the terms stated on the referendum voted overwhelmingly to convey it. Of course it wants to make this grant, and to be certain that if it is accepted—and the acceptance is wholly discretionary—the work will be done. So it is made a condition precedent that by 1939 a million dollars shall have been expended upon this particular project, which the Navy Department and everybody connected with the national defense says is an absolutely necessary work. Between Puget Sound and San Diego there is not a single naval airport, and that one is essential on San Francisco Bay, or in its vicinity, nobody questions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PERSONNEL OF REGIONAL OFFICES OF HOME LOAN BANK BOARD

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily in order that I may bring before the Senate a resolution. I think there will be no objection to the consideration of the resolution.

A day or two ago I submitted Senate Resolution 268, asking for certain information from the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. I ask unanimous consent to have the unfinished business temporarily laid aside in order that the resolution may be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to laying aside the unfinished business temporarily? The Chair hears none. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 268) calling on the Federal Home Loan Bank Board for certain information concerning regional offices and employees.

Mr. McKELLAR. I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 1, after the word "Board", it is proposed to insert "and Home Owners' Loan Corporation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Whereas the question of regional offices established by the Federal home-loan bank, in addition to State offices, is a question to be dealt with by the Congress; and

Whereas it is desired by the Senate to have information concerning such regional offices for the purpose of proposed legislation: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and Home Owners' Loan Corporation furnish to the Senate, at the earliest practicable moment, the number and location of regional offices, the number of persons employed in each, the names of the various officials and employees of such offices, the legal residence of each such official and employee at the date of their first employment by the Corporation, the date of such first employment, the salary of each such official and employee, the general duties of such regional offices, and for what reasons, if any, regional offices were established in States where there are State offices or district offices; and the total monthly pay-roll expense, for the last available month, of State and regional offices in each State in which such regional offices are located; also the total pay-roll expense of the home office in Washington, by months, from January 1, 1935, to January 31, 1936, inclusive.

The preamble was agreed to.

NORTHERN MONTANA AGRICULTURAL AND MANUAL TRAINING SCHOOL

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to revert to Senate bill 1871, Calendar No. 1755, granting certain public lands to the State of Montana for the use and benefit of the Northern Montana Agricultural and Manual Training School. The bill was introduced by my colleague the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER].

The purpose of the bill is to provide a grant of lands to the Northern Montana Agricultural and Manual Training School. An amendment was presented in the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys which provides—

That the withdrawal of lands for purposes of classification or the inclusion of lands within a grazing district, as provided by the act approved June 28, 1934, shall not be considered to be a reservation for the purposes of this act.

The purpose of the bill is to overcome the fact that all of these lands had been temporarily withdrawn in connection with the passage of the Grazing Act. All the other colleges in the State of Montana have had grants of this character. This is the only college in the State that is without such a grant. The land is all practically worthless; all of the good lands have already been granted. I do not understand why there should be any objection to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 1755, being Senate bill 1871.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Montana to explain why the Department of the Interior is opposed to the bill.

Mr. MURRAY. I do not understand that the Department of the Interior is opposed to it. Here is the statement made:

It has not been the policy of this Department to recommend further grants of lands to the States for specific purposes, except in the case of some special and urgent reason for such a grant.

The urgent reason is that this is the only college in the State that has not had a similar grant. The land, as I have said, is practically worthless, and it is doing the Federal Government a favor to allow it to turn the land over to the State.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is what the Senator has read the extent of the Department's opinion?

Mr. MURRAY. That is the important part of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1871) granting certain public lands to the State of Montana for the use and benefit of the Northern Montana Agricultural and Manual Training School, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, after the word "School", to insert: "Provided, That the withdrawal of lands for purposes of classification or the inclusion of lands within a grazing district, as provided by the act approved June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269), shall not be considered to be a reservation for the purposes of this act", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there are hereby granted and confirmed to the State of Montana 500,000 acres of surveyed, nonmineral, unappropriated, and unreserved public lands of the United States in the State of Montana for the use and benefit of the Northern Montana Agricultural and Manual Training School: Provided, That the withdrawal of lands for purposes of classification or the inclusion of lands within a grazing district, as provided by the act approved June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269), shall not be considered to be a reservation for the purposes of this act.

Sec. 2. Such lands shall be in addition to the land granted to the State of Montana under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the division of Dakota into two States and to enable the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington to form constitutions and State governments and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to make donations of public lands to such States", approved February 22, 1889, as amended, and the grant of such lands shall be subject to the same terms and conditions as are imposed upon the grants made by such act of February 22, 1889, as amended, so far as is consistent with the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TERMS OF DISTRICT COURT, MIDDLE DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, pursuant to the notice I gave while the calendar was being called, with the distinct understanding that my motion, if agreed to, will not do more than temporarily suspend or displace the unfinished business, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business No. 1795, being the bill (H. R. 11098) to provide for terms of the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania to be held at Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I invite the attention of the Senator from Arizona to the fact that, if his motion should prevail it would have the parliamentary effect of displacing the unfinished business, which I am sure the Senator does not want to do.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McNARY. If the Senator desires to have his proposal considered, it would be necessary first to ask unanimous consent temporarily to lay aside the unfinished business and proceed to the consideration of the bill in which he is interested. I doubt if the Senator could obtain such consent in view of the attitude earlier in the day of the distinguished Senator from New York. From that predicament, I do not know how the Senator is going to extricate himself.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to consider House bill 11098 as a special order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Arizona that even the motion as he now puts it, to proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him as a special order, would have the effect of displacing the unfinished business.

Mr. ASHURST. Then, with the distinct understanding that it will not displace the unfinished business for longer than this day, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that he is unable to put the motion, except as a request for unanimous consent, with the proviso attached to it by the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not believe that I can procure unanimous consent. That is my judgment.

Mr. President, I will state the reason why I make the motion. Law and order broke down in Los Angeles, Calif. Law and order have now to some extent been restored in Los Angeles. Law and order have broken down in New York City. There are eight judges in the southern district of that State. Each judge last year tried and disposed of an average of 772 cases. The docket is 22 months in arrears in the trial of actions at law; 23 months in arrears in the trial of suits in equity; and 27 months in arrears in the trial of admiralty suits. The intervals are computed not from the date of filing the suits but from the date of joining the issue.

The judicial conference recommended two additional district judges for the southern district of New York.

The Judiciary Committee last year agreed to the bill, and the bill was passed by the Senate. A bill has now come from the House to provide for the terms of the district court in the middle district of Pennsylvania. The Judiciary Committee authorized its chairman to move as an amendment to that bill the bill which passed the Senate last August. If the United States Senate believes that a condition which denies justice, for justice long delayed is justice denied, should be allowed to continue because, forsooth, one of the most powerful political organizations of America is opposed to the creation of any more judges, peace be with you.

I now insist on my motion—and I shall later ask for unanimous consent, if I am so driven—that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House bill. Let the roll be called and let us see who stands for law and order and who stands for a political organization which says, "You shall have no law and order." Mr. President, have I spoken plainly? If not, I can use more direct English, if necessary. [Laughter.]

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. ASHURST. I always yield to my able friend the Senator from New York. He has been frank; that virtue has characterized him always; he has never deceived me, and in his long career I do not think he has ever deceived any man. He is opposing this bill. I yield to him my tribute of respect, because he is opposing it on grounds that seem to him sufficient. I simply do not agree with him, and I wish the Senate to meet this test without avoidance, without shirking. The man who meets a test squarely is secure from my prejudice; the man who dodges a test has no respect anywhere. Now I ask that my motion be put, unless the Senator from New York desires to interrupt me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arizona that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11098.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I thought the Senator said it was not his purpose to displace the unfinished business.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not intend to do so. I now call as a witness the Senator in charge of the unfinished business to confirm my statement that the unfinished business will not be considered until next Monday. It is well known that I do not intend to displace the unfinished business. I should prefer to have the measure providing the two additional for

New York defeated rather than that the unfinished business should be delayed for 1 hour. But let not this mere fiction of displacing the unfinished business deny justice to millions of people. Let no mere fiction as to displacing the unfinished business, when everybody knows it will not be considered until Monday, be the screen behind which the Senate will stand to avoid a test on what is a hot question. [Laughter.]

Mr. McNARY obtained the floor.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] has been recognized.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. McNARY. I simply wish to inquire whether the Senator from Arizona persists in his motion to displace the unfinished business?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, Mr. President; with all due respect, all I want is a test. I want a vote, and if it is required of me I shall move to substitute as the unfinished business the bill I have indicated, and then I will move to replace the unfinished business just as soon as this day's work shall have been ended.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The motion of the Senator from Arizona, as I see it, will not bring a test such as he has outlined to those who are opposed to law and order, and one thing and another. The unfinished business is a bill which the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has reported pertaining to public stock markets in the United States. As between that bill and the bill the Senator wants considered, it may be that many Senators favor them both.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Senate cannot consider them both at once; and under our parliamentary rules, if the Senator's motion should prevail, then the unfinished business, the other bill, would be out in the air. It could be taken up again, of course, but it would have to go through a certain formality.

Mr. ASHURST. As usual, the Senator from Nebraska is correct. While I doubt the propriety of such a procedure, I will ask the senior Senator from Kansas, who is in charge of the unfinished business, if he intends to have the unfinished business considered until Monday, if the Senator from Kansas will be so courteous as to reply to that question?

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, two or three Senators are absent from the city at this time who have asked that the unfinished business be not brought to a vote until Monday. There is no objection, of course, to a discussion of the unfinished business.

Mr. ASHURST. But the Senator has no intention to have the unfinished business seriously considered until Monday?

Mr. CAPPER. I can promise not to ask that, so far as I have anything to do with it.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator's promise is as good as his bond. His promise to his colleague is that the bill will not be considered until Monday. So another fiction has fallen and been shattered. Let us not try now to say that the unfinished business is going to be interrupted by the consideration of the bill to which I have referred. I am opposed to the unfinished business; I shall not vote for it; but I shall move, as soon as the New York judgeship bill shall have been disposed of, to resume the consideration of the unfinished business. I give a pledge that, while I am very much opposed to the unfinished business, I shall not use 3 minutes in arguing against it. Now, I call for a vote on my motion to proceed to the consideration of House bill 11098.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona, who is very well informed regarding Federal judges, whether there is now a vacancy on the bench in New York City?

Mr. ASHURST. Does the Senator mean the district bench?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. Really I do not know. There are eight judges in the southern district of New York, and those eight judges in the last calendar year each tried and disposed of 772 cases. As to a vacancy, I do not know.

Mr. COPELAND. Let us test the matter. The Senator does not know whether there is or is not a vacancy.

Mr. ASHURST. A vacancy to be filled?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. Frankly, I do not know.

Mr. COPELAND. There is a vacancy which has been there a long time. It is a great pity that law and justice have broken down in New York, when the situation could be saved if we had judges. Why has not the vacancy been filled? Why not fill the vacancy?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is too able to fail to know that we have no appointing power and that judges are appointed upon the recommendations of Senators. Have the Senators from New York made the recommendation?

Mr. COPELAND. Upon the recommendation of a Senator?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; the judges are appointed upon the recommendation of Senators.

Mr. COPELAND. Why, Mr. President!

Mr. ASHURST. My able friend is not going to set up a screen and say these judges are appointed without our recommendation. We know they are appointed upon the recommendation of Senators. Has the Senator made his recommendation for the filling of the vacancy?

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator mean that individual Senators make recommendations?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I cannot accuse the Senator of being disingenuous. He is too frank, too manly, and too lovable a man, but he would be disingenuous, which is the last quality he wishes to assume, to pretend that Senators do not make recommendations as to the appointment of Federal judges. A great deal of the trouble arises because our recommendations are not respected by the executive arm of the Government.

If I were the President, I would appoint judges upon the recommendation of the Senators from New York. I have read—and not one Senator has read more often than I—the life of Roscoe Conkling and the life of David B. Hill. I am familiar with the works of Elihu Root, James A. O'Gorman, and James W. Wadsworth. But the Empire State of New York, with those learned men in the United States Senate, was never better represented than she is now when ROYAL COPELAND and "BOB" WAGNER sit in the Senate.

I regret that the performance of my duty requires me even for a moment to embarrass them, but if they are embarrassed because the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary proceeds with his duty, I am not to blame. Let us not be embarrassed too much in this life. The able Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] one morning about a year ago said something that I have remembered, and I shall never forget. He said, "Do not try to come to the Senate unless you are a fighter. If you are not a fighter, do not attempt to come to the United States Senate."

I am only making this fight because I am profoundly convinced of the propriety of that which the judiciary of New York three times has requested, to wit, the appointment of additional judges. The Senate of the United States last August considered and passed a bill providing for their appointment. Now the necessity is equally as great. I do not retreat because of any objection that may come from very capable men politically.

Senators, I am proud of the Senate. Do not forget when you enter the door to this Chamber that you have walked into the greatest body in the world. Here we can talk all the time or at any time upon any subject we please without individual hesitation, and sometimes we talk without reflection. It is the greatest office to which an American may aspire. We may talk about the executive and judicial branches of the Government. These seats, Senators, are the seats of learning. This is the forum where liberty is perpetuated. This is the place where justice is done.

We criticize the courts, and I have been a critic in my time. Let us be certain first before we become too vociferous in our criticism of courts and Presidents, that we are doing our own duty. To refuse and fail to pass this bill granting needed aid to the judicial arm of the Government would be a failure on the part of the Senate to do its duty.

I may not be parliamentarily correct. When I have had to enlist myself against trained parliamentarians possibly I have erred, but I am not going to believe that a mere parliamentary technicality will keep the Senate from doing what it knows ought to be done. I ask for a vote upon my motion.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am delighted to have been interrupted by the Senator from Arizona. I am always happy to hear him. However, I return to my question. There has been a vacancy in the southern district of New York for about a year. If law and justice are breaking down in New York—and I had not known that it had until today; indeed, I thought we were really quite orderly.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further right at that point?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Before this debate proceeds further, duty and courtesy require me to say that I followed the lead of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. They were the ones who, among all the Senators, first saw that law and order were breaking down. They were the ones who introduced the bills called the anticrime bills.

It was the magnificent leadership of the Senator from New York and his speeches, not only in this forum but in others, in which he reiterated that law and order were breaking down in our country, which convinced me. Because of his leadership we have today anticrime statutes which the Government is using in pursuing and convicting and imprisoning wild and reckless men who pay no attention to public laws. If I have said that law and order were breaking down in various parts of our country, I have but followed the lead and cribbed the speeches of the splendid Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, have I still the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York still has the floor.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it is true the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and I have called attention of the country repeatedly, together with our colleague, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY]—

Mr. ASHURST. I hope I may be indulged another interruption to say that I beg the pardon of the Senator from Iowa. He should have been included as a member of the illustrious trio which led the fight for law and order. It was not the chairman of the Judiciary Committee who led that fight. I was but a wayworn and heavy-paced traveler. I wish to include in that worthy trio the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY].

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, when we made our speeches around the country we were not talking about the Federal courts. Law and order have broken down in certain sections. There are large communities in the country under the domination of the underworld. In those communities law and order have broken down, but not so far as the Federal Government is concerned. No man who knows the facts would say that there has been any failure on the part of the Federal Government to do its duty. If we were talking today about police courts or magistrate courts, courts having to do immediately with the underworld, I would say of almost every community in America that law and order have disappeared. No matter how carefully the police may make the fight, no matter how well the facts may be presented, the failure of magistrates and judges in the lower courts is preventing the proper administration of law and order in the United States of America.

There is no trouble with the Federal courts. One reason why, in the work of our crime committee, we sought to transfer larger powers to the Federal courts was that the underworld fears the Federal courts. Those in the underworld do not want Uncle Sam to pursue them. They do not want to be in the clutches of the Federal Government.

So, when the Senator from Arizona said that law and order had broken down in New York or Chicago or any other community of the country because of the failure of Federal judges to do their duty, he demonstrated that he is not well informed.

Mr. President, as regards New York, there has been a vacancy there which might have been filled by appointment at any time from the time we were in session last summer up to this moment. If law and order suffer in New York, why has not that vacancy been filled? We have been hearing about fictions this morning—legal fictions, social fictions, legislative fictions. There is no break-down in law and order so far as the Federal courts are concerned in the southern district of New York.

Mr. President, the Senator has spoken about something else. He has spoken about the recommendations of Senators being conclusive or influential.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. WALSH. Would the Senator be willing to tell the Senate why the vacancy has not been filled for a period of over a year?

Mr. COPELAND. I think perhaps I should say that we have just enough candidates so that we ought to have three places, and to make one appointment would break the balance.

Mr. WALSH. So the Senator implies that the purpose of this proposed legislation is to make jobs for three persons?

Mr. COPELAND. It is to make enough in the group so that all of them may be taken care of.

Mr. WALSH. That is a rather serious charge.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. How many new judges are provided for in this bill?

Mr. COPELAND. Two in this bill, and we have one vacancy.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator mean to say that it is necessary to take care of only two men?

Mr. COPELAND. No; three men.

Mr. NORRIS. Cannot more candidates than that be found in New York?

Mr. COPELAND. We have to take care of three men.

Mr. NORRIS. Will three positions be enough?

Mr. COPELAND. No; three are not enough to take care of all those who want the jobs.

Mr. NORRIS. Then provision for more ought to be put in the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. COPELAND. But if we could have three jobs, we would just about balance things, so that everything would be all right.

Mr. President, there is no man in the Senate who is less interested in politics, pure and simple, than am I; but we have had long and many discussions here about the Federal judges. I opposed the increase of Federal judges in the southern district of New York back in the time when former Senator WADSWORTH was my colleague, and figures were brought here to indicate that there was no necessity for any more. I was prevailed upon by somebody—I have no idea now who it was—to introduce the bill which passed last year providing for two additional judges. But since discovering that through a year's time those in authority have not seen fit to fill the vacancy and do away with 33½ percent of the break-down of law and order, I have become weakened in my belief that we need any more judges.

Mr. President, this is a matter of very little concern to me personally. I am not a member of the legal profession.

I have no occasion to consult Federal judges. So far, I have been able to keep out of their grasp; but so far as I can see there is no pressing need at the moment for the expenditure of $20,000 a year, beginning now and going on forever, for two additional judges at $10,000 each.

If the present judgeship vacancy had been filled, and there still existed an apparent need for more judges, there would be some sense in the proposition; but, as it is, why not fill the one place and see how well we get along?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. In the first place, I do not know why the vacancy has not been filled. I have dispatched a young man to telephone the executive branch and ask the reason.

I remember an occasion in New York when a great explosion occurred, and glass was flying everywhere. The pieces of glass were 6 inches or more long. They flew around as poniards and pierced the eyes of people; and the able Senator from New York left his place of business and went out and served bleeding and crushed humanity; but he could not properly take care of more than two or three cases at one time.

Applying the same test, refusing help to a judge who disposes of 772 cases each year would be like saying to my able friend the Senator from New York, "Take care of more cases of injury than you can possibly care for. We will not give you help. You shall not have nurses; you shall not have the media by which you can efficiently do your work."

I say, and the record is unchallenged, that the eight judges in the southern district of New York—in some instances they call in a judge from the outside—between July 1, 1934, and July 1, 1935, disposed of 6,175 cases, an average of 772 cases each a year. It was suggested that their vacations were too long, whereupon I caused an investigation to be made and found that their vacations were not one-tenth as long as the vacations which Senators of the United States take each year, on full salary—and I do not complain of that; I hope the vacations will continue. So I found that we cannot say that the judges are not working properly. Their vacations are short. Moreover, the bankruptcy law which we passed, and I think properly passed, has thrown each year 1,500 more cases on these judges.

I am no great apologist for Federal judges. I believe in the Federal judiciary. They have no way of enforcing their opinions and decisions save the force of public opinion. They have no army, no navy, no treasury, no patronage. There was one beautiful thing about the old regime of England during feudal times, in the days of the harsh laws of the knights—noblesse oblige. Lofty station, noble birth, and great privilege required high-minded men to act with scrupulous fairness on all occasions.

Is it noblesse oblige, is it knightly, is it chivalrous to compel these judges to work harder than we work, far harder than we work, when their vacation is only one-fifth of our vacations, and say, "You shall not have the media, you shall not have the instrumentalities necessary to carry on your great work"? They are a coordinate part of the Government. Noblesse oblige, courtesy, no less statesmanship, require the Senate, when a necessity appears, to grant proper help to the judges and provide extra judges when they are necessary.

I ask the Senator, will he not say that disposing of 772 cases a year is good, solid work for any court?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I do not know whether that is much work or not sufficient work; but I am here to say that my observation is that no Federal judge that I know works as much in 1 month as I do in 3 days.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well. The Senator from New York is an exception; and I can bear testimony to the fact that he employed at one time eight additional secretaries or clerks at his own expense. I happen to know that fact, because I led the fight to provide an additional clerk for each Senator. I happen to know that the Senator from New York is an industrious, hard-working Senator; but I am sure that, hard as he is driven, he is not driven with any greater intensity than are the judges now sitting in the southern district of New York or than the Federal judges in Los Angeles were driven before the two additional judges were provided for that district.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like now to resume the floor in my own right. I am in a yielding mood, and, of course, I yield to the Senator from Arizona whenever he wishes to speak.

Referring to the matter in general, I have the conviction that about the nicest, easiest job a man may have is to be a Federal judge. I observe that judges are sent into New York in the summertime from other districts. They come from southern districts, where it is hot. They come up because the atmosphere of New York is rather enjoyable in the summer. Then our own judges go up in the mountains, or go to Europe. Mr. President, without speaking from professional knowledge, I venture to say that we could reduce the number of Federal judges in this country by 25 percent, and law and order would not break down.

It is a notorious fact that one cannot have the ear of a judge until 10 o'clock in the morning. He is all through his arduous duties by 3 or 4 o'clock in the afternoon. I never in my life had any job that I could finish within those hours. If it were a fact that Federal judges were taking home with them packages of papers and burning the midnight oil to inform themselves regarding the precedents and the decisions in order to determine what they ought to do in the various cases presented to them, we should say, "Well, you ought to have some help." But when anyone says that law and order in this country are breaking down because of the lack of Federal judges, "it is to laugh"; it is an absurdity; it is not in accordance with the observation of any man who looks into the matter at all.

If we were now to adopt a motion to take away two Federal judges from the southern district of New York, in my judgment, it would be a wise motion. We have had a vacancy, as I have said several times, for a year. If these judges are so overworked and interfered with in their trips to Europe and in their trips to the mountains, let us fill that vacancy and provide them a little more leisure. I cannot see a particle of statesmanship in the proposal to add now to the one vacancy which exists two more judgeships so that three judges could be appointed.

I am not interested personally; it makes no difference to me. The political aspects mean nothing. I would not have anything to say about the appointment of one of them anyway, but if I felt the judges were needed, that would not make any difference. I am not concerning myself with the political aspects of this job or that; I am trying here to serve, in the first place, the people of my State, and so far as I can to serve the people of the United States, to do those things which I can in my feeble way to help my Government. I do not care who the persons may be who recommend the appointments; I am not concerned as to that; but I know there is a place which should have been filled, and which has not been filled. And why is it not filled? If that does not give it the taint of politics I do not know anything about politics from observation. Yet before we can fill one vacancy, which has existed for a year, there must be two more vacancies in order that the balance may be maintained.

Mr. President, the Senate may do as it pleases, of course, but so far as I am concerned, I am not in favor of adding any more judgeships until the vacancies which now exist shall have been filled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11098, to provide for terms of the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania to be held at Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BULKLEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], who is necessarily absent from the Senate. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE] and vote "yea."

Mr. ASHURST (when Mr. NEELY's name was called). I am authorized to announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BILBO. I have a pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], which I transfer to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and vote "nay." I am not advised as to how the Senator from Iowa or the Senator from Alabama would vote if present.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] are detained from the Senate on account of illness.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from Louisiana [Mrs. LONG], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained in important committee meetings.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] is detained on official business at the Department of Labor, doing some research work in connection with the Reynolds-Starnes bill.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BENSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. METCALF (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. I understand that Senator has not voted, so I withdraw my vote, not knowing how he would vote.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], and vote "yea."

Mr. BARKLEY. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], and vote "yea."

So Mr. ASHURST's motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11098) to provide for terms of the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania to be held at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to add a section at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That terms of the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania shall be held at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., on the second Monday of April and second Monday of September of each year: Provided, however, That all writs, precepts, and processes shall be returnable to the terms at Scranton and all court papers shall be kept in the clerk's office at Scranton unless otherwise specially ordered by the court, and the terms at Scranton shall not be terminated or affected by the terms herein provided for at Wilkes-Barre: Provided further, That this authority shall continue only during such time as suitable accommodations for holding court at Wilkes-Barre are furnished free of expense to the United States.

Sec. 2. That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, two additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

INSPECTION AND ALLEGED SEIZURE OF TELEGRAMS, ETC.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I desire for a few minutes to present another question to the Senate. In response to Senate Resolution No. 245 the Federal Communications Commission some days ago made its report in writing, and in its report set forth certain transactions which have been had in connection with the taking of telegraphic messages from certain telegraph companies. There seems to be some misunderstanding concerning the purport and effect of this response. Certainly there is more than one interpretation which may be placed upon it. There are those who believe that the report in its effect is a general and sweeping acquittal of all those concerned; that it tends to or actually does exonerate all concerned from the charges which have been made against them.

In view of this apparent interpretation of the report, I desire to call attention very briefly to three or four of the facts which are stated in the report.

In the first place, on page 3 we find reference to an agreement between the Communications Commission and the Senate committee, or the agents of the committee. I read at that point only one sentence, as follows:

In order to secure information with the least possible disruption of the business of the telegraph companies it was agreed that the separate studies of the Commission and of the committee, to be made in Washington, should be coordinated.

I make no point of this particular part of the response except to call attention to the fact that the report does disclose that an agreement was entered into. It is then further stated as follows:

The Commission formally authorized this procedure in the following minute entry of September 26, 1935, which has been a matter of public record from the date on which the action was taken.

And there is set out the entry referred to, and I should also like to read that entry. It is as follows:

The Commission authorized Commissioner Stewart to detail a member of the Commission's staff to work with examiners from Senator BLACK's investigating committee in an examination of the messages and records in the Washington offices of the telegraph companies, relating to lobbying activities which are being investigated by the Senate committee, the records and messages to be made available in the name of the Federal Communications Commission.

I make no comment upon that entry, Mr. President, except to say that it evidently was made in furtherance of the agreement and in order to effectuate the understanding that had been had. The significant fact about the entry is the indication, clearly there recited, that the records and messages which were to be obtained by the agents of the Commission were to be made available in the name of the Commission, and I take it that phrase "to be made available" means that such messages were to be made available to the Senate's investigating committee.

The third recital to which I would call attention is the statement on the same page to the effect that the investigators of the committee and the agents of the Commission—I now quote again:

entered the Washington offices of the telegraph companies at the same time.

Thus we find reference to the agreement to the entry made in order to effectuate the agreement establishing the fact that the Commission was undertaking to obtain telegrams in its own right and then to turn them over to the committee and we find also that the agents of the two bodies were proceeding at the same time in quest of the various messages which were in controversy.

It has been said in effect that it was a mere coincidence that the two investigations went on simultaneously. A rare coincidence! But this report indicates that there was not even the first hint of coincidence, because these two groups of investigators, by the authority of those by whom they were employed and under an agreement in pursuance of the entry made in the records of the Federal Communications Commission went together to the office of the telegraph companies. And on page 4 we find further significant language.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I call to the Senator's attention the sentence immediately following that which he read:

There, messages were called for by the Commission's employees, who inspected them for irregularities under the Communications Act.

I call that to the Senator's attention because it is rather a singular statement in view of what has gone before.

Mr. STEIWER. That is true, Mr. President. I thank the Senator from California for reminding me of that sentence. I had not read it, because to my mind it is or may be a little equivocal, and I did not know what interpretation to place upon it.

Now let me read from the language that I have in mind on page 4, this paragraph:

After the Commission's employees had completed their inspection, the telegrams were examined by the Senate committee investigators pursuant to the Senate committee's subpoenas. The Senate committee investigators desired for the use of the Senate committee copies of certain telegrams, the originals of which were covered by their subpoenas. At the request of the Commission's employees, copies of these telegrams, covered by the Senate committee's subpoenas, were made by the telegraph companies, and the copies so made were turned over to the Senate committee's investigators by the Commission's employees.

The significance of that recital, as I understand the recital, is that, although there were subpoenas issued, no messages were turned over to the Senate committee under the order of the subpoenas. I concede that this statement may be erroneous. It may be contrary to the understanding of our own committee. I have no knowledge of the facts outside of this report, but, basing my understanding upon the report itself, I am justified in the statement made, namely, that the messages demanded by the subpoenas were not produced in accordance with the order of the subpoenas.

Everyone knows that a subpoena duces tecum requires, first, the appearance of a witness; and, second, that the witness produce and bring to court such documents or exhibits as may be contemplated by those who have issued the subpoena. Apparently, this procedure was not followed. No employee of the telegraph companies, in response to the subpoena, appeared before the committee. No employee of the telegraph companies, in response to a subpoena, brought to the committee messages, the production of which were commanded by the subpoena.

In lieu of that regular and normal procedure, if we may rely upon the report of our Federal Communications Commission, the thing that was substituted was, in brief, this: That the Communications Commission, carrying out the desire of the Senate investigators, requested employees of the telegraph companies to abstract or copy certain information. I do not know whether the telegrams were copied in whole or in part; nor do I believe that to be a matter of importance. But they extracted certain information from the face of the telegrams, the production of which had been demanding by the subpoena; and after they had obtained that information, after the telegraph company, through its agents, had divulged that information, the agents of the Communications Commission took that information into their possession and then, pursuant, I presume, to agreement and to the entry that had been made by the Commission in its minutes on September 26, 1935, they turned the information over to the employees of the Senate committee.

I make no further comment upon that phase of the matter, Mr. President. I have no desire to draw deductions from the facts stated in this report further than I have already done in this brief statement to the Senate. I have no desire to make any unpleasant characterization of any agent or employee of either group that is involved in this controversy. It is my desire that the facts shall speak for themselves. If, however, there are Senators who feel that this report discloses something other than a normal, orderly, good-faith compliance with the subpoena, they will find considerable interest in the provisions of the law which governs the disclosure of information by the agents of the telegraph companies. In section 605—and this section is from the act of June 19, 1934—we find the prohibition against divulging the contents of messages. I will read a portion of the section:

No person receiving or assisting in receiving, or transmitting, or assisting in transmitting, any interstate or foreign communication by wire or radio shall divulge or publish the existence, contents, substance, purport, effect, or meaning thereof, except through authorized channels of transmission or reception, to any person other than the addressee, his agent, or attorney, or to a person employed or authorized to forward such communication to its destination, or to proper accounting or distributing officers of the various communicating centers over which the communication may be passed, or to the master of a ship under whom he is serving, or in response to a subpoena issued by a court of competent jurisdiction, or on demand of other lawful authority.

I will ask that the remainder of the section be included in my remarks at this point, but I will not read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURKE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The remainder of the section is as follows:

And no person not being authorized by the sender shall intercept any communication and divulge or publish the existence, contents, substance, purport, effect, or meaning of such intercepted communication to any person; and no person not being entitled thereto shall receive or assist in receiving any interstate or foreign communication by wire or radio and use the same or any information therein contained for his own benefit or for the benefit of another not entitled thereto; and no person having received such intercepted communication or having become acquainted with the contents, substance, purport, effect, or meaning of the same or any part thereof, knowing that such information was so obtained, shall divulge or publish the existence, contents, substance, purport, effect, or meaning of the same or any part thereof, or use the same or any information therein contained for his own benefit or for the benefit of another not entitled thereto: Provided, That this section shall not apply to the receiving, divulging, publishing, or utilizing the contents of any radio communication broadcast, or transmitted by amateurs or others for the use of the general public, or relating to ships in distress.

Mr. STEIWER. For violation of the section just read an appropriate penalty is provided in section 501. That section is short and I will read it:

Sec. 501. Any person who willfully and knowingly does or causes or suffers to be done any act, matter, or thing, in this act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or who willfully and knowingly omits or fails to do any act, matter, or thing in this act required to be done, or willfully or knowingly causes or suffers such omission or failure, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished for such offense, for which penalty (other than a forfeiture) is provided herein, by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for a term of not more than 2 years, or both.

I shall not at this time detain the Senate to discuss the meaning and purposes of the Communications Act of 1934, from which these excerpts are taken, but I think it will be understood everywhere by those who give careful and thoughtful consideration to the act that the authority of the Federal Communications Commission and its agents is to make examinations of the records of the telegraph companies for the purpose of performing the duties of the Commission under the terms of that act. I think it will be conceded that the Commission has no further authority, and that there is no theory upon which it may usurp or arrogate unto itself an authority to examine communications for the purpose of learning what is included therein, and then to divulge that information either to the agents of a Senate committee or anyone else.

It probably is worth while, in considering the procedure to which resort was had by the Commission, to go back to the proposition of inquiring exactly what was done. Obviously, from the face of the report, the Senate committee was not content to issue a subpoena and by the force of that subpoena to command the production of the records. Evidently there was something else desired. Obviously, the Communications Commission was not content to examine messages for the purpose of ascertaining whether there had been forgeries or whether messages had been destroyed by burning or otherwise. Obviously, the purpose of the Communications Commission was to find means to make delivery to our committee of the contents or information contained in the telegrams.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. Yes.

Mr. MINTON. Does not the Senator think that the Senate committee had as much power or more than the Federal Communications Commission had?

Mr. STEIWER. I conceive that under valid process the Senate committee might have far greater power than has the Commission.

Mr. MINTON. Then, why should we resort to the aid of the Federal Communications Commission—

Mr. STEIWER. I do not know.

Mr. MINTON. Or enter into any conspiracy with them to get things that we ourselves have authority to get?

Mr. STEIWER. I have charged the Senate committee with conspiracy. I am frank to say that the Senator's question raises a speculation that might be invoked for the purpose of exculpating employees of the Commission or the committee's agents. I cannot answer the question. I am merely dealing with the report itself, and I deal with the report because there are those who have drawn the inference and arrived at the understanding that this report acquits everybody concerned. I am trying to show that, so far as the face of the report is concerned, it recites affirmatively that there was an agreement; it recites also that the entry which shows that information was to be taken in the name of the Commission and delivered to the committee. It discloses that the agents of both bodies went to the offices of the telegraph companies together. It discloses that the Commission, at the request of the agents of the committee, requested the copying of telegrams and that the telegrams were copied by agents of the telegraph company, and that the information thus derived was turned over to the agents of the Commission, and it was then turned over by the agents of the Commission to the agents of the committee. I merely wish to stress the fact, which I think cannot be escaped unless the Commission's report is to be impeached, a fact that cannot be escaped if we are to be guided by this report, namely, that messages were not taken by process of law under subpoena; original messages were not taken at all; the physical message, the paper on which it was written, was never taken apparently. The thing that was taken was information. It was abstracted from the messages. The process that was had was not one of delivery under a subpoena but it was one of divulging contents and apparently divulging contents in violation of the statute.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I will yield in a moment; I wish to finish one more sentence.

I do not rise, Mr. President, to characterize anyone; I do not rise to attempt to fix blame. I concede that I do not know where the blame should be fixed. I cheerfully admit that there may be a complete defense to the implications that grow so forcefully out of this report. I hope there is such a defense. I accuse no one. I merely say that, in my judgment, the report may not be used in and of itself to acquit anybody of anything.

TERMS OF DISTRICT COURT, MIDDLE DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11098) to provide for terms of the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania to be held at Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, on that I should like to have a roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York ask for the yeas and nays?

Mr. COPELAND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President—

Mr. COPELAND. I withhold the suggestion for a moment and yield to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK].

INSPECTION AND ALLEGED SEIZURE OF TELEGRAMS, ETC.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I wish to say just a few words in connection with the remarks made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER]. What he has said today reminds me of the discussion on the floor a few days ago in which he wanted to accuse nobody of anything; but today he does not want to acquit anyone of anything; he does not want to exculpate anyone from anything; he does not know where the blame rests. He accuses no one in direct language. Certainly not! That is not his method. It is quite a different method which is adopted by the Senator from Oregon. His method is to use many words, expressing his entire innocence of wanting to say anyone has done anything wrong or just who did it, whose agent it was that committed some horrible crime, and yet he says enough so that the newspapers which are representing the cause which the Senator from Oregon was representing on this floor can take what he said, with their usual distortion, because he knows how valuable it will be for that purpose.

Mr. President, the statement has been made that it is a very abnormal and unusual thing to go into an office and get the copies instead of the original papers; that it is a very unusual thing to serve a subpoena without having the papers brought to the Senate. The Senator should have known there is nothing unusual about it because the very committee on which he sat adopted exactly that system from day to day. They sent subpoenas into the offices of various people engaged in business, and the service of the subpoenas was accepted. He knows that. If he does not, it is very strange that he does not. After the subpoenas were accepted the agents of the committee on which he was serving went through the papers in that office and brought back copies of those papers to the committee on which the Senator was serving.

Not only did that committee do that, but that is the regular method adopted by all the committees which have been engaged in investigations. In other words, a subpoena duces tecum is served or service is accepted. When that is done, by agreements—that is the word the Senator mentioned—which agreements were made by representatives of the Banking and Currency Committee and those whose papers were being examined, they then looked over the records in order that they might determine just which they desired. They then returned the copies to the committee room and there they used the copies of the books, of memoranda, of the letters, of the telegrams. It is exactly the system and the method that was used by the committee on which the Senator from Oregon served and to which he referred a few days ago.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. STEIWER. Cannot the Senator from Alabama conceive any difference between the thing he is now outlining and the procedure which is referred to and outlined in the report of the Federal Communications Commission?

Mr. BLACK. No; and I do not expect the Senator to see it.

Mr. STEIWER. I ask if the Senator from Alabama can see it. I do see it.

Mr. BLACK. I think the Senator is in such frame of mind that for some reason nothing this committee has done or can do or will do will meet with his meticulous taste.

Mr. STEIWER. Is the Senator going to attempt to answer my question?

Mr. BLACK. I have answered the Senator's question. I do not intend to try to answer it to the satisfaction of the Senator, because I do not think anyone who believes that we should conduct this investigation can satisfy the Senator.

Mr. STEIWER. I merely ask the Senator if he did not see the difference between the procedure he just outlined and the procedure referred to and outlined in the report of the Federal Communications Commission.

Mr. BLACK. I said I did not, because there is no difference. The parts of the report which the Senator did not read, which he was very careful not to read, state repeatedly that the Senate committee went into that office with a subpoena. The Senate committee went into that office with a subpoena of exactly the same type as that used by the representatives of the Banking and Currency Committee when they went into the other office.

Mr. STEIWER. What I wanted to suggest to the Senator is that in the case to which he is referring—I assume he is referring to the procedure of the Banking and Currency Committee? In that case the evidence was actually secured under subpoena.

Mr. BLACK. So was this.

Mr. STEIWER. Possibly it was, but so far as the report of the Federal Communications Commission is concerned the information was not obtained under subpoena, but was obtained under the vicarious practice of getting the contents of the telegrams copied or abstracted and turned over to the Communications Commission, and then the Communications Commission delivered them to the agents of the Senate committee. There is the difference.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator should be perfectly familiar with the facts if he has read the remainder of the report, which he did not.

Mr. STEIWER. I have read it all.

Mr. BLACK. Certainly, but the Senator was careful not to read it all to the Senate in the remarks which he was making. He withheld it. He did not abstract it. He withheld it.

Mr. STEIWER. Will not the Senator add that this report was delivered to the Senate and printed and a copy placed upon each Senator's desk? I assume every Senator is familiar with it. There is no necessity for me to read the whole report.

Mr. BLACK. If the Senator thought every Senator was familiar with it, why did he read any of it into the Record?

Mr. STEIWER. The report has not been printed in the Record; I read it to call attention to the points I was trying to make.

Mr. BLACK. And to leave out the parts which the Senator did not want called to the attention of the public and to leave it out in such a way that the paper the Senator was reading the other day when he made his remarks, the Chicago Tribune, could utilize it as the Senator's statement without putting in the remainder of the report.

Mr. STEIWER. The Senator is not justified in making that statement. I would be glad to print the whole report in the Record.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If the Senator was making his remarks for the benefit of the Members of the Senate, there might be some excuse for the method he is using, because of his statement that Senators have had an opportunity to read the report; but every Member of the Senate knows that the Senator from Oregon is making these speeches not for the benefit of the Senate but for the benefit of the Hearst papers, so they can publish his remarks in the papers.

Mr. STEIWER. Why do the two Senators rise and question the motives of the Senator from Oregon? Does not the Senator remember that my colleague the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] asked for order and that we were endeavoring to get the attention of Members of the Senate? I cannot help it if Senators were not listening to the presentation I was making.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, the facts remain that this report shows that the Senate committee obtained its messages by a subpoena. The fact is the subpoena was exactly the same type as the subpoenas to which the Senator from Oregon paid such high tribute, issued by the Banking and Currency Committee, of which he was a member. I assume he was vitally interested in that investigation. I assume he actively and aggressively assisted Mr. Pecora and the others who wanted to obtain the truth. Therefore I assume he was sympathetic with their subpoenas and the methods they adopted.

Mr. STEIWER. May I help the Senator from Alabama on that point? That investigation was conducted by a subcommittee, of which the Senator from Oregon was not a member except during the period when the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] was abroad on official business. During that time I served in his stead. During the time I was on the subcommittee I took a very close and active interest in the proceedings of the subcommittee.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, the fact still remains that the Senate committee, a committee of this body, followed this procedure. If the Senator from Oregon does not like the way the committee has proceeded, let him cite the committee to come before this body. Let him present his accusations and not with "whys" and "whereases" and "buts" in the newspapers. Let him join issue face to face like a man and let the country know to whose defense he has sprung in this body—who it is behind the attacks which are being made. We know who it is.

Let us determine whether or not the time has come when a small group of lobbyists and a small group of men, including a newspaper owner who has a great deal of power, who want to control this country, can control it. Let it be determined whether any man can rise to such fame that he can secure the Presidential nomination upon a rotten issue like this, an issue honeycombed with the efforts of people to conceal the truth; people who are afraid of the truth, who dare not let the truth come out; people who are adopting every conceivable plan in court, in the Senate or elsewhere, to conceal from the Nation the nefarious practices in which they have been engaging.

Let it be determined whether or not a man can hide behind the Constitution, when as a matter of fact he is an enemy of the Constitution. Let it be determined once and for all whether or not this country believes, as I believe it does, that the safety of the Republic does not depend upon concealment and secrecy and attempting to hide behind veiled insinuations and veiled threats and veiled charges—practices which are contrary to the best interests of the people of the Nation.

Mr. President, this committee is serving as a part of the Senate. It is a little strange that Members of the Senate choose as their method to rise and say, "We do not know just exactly what is the fact, but we make no charges, and we would not exculpate anyone, and we are not going to try to prove the defense."

This committee has acted in accordance with the rules of the Senate and the rules of law. It has obtained evidence. It has obtained evidence which some persons wish to conceal. That is the trouble. Some persons do not desire to have this evidence exposed. They wish to keep it buried. They desire, if possible, to prevent any more committees investigating the truth and exposing the corruption seeping through certain groups in this country. Therefore, their method is the same old method: "Well, let us see if we cannot, by insinuation or otherwise, place some charges around those who wish to expose the truth. If we can keep doing this from day to day, and keep the subject in the press; if we can just say enough so that that part of the press which is tied up with this group can seize on it, perhaps the people will forget the destruction of evidence. Perhaps they will forget that one man in this country seeks to direct the destinies of the people of the Nation from greed. Perhaps they will forget that one man having far-flung possessions over America, South and North, interested in various activities, is, perhaps, interested in activities which might cause profits to roll into his pocket if war should be declared with foreign nations. Conceal, hide, do anything, just so that you create a smoke screen in order that the truth may be concealed."

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] spoke upon this question last Friday. It had been my intention to reply this week to the remarks of the Senator from Oregon. I have been detained from the Senate this week on account of illness. I do not feel like discussing the question at length today. I doubt whether I shall feel so on Monday.

However, I do wish at this time to serve notice that on Tuesday next, as soon after the convening of the Senate as it is possible for me to obtain the floor, I shall discuss the subject, Shall the Senate Permit Mr. William Randolph Hearst to Prevent a Committee of the Senate From Uncovering Fraudulent and Corrupt Lobbying Activities by Hiding Behind the Shield of Legal Technicality?

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I merely wish to express my regret that the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] and the others who are defending the course of our committee in this matter have not seen fit to deal with the affirmative recitals contained in the report of the Communications Commission nor to explain away the apparent violation of law which is there recorded.

To me it is regrettable that when we need light we get only heat, and that the members of the committee who seek to defend the methods which have been employed resort only to insinuation, to veiled and unveiled accusation, to an unfounded questioning of motives, and then permit the report to remain unexplained and the arguments to go entirely unanswered.

TERMS OF DISTRICT COURT, MIDDLE DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11098) to provide for terms of the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania to be held at Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee. On that amendment the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] has demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. COPELAND obtained the floor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from New York is discussing a question which it seems to me a full Senate should hear. We apparently confront the amazing proposition that the Senate is being asked to force two United States judges upon a State whose own Senators do not wish the legislation to pass. Will the Senator permit me to ask for a quorum?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BONE in the chair). Seventy-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, this afternoon the able and genial senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], my long-time friend, who will be my friend regardless of any differences we might have in the Senate, called attention to what he called the break-down of law and justice. I think the average citizen fails to recognize the fundamental difference between the State courts and those courts known as the Federal courts, which in their highest branches have to do with the interpretation of the Constitution of the United States, and in their lower branches with the effective dealing with interstate crime.

In my opinion, so far as the Federal courts and all their branches are concerned, we have a very effective system. Sometimes fault is found with the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States; attention is called to 5-to-4 opinions and other divided opinions. As a matter of fact, in the entire history of our country, as I recall, there have been only about fifty 5-to-4 decisions. Dissenting opinions have been filed in a great number of cases, of course, but so far as close decisions are concerned, there have been very few. I had occasion to ask the Clerk of the Supreme Court some years ago for a list of the 5-to-4 decisions, and up to that time there had been only 38 in the entire history of the country. I think a few have been handed down since that time. Sometimes fault is found with the Supreme Court; yet the rank and file of the people of the country are firm believers in the Supreme Court, and in all the higher Federal courts.

As I said a little while ago, in connection with the work of the crime committee, we recommended a number of changes in Federal laws, and widened powers of the Federal courts in dealing with new forms of crime incident to the use of the automobile and the telegraph and the telephone. We recommended giving the courts new powers. But by and large there has been no complaint of the lack of judges or prompt action in the Federal courts, no piling up of work such as we sometimes see in the lower courts. There have been few complaints of that sort.

With the great economic depression we have experienced and the increased numbers of bankruptcies and other legal proceedings which have to do with the problems which are to be dealt with by the Federal courts, there may have been some delay, but, so far as the normal operations are concerned, I think there is little cause for complaint.

Our study of crime brought to me a firm conviction that the greatest social problem with which the United States has to deal is the problem of juvenile delinquency. It is a sad commentary upon American civilization that at this very time in the jails of the United States and in all the penal institutions, the average age of the criminal is 23 years, the largest group being those of 19 years of age and the next largest group those of 18 years—just misguided boys and girls. How can it happen that in a country which has spent billions of dollars for education, and every year spends millions of dollars to maintain its churches and schools and other institutions having to do with the formation of character, there is such a break-down and that such conditions can exist as those indicated by the figures I have stated?

It would be interesting to give consideration to this great problem. I think we would all agree that the first responsibility for character and behavior rests upon the home. There has been a great change in the American home since the days of the founding of the Republic. The American home is not today what it was. Perhaps it is useless to discuss why that is so, but it is true, in my judgment. The first responsibility for character is in the home. I do not know any way to reach the home except through the churches and various social organizations.

Naturally, we ask about the church. Judge Marcus A. Kavanagh, of Chicago, in a remarkable book, The Criminal and His Allies, makes a statement, in effect, something like this: In 1850 religion in America was at high tide, and in all the prisons in the United States there were only 7,000 inmates. Discussing the matter at some length, he decides that when the churches are full the prisons are empty. He does not undertake to discuss the question at all from the standpoint of a religionist, or as one who is interested in a denomination, or a special branch of the church. He simply makes the statement that when the churches are full the prisons are empty.

In the average city community today, if on one Sunday all the citizens should strangely want to go to church, there would not be pews enough to take care of one-tenth of those who desired to enter. There are attractive forms of amusement and entertainment outside the church and outside the home.

There no longer seems to be the impulse to go to church which characterized the Nation in 1850. I do not know how to reach the church. I have no right to criticize any church but my own. I do not hesitate to do that; but the church is failing of its high purpose. It is not doing for youth today what it did in olden times. As I dismiss the home as being impossible to reach by any method that I know except through the church, and as it is impossible to give strength to the church, I go to the third agency in character building; that is the school.

I have a right as a citizen, as a taxpayer, to inquire whether the school is doing its part in the development of character, whether it is doing its part in the prevention of juvenile delinquency. I do not think it is. In saying that, I do not reflect upon the public-school teacher. No one honest with himself, who will search his mind, can fail to find memories of this and that teacher who had much to do with molding thought and character. Every man knows that to be true. I have no fault to find, Mr. President, with the teachers. It is the system of which I complain.

In my judgment, the objectives of education must be revised. When that statement is made, someone may ask, "Well, what are the objectives of education? What should be the objectives of education?"

The objectives of education are clear to me: In the first place, to fit for parenthood. That means a clean body and a clean mind. Second, so far as possible, to fit for a livelihood. Third, to give every child a sense of social responsibility, and make him understand that he belongs to a country, to make him a patriotic citizen, to make him a lover of the flag, to give him an appreciation of the necessity of the recognition of authority.

The trouble with the schools, as I see it—and all this has a bearing on the question before us—is the fact that mass instruction is the rule. Every child is made to conform to a conventional standard. A yardstick is laid down, and every child must measure up to that yardstick. The differences of the individual child as compared with the mass of children are utterly disregarded. The result is that many a child is a retarded child. He does not progress. He becomes a hindrance and a nuisance to the rest of the children, and to the teachers, and to the system. Then what happens? Pretty soon the teacher, in the language of the street, "gets sore" on the child. She "picks" on the child; and the poor little humiliated youngster, resentful of his surroundings and of the treatment accorded him, does the perfectly human thing; he runs away from school. He is an occasional truant, and it is not long before he becomes an habitual truant. The boy meets with other bad boys. That is the beginning of a gang. It is not long before there are pilferings and burglaries and even murders in that community. That is the way gangs begin.

Mr. President, as I see the matter, the hope of the country lies in the school. The prevention of crime lies in the school. The development of what we should like to know as American character depends upon the school. Failure there means that very soon the youngsters are brought to the attention of the police; they are arrested and taken to court; and that is the beginning of the outrageous treatment of youth by the machinery of the courts.

Upon the wall in the office of Mr. Sanford Bates, the Director of the Bureau of Prisons of the United States—a very able man, a great credit to his country—is a great map of the United States, as large as two panels on the wall before me; and in this map are stuck pins. The face of the map looks like the face of a man who has had virulent smallpox, so pitted is it, so marked is it. I said, "Mr. Bates, what is that map?" He replied, "Every pin in that map marks the location of a county jail. There are 35,000 of them in the United States, every one of them a breeding-place for crime."

We do not deal intelligently with our youth who fall on evil ways. Instead of preventing the tendency to crime or antisocial conduct in the first place, when youths are arrested for one cause or another they are taken before a court, found guilty, and sent to some kind of a custodial institution. Older youths are sent to jails where hardened criminals are incarcerated. Certainly such jails are breeding places of crime. The youngsters may have been simply nonsocial at the time of their admission. They come out against society, and ready to carry on depredations against organized society.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I am quite interested in the subject which the Senator is discussing. I have had some little experience with the matter. I was wondering whether the Senator intended to say that there is a custom prevailing in the United States today under which first offenders are sent to jail.

Mr. COPELAND. Many first offenders, I am sorry to say, are sent to jail. That is an indecent thing, an unthinkable thing; but, due to the inertia of our people, we can become more excited over the question whether there shall be two new Federal judges in the southern district of New York than over the question how we are going to deal with wayward children.

If I had my way, I should not permit a judge who deals with a case involving a child, to pass sentence, unless it were a juvenile-court judge operating under laws which are humane, and which give consideration to all the things we are discussing.

A child taken to court for a misdemeanor or a crime should be fairly tried; and then, if found guilty, the question is, what is going to be done with him? I would have another body of equal dignity with a court. I would have a doctor on that board; I would have a psychologist or a psychiatrist; I would have another specialist who could test the eyesight and the hearing; I would have a sociologist and a social worker; and I would have one fine, motherly woman on that board.

Mr. President, in response to the question of the able Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], who, himself, served for years as a juvenile-court judge—and I should like to say in passing that I have no doubt he used the degree of kindness and good judgment that a man in that important position should use—I will say that undoubtedly the laws of his State made it possible for him to exercise his judgment; but there are places in these great United States where conviction is automatically followed by a sentence to a jail, a prison, or some other custodial institution. It is cruel beyond words. I am sure the Senator will agree with me as to that.

I said I would have upon that board which would examine the child a doctor. I presume I will be accused of thinking of the doctor first because I, myself, used to be one, but we have learned much in the medical profession about health and the relationship of health to the mental processes.

There is an insane asylum in this country where the discharges are 78 percent of the admissions; that is to say, there are 78 chances out of a hundred that recovery will be brought about. Mr. President, when I tell you that the average discharges in this country from certain institutions amount to only 35 percent you naturally inquire, Why is it possible that in this particular institution proportionately twice as many are restored to health as in the average institution? The answer is because every person admitted to that insane asylum is regarded as a patient. The question is in every instance, "What is wrong with this patient?"

They do not have bars and shackles and chains. This institution is operated as a hospital, and a careful physical examination is given to find out what is wrong with the patient. Is there an infection, a bad gall bladder or bad teeth or bad tonsils or an infected intestinal tract or an infection somewhere else?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I will yield in just a moment. Then the doctor proceeds to get rid of the infection, and, strange as it may seem, when the source of the poison is removed, and the poisons already absorbed have been eliminated, then the mental processes are restored and sanity is given to the person who theretofore was insane. Now I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, there may be implied in the question I am about to ask, some thought that I am listening with impatience to the able Senator from New York. On the contrary, I always gladly listen to him. He speaks with very cool locution and without excitement. I have learned much from his speeches, and when I ask this question of him it is not because I think he should desist, for I assure him I am glad to hear him and he is one of the rare wise men we see. If, however, it be the purpose of the able Senator to prevent a vote—and he has the intellectual power and the laryngeal activity to prevent a vote if he wishes to do so [laughter]; and he is always frank—I certainly have no comment to make, and I have no criticism, but, if that be his purpose, I think the Senate has other business to which it could turn its attention at this time.

Now I am exploring to ascertain if we can agree upon a time to vote, say, next Tuesday or next Wednesday, or some other time, with the understanding that the bill which is in charge of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], shall be restored Monday morning to its status as the unfinished business. Would the Senator from New York have the kindness to enlighten me as to his views as to when we may fix a time for a vote?

Mr. COPELAND. I think I would have no objection to that; in fact, I would rather welcome it.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator himself fix a time?

Mr. COPELAND. I would welcome it, because I find myself at the moment without certain material which fully demonstrates the fact that these judges are not needed, and I will be glad to have a few days in order to gather the material together.

Mr. ASHURST. Would the Senator object to a final vote at 3 o'clock 1 week from today?

Mr. COPELAND. Will that be Friday?

Mr. ASHURST. Say Thursday next at 3 o'clock.

Mr. COPELAND. When would the measure be taken up for consideration?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from New York may choose the time, but, as men of honor, we are bound to restore the unfinished business to its place on Monday morning.

Much as I want this bill passed, I would help to defeat it rather than break my word that I have given the Senator from Kansas. So I feel on Monday morning the unfinished business, being Senate bill 1424, should be restored to its place. That, however, would leave the Senator from New York or any other Senator at full liberty at any time to talk on the judgeship bill, because, as we all know, there is in the Senate no rule of germaneness, and a Senator, if he obtains recognition, may speak at any time he chooses.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly. The Senator from New York has the floor, and I am speaking by his indulgence.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator, of course, realizes that I have spoken with germaneness. I am discussing penal institutions.

Mr. ASHURST. While the Senator's discussion may not have been germane, it has been very enlightening to me. So, Mr. President, may we not agree that a vote on the judgeship bill, House bill 11098, be taken at 3 o'clock on Thursday next?

Mr. COPELAND. I think we may do that. Could it not be made a special order under the rules?

Mr. ASHURST. I doubt it. I fear that might be inconvenient.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think that could be done, if there were no objection to it.

Mr. COPELAND. Suppose we make it a special order for 1 o'clock on Thursday and vote not later than 3 o'clock on that day.

Mr. ASHURST. Very good.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on next Thursday at not later than 1 o'clock the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily; that at that hour the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11098; and that at not later than 3 o'clock a vote be taken on the bill and all amendments that may be pending or that may be offered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator want a quorum called?

Mr. ROBINSON. Action on the request would require a quorum. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Chavez	King	Pope
Ashurst	Clark	La Follette	Radcliffe
Austin	Connally	Lewis	Robinson
Bachman	Copeland	Logan	Russell
Bailey	Couzens	Loneragan	Schwellenbach
Barbour	Davis	Long	Sheppard
Barkley	Donahey	McGill	Shipstead
Bilbo	Duffy	McKellar	Steiwer
Black	Fletcher	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Bone	Frazier	Metcalf	Truman
Borah	George	Minton	Tydings
Brown	Gibson	Murphy	Vandenberg
Bulkley	Guffey	Murray	Van Nuys
Bulow	Hale	Neely	Wagner
Burke	Harrison	Norris	Walsh
Byrd	Hatch	Nye	Wheeler
Byrnes	Hayden	O'Mahoney	White
Capper	Johnson	Overton
Caraway	Keyes	Pittman

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request submitted by the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that I had not finished what I wanted to say about juvenile delinquency. The hour is late. I want to make one statement about the bill itself, and I hope Senators will bear it in mind.

The Senate passed a bill which I introduced nearly a year ago. That bill is now before a committee of the House. It has seemed to me a very unusual thing, with a bill being in the House upon which the House has not chosen to act, that another bill for the same purpose should be sent to the House in the form of a rider. I do not think it is quite fair to the other body. We certainly have no desire and no right to interfere here with the orderly processes of the operation of legislation in the other House.

I believe Senators do not quite realize that this bill is already in the House. It is there to be acted upon whenever the House chooses to do so. Yet, in our anxiety to pass this particular bill, we propose now to hitch it on to another bill. We will dispose of this one next Thursday, and then, I suppose, if the House fails to act, in 3 or 4 weeks' time we will put it on another bill, hoping some time to give it wings sufficient to carry it through the House on its way to ultimate passage.

STOCKYARDS AND MEAT PACKING

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 1424) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, be proceeded with. The reason for that is that it was displaced by the motion submitted by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the bill known as the stock-yards bill, in charge of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], be restored to the parliamentary status which it occupied before the motion of the Senator from Arizona was adopted. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 1424) to amend the Packers and Stock-yards Act, 1921.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair state the parliamentary situation. The motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] to recommit the bill is the pending question before the Senate at this time.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of several officers for appointment, or appointment by transfer, in the Regular Army.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar. If there be no further reports of committees, the first nomination in order on the calendar will be stated.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Lamar Hardy to be United States attorney for the southern district of New York.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

NATIONAL EMERGENCY COUNCIL

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Richard B. O'Connell, of Connecticut, to be State director, National Emergency Council, from Connecticut.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Thomas Parran, of New York, to be Surgeon General, Public Health Service.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters may be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the post-office nominations are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

THE JUDICIARY—LAMAR HARDY

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have just come into the Chamber. Were any nominations from the Judiciary Committee acted upon?

Mr. ROBINSON. All nominations on the calendar have been disposed of. There was one nomination on the calendar from the Judiciary Committee—the nomination of Lamar Hardy to be United States attorney for the southern district of New York.

Mr. NORRIS. Has it been disposed of?

Mr. ROBINSON. That nomination was confirmed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think it has been known that I desired to oppose the confirmation of this nomination. I now understand that it has been disposed of. I will ask the chairman of the committee about it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, does the Senator refer to the Hardy nomination?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. ASHURST. Frankness and candor require me to say that the Senator told me yesterday that he wished to speak in opposition to the confirmation of this nomination.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and I am informed that it has been disposed of.

Mr. ASHURST. It is on the calendar.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the nomination has been confirmed, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the nomination was confirmed be reconsidered. I desire to be heard on the nomination.

Mr. ROBINSON. I make no objection to that. I had no information that the Senator opposed the confirmation of the nomination.

Mr. NORRIS. I know that. I told the chairman of the committee about it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the action of the Senate in confirming the nomination of Mr. Hardy be rescinded. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. NORRIS. Now I wonder if we cannot arrange for a definite time to take up the nomination. Some time will be occupied on the nomination, I think.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is my intention to move a recess until Monday.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not anxious to fix the time now; but in any event, we could not take up the nomination at this time of the day. I am willing to let it stand just as it is.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nomination will go over.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that on next Tuesday, at the hour of 3:30 p. m., the Senate proceed to the consideration of this nomination in executive session.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to that; but I suggest that the hour be fixed at 2:30, in anticipation of considerable debate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; I modify the request to that effect.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that, at 2:30 o'clock p. m., on Tuesday next, the Senate resolve itself into executive session, and that the nomination of Mr. Lamar Hardy to be United States attorney for the southern district of New York be then taken up for consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RECESS TO MONDAY

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, March 30, 1936, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, MARCH 27, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, according to the multitude of Thy tender mercies, turn Thou to us. As servants of the Republic, we have our mission—a service that each may render, an influence that the humblest may exert. Heavenly Father, may we not be satisfied with just small achievements. With gratitude to Thee for Thy matchless providence, lead us in those paths that shall bring the best compensation to our country which has called us. O lift this glorious world out of the valley of dismay. Fill it with countless human creatures worthy and altogether capable of enjoying it. Pity the weak, the indolent, and the disobedient; have mercy upon them. We pray that our own land may be led higher and higher, where afflictions cease and national ills disturb no more. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes today immediately after disposition of the pending special orders.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I am not going to object, Members on this side have been granted 35 minutes to address the House this morning. We are very anxious to take up and finish a bill today, and I hope no other similar requests will be made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PURCHASE OF POTATOES AND CHERRIES BY THE SURPLUS CROP RELIEF CORPORATION FOR RELIEF PURPOSES

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter which I wrote to Harry L. Hopkins, of the Federal Surplus Relief Corporation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter written by me to Hon. Harry L. Hopkins, Chairman of the Federal Surplus Relief Corporation:

MARCH 25, 1936.

HON. HARRY L. HOPKINS,
President, Federal Surplus Relief Corporation,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HOPKINS: On April 1, 1935, I wrote you with reference to the purchase of potatoes made by the Surplus Crop Relief Corporation for relief purposes. I stated then, and I say now, that I was under the impression that the surplus crop was to be purchased where the surplus crop was for relief purposes by your Corporation. At that time I wrote you, in part, as follows:

"I wish to call your attention to the following statement based upon the facts given in your letter and the above report. Idaho produced in 1934, 19,240,000 bushels of potatoes, or 5 percent of the total 1934 crop, and furnished 559 carloads of potatoes. Maine produced 56,280,000 bushels, or 14.6 percent of the total crop, and furnished 2,300 cars. Maryland produced 3,267,000 bushels, or eight-tenths of 1 percent of the total crop, and furnished 106.6 cars. Michigan produced 34,304,000 bushels, or 8.8 percent of the total crop, and furnished 180 cars. New York produced 32,550,000 bushels, or 8.4 percent of the total crop, and furnished 300.8 cars. North Carolina produced 10,672,000 bushels, or 2.7 percent of the total crop, and furnished 211.8 cars. Virginia produced 13,433,000 bushels, or 3.4 percent of the total crop, and furnished 1,392.3 cars. Wisconsin produced 31,320,000 bushels, or 8.1 percent, and furnished 181.4 cars. Minnesota produced 23,380,000, or 6 percent of the total crop, and was allowed to furnish none of the potatoes, according to your letter.

"I wish to call your attention to the fact that while Maine produced approximately one and a half times as many potatoes as Michigan produced, she was allowed to furnish nearly 13 times as many potatoes as Michigan furnished. While Maryland produced less than one-tenth of the potatoes Michigan produced, she was given 106 cars to Michigan's 180 cars. While Michigan produced two and a half times as many potatoes as Virginia, Virginia was allowed to furnish more than seven and a half times as many as Michigan was permitted to furnish. In view of the fact that Michigan stood third in the amount of potatoes produced and Michigan farmers and produce men are holding this tremendous surplus on their hands, I feel that the above method of handling this surplus is not fair and just to the growers of my State."

I received a reply but no satisfaction. I did hope, however, that Michigan would receive a square deal with reference to the purchasing of potatoes for relief out of the 1935 crop. I now have before me the report of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation as to potatoes purchased, and also the Crops and Markets Report, published monthly by the Department of Agriculture. These reports show the following purchases of potatoes as compared to production of potatoes in the States quoted during the year 1935:

State	Quantity produced	Quantity purchased
	Bushels	Bushels
Idaho.....	17,800,000	206,530
Maine.....	56,280,000	1,533,320
Maryland.....	3,113,500	91,560
Michigan.....	34,304,000	108,313
New Jersey.....	9,750,000	55,438
New York.....	32,550,000	180,600
Pennsylvania.....	22,572,000	123,032
Virginia.....	11,352,000	355,904
Wisconsin.....	31,320,000	181,780
Minnesota.....	23,380,000	None

I call attention again to the fact that while Maine produced approximately 50 percent more potatoes than Michigan, she was allowed to furnish 15 times as many potatoes for relief purposes as Michigan was allowed to furnish. Maine furnished 1,533,320 bushels, while Michigan was only allowed to furnish 108,313 bushels. While Michigan produced 50 percent more potatoes than Idaho produced, Idaho was allowed to furnish nearly twice as many as Michigan. Idaho furnishing 206,530 bushels, while Michigan furnished 108,313 bushels. The same is true with practically every State mentioned above. There may be some justification for buying more potatoes in New York because the place of production is close to the place of consumption. This applies equally to Michigan. When you look over the map, you will find that Michigan is in the center of a large population, with such cities as Detroit, Chicago, Cleveland, Toledo, and other large cities, which should naturally receive their potato supply from Michigan. While I realize that Virginia is an early-potato State, Maine and Michigan are both late-potato States, and there is no justification for this discrimination.

I also wish to call attention to the fact that despite the fact that Michigan leads the world in the production of cherries, and that we have had the largest cherry surplus in the cherry crop in the United States, the cherry grower was given no consideration by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation in any purchase made, for your letter of March 12 states that no cherries were purchased during the calendar year of 1935.

I protested recently to the proper department because Oregon cherries were sent into Michigan to the C. C. C. camps. Despite the fact that Michigan leads the world in the production of cherries, the Government saw fit to buy Oregon cherries and shipped them into Michigan at a much higher price. Every year we send a Cherry Queen to Washington to present a cherry pie to the President of the United States. The President last year graciously received the Cherry Queen and the pie, and we have a right to assume he ate it. Surely, if these cherries are good enough, as I stated before, for the President of the United States, they ought to be good enough for the C. C. C. camps.

After my protest of last year I had hoped the potato and cherry growers of my State would receive a square deal from the New Deal, but apparently the only thing we are getting is a "raw deal", as the above facts indicate.

Unless you can give me some legitimate reasons for not giving Michigan a square deal, I do not care to have you answer this letter. I would like to have reasons, but not excuses.

Very truly yours,

ALBERT J. ENGEL.

FLOOD-CONTROL BILL

The SPEAKER. Under the special order for today the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, following the recent flood disasters which have destroyed property estimated to be worth at least a quarter of a billion dollars, and which have taken a number of lives in the New England States, may I say I feel that the Flood Control Committee of the House may today say, "We told you so." Last August a flood-control bill was passed by this House, the first flood-control bill ever to pass this House which included reservoirs as a method of tributary control. This bill passed amid the cries of "pork barrel", "logrolling", and amid the cry of trying to build up something for the future campaign, but the bill was passed, and now we have demonstrated that floods are the greatest menace to the future prosperity and welfare of this country.

This bill is now receiving consideration by the Senate Commerce Committee. May I call the attention of the House that it should pass at this session? [Applause.] On the whole, H. R. 8455 contained good projects, and if returned by the Senate with the addition of projects for eastern streams recently in flood it will be a credit to this Congress. We should consider that it is not only the loss of property, stores, and goods, and the lives which may be destroyed, but these floods are the plague which has accompanied the open-door policy of America.

We have dissipated our national resources, and this is the plague that always follows disaster. We moved over the whole virgin country of our Nation like a vast plague of locusts. We cut the timber. We destroyed the streams, and then, after we had exhausted the forests, we went out to my country and plowed up the grass, so that the last vestige of natural resources was taken from the face of this Nation. This was done to build up the Nation. We looked upon any nation that husbanded its natural resources as a country that was undeveloped. If our own resources were not exploited, we pointed our finger and said: "There is some land, there is some timber, there is some prairie sod that has not been devastated. Let us develop it." In this development no cognizance was taken of what future generations would have to live on. When we take into consideration that the whole capital structure of this Nation is built on bonds, whether these bonds be Federal, municipal, industrial, or railroad bonds, they are the backbone of the capital structure. In reality these bonds are a mortgage on the natural resources of this country, a mortgage on the productivity of the soil. If this productivity decreases, the value of the railroad capital structure decreases; the value of the insurance companies' resources from which they pay their claims decreases; and the ability of the Government to operate decreases. So the whole Nation rests not on what we can drain out of the soil, not what we can squeeze out in the shortest number of years, but this is the policy this Nation has followed since its inception. The future happiness and welfare of every man and woman in this country depends on our recognition of the necessity to sustain production in the years to come. The responsibility is ours as Members of Congress, whatever may be the cost, be it one billion or fifty billion dollars, in order to insure the continuance of this Nation and to close the door on the policy of "haste to develop" that up to now has left no room in the picture for the thought of conservation.

Mr. Speaker, we have dredged rivers, we have drained swamps, we have put in roads to help carry the flood waters to the Gulf and the oceans. We have spent over a billion dollars dredging our rivers and harbors in the last 10 years, taking the very lifeblood of the Nation and piling it up in the form of levies. Now, we have a flood in the East. What is going to be the result of that flood? Because there is a bill pending in the Senate we will go over there and mechanically propose to put an end to all floods in the East. The engineers by figuring in exact sums will say: "We will build a dam here and it will take care of so many acres of flood water. We will build another one over here and it will do the same thing." But if we do not look after the areas back of those dams, if we do not carry out a policy as proposed in the agricultural bill that was passed the other day, which provided for the proper handling of land back of these dams, if we do not continue our soil-conservation program and the education of our farmers, the expenditure of one, two, three, or four hundred million dollars will be for monuments to man's stupidity, because in 30 years these dams will be useless. They will be filled with silt. They will be just impediments in the progress of our Nation. But that is the American way of doing things when it comes to dealing with natural resources.

Mr. Speaker, if we can do something immediately, if we can offer something that will show up for this fiscal year, we think we have accomplished a great deal. Are we going to rush in with that thought in mind without thinking about the drainage areas back of these dams and put up these structures which in 30 or 40 years may be absolutely worthless?

I am grateful that we have a party leader that recognizes this problem. His theories may not have been carried out, but he realizes the problem and has made a start. We put an awful burden on the shoulders of Mr. Tugwell when we said, "Yours is the duty of resettlement; yours is the problem of bringing this distressed land back into some useful program and disposing of the poor people who are trying to live on it." What a task for one Government department to restore productivity nature spent centuries in building. Man destroyed these treasures in 100 years. A century of progressive leadership with man aiding Nature will see us on the road back.

I drove down through the Carolinas not so long ago. Every road was filled with trucks carrying chemical fertilizer. The smell filled the air. When you look at the texture of the soil you realize that chemicals can never make this land continue to be productive. Only nature can provide the necessary humus for the correct soil texture.

Farther down, as you approach Florida, the area that was once covered with splendid productive timber was being burned off because the grass would be a little better in the spring. Immediate use of the land is all that is considered, because we maintain that we must have the individual right to despoil this country of all its natural resources. We maintain that the land cannot be taken out and put into Federal reserves. Why, it would take it off the local tax rolls, but year after year more of it is drained of its last productivity until it produces neither revenue for the owner nor revenue for the local entity.

It is my prediction that this Government will have to purchase 100,000,000 acres of land. Who else has the capital? Who else can borrow money at a rate of interest that will allow him to accumulate worthless land that, at best, will require from 5 to 10 years to be brought back to any semblance of productivity. It now furnishes a harbor for the poor tenant farmer to squat on and try to raise just enough to eke out an existence, without any thought of whether it will continue to be a guaranty for the payment of the obligations of this Nation.

I also drove through the old State of Tennessee, and when I saw a farmer plowing up a very steep hillside I got outside and asked, "How long will this field produce?" He said, "Three or four years, and then it will look like the one next to it", and the next field was just a series of gullies, but he said, "The fellow who owns it does not live here and does not know about it, and he has to get something out of the land."

This is the problem that is facing the Nation. We have a system proposed by the Army engineers to expend $1,000,000,000 on reservoirs all over the United States that they state would completely control the lower Mississippi, but because the Army engineers many years ago started out on the proposition that the floods in the States constituted a State proposition or a local proposition, it was held that the water does not become a national proposition until it reaches the lower Mississippi. It then becomes a national problem. So they have patiently expended $292,000,000 since 1928 on works to take care of the water after it gets down there.

The water situation is a national problem in every State in the Union and on every stream. The fact that our cities dispose of their sewage, that should be restored to the soil, by poisoning our streams, killing all the fish, and changing our once clear water into cesspools is only a phase of the price we have paid for individual and State rights to destroy natural resources. If this Congress does not recognize this fact now, it will do so 5 or 10 years later, after the destruction has continued and we have continued to wash this soil on down our polluted rivers and out into the Gulf and the ocean to be picked up by barges and carried out to sea. We are aiding the water to carry out to sea the only guarantee of the future of this country.

How much land do we have, anyway? There is less than 2,000,000,000 acres of land in this Nation. Only 413,000,000 acres of land in the entire Nation is fit for cultivation, and 100,000,000 acres of our total productive land has already been destroyed.

Then you say, "Oh, we can reclaim the deserts." We do not know how long they will be productive after they are reclaimed; but let me tell the House that they contemplate spending, under the program now under way, a billion dollars to reclaim 4,000,000 acres of desert land that nobody knows how long will be productive under water or how much it will produce.

This is not something that is going to affect us in the next century. If the present attitude of saying that we cannot tackle the problem is continued, in 10 years this area of 75,000,000 acres from North Dakota to Texas will be destroyed. Only a part of the picture when you consider the worn-out lands in New England and the South. This is a job for the Congress to tackle in a resettlement program and not for an Under Secretary of Agriculture. Although you must admire his nerve to tackle such a huge program. It is the biggest job that ever faced this Nation.

This desert extends from the North Dakota line down into Texas and it is marching every year. In my lifetime I have seen it come east. I have seen fields that were once beautiful wheat fields now blowing sand, and, of course, it will be just like the floods. When it destroys half of the great grain belt, when it comes down here to Washington and makes it so we can hardly sit in this chamber on account of the infiltration of dust, then we will say that for the next fiscal year we will allow so much money to meet the problem.

The whole thing is going to take a lifetime to solve, and it should be undertaken on a nonpartisan national basis that recognizes that the only agent to solve such a problem is the Federal Government.

If it interferes with exploitation by individuals it will have to interfere; we have given them the cream of the Nation. The open-door policy lauded so highly by Alfred E. Smith in his Washington speech, letting the individual do what he wishes with his own land, has permitted them to take all of the top. After the horse is stolen the Federal Government is going to lock the door. If we do not lock the barn door the barn will be gone. [Applause.]

THE SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Ludlow] for 20 minutes.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the House for its generous courtesy in giving me time to speak on a subject very dear to my heart.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. MAVERICK. I feel inclined to introduce a privileged resolution some time today for Congress to adjourn on the 11th day of May. I think we can plan the work so that we can adjourn at that time. What does the gentleman think of it?

Mr. LUDLOW. I have not had time to think anything about it. [Laughter.] I do have a strong conviction that Congress ought not to adjourn until it does something of a more adequate nature than it has done to keep this Nation out of war. When that is done I think an early adjournment would be advisable, but not until that is done.

Mr. MAVERICK. Does not the gentleman think that we should plan the work so that we can get out as soon as we can?

Mr. LUDLOW. I think that would be wise.

Mr. MAVERICK. Of course; if we plan our work we can finish before May 11. We have the appropriation bills, the antilobbying bill today, the Bankhead tenant bill, and legislation on rural electrification. We ought to have a housing bill, and legislation on natural resources; in any event, we ought to plan our work and get out in a reasonable time instead of staying here on a treadmill. I thank the gentleman for permitting me to take this time, and I am glad to say his work on keeping this Nation out of war is an admirable one.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I have arisen with some temerity, but from a sense of duty, to urge Members of the House of Representatives, with all the strength of argument and power of persuasion I can command to make a move forthwith to force the hand of the upper branch of Congress on legislation to extract the profit from war, thus vindicating the position on war profits taken by the House last year and rescuing from utter abandonment and despair the very wise and salutary movement which this House has started to keep America out of war by removing the profit incentive to war.

The way to rescue anti-war-profits legislation from its perilous position in the Senate and speed it on the way to enactment is for this House to take up and pass House Joint Resolution No. 167, which I have introduced and which provides a certain way to extract the profit from war by constitutional amendment.

Members of the House, I firmly believe, can render a public service of enormous value and vindicate the hopes of the rank and file who want protection from war if they will go to the Speaker's desk and sign discharge petition no. 28, which I have filed under the rules of the House, to bring my war referendum and anti-war-profits joint resolution out of committee and before the House for debate and action. I do not believe there is any more patriotic service a Member of the House could perform at this time than to sign that discharge petition.

If for no other reason, my resolution should be brought out of committee and passed to reaffirm and emphasize the position this House already has taken—and well taken—for anti-war-profits legislation. Over at the other wing of the Capitol they are playing battledore and shuttlecock with the McSwain bill which we passed here to put a curb on war profiteers, and there is every reason to believe it will be allowed to die unless the House does something rather drastic and dramatic to rescue this very vital and important principle. If the House will now pass my resolution for a constitutional amendment which covers the same subject and send it over to the Senate the game of battledore and shuttlecock will cease and we may expect some direct, straightforward performance.

The House ought to take this action. It ought to adopt my resolution. It owes to an expectant and tremendously interested country a duty of using this method of reaffirming its position in favor of taking the profits out of war. This policy of reaching the war evil is distinctly a House policy. The House, having proposed it and adopted it, should not permit it to die like a neglected foundling on the Senate's doorsteps.

The House is the body that history and tradition recognize as being nearest to the rank and file of our countrymen.

It is supposed to reflect, and I believe it does reflect, though sometimes dimly and imperfectly, the hopes and aspirations of the common people. I predict that if this Chamber, which symbolizes popular sovereignty, would pass my anti-war-profits constitutional amendment and send it over to the other body, that body would cease dillydallying and do something to cooperate with the House in keeping America out of war.

The House was everlastingly right when it took its stand last year for removal of the profits from war. It ought to stick to its guns and reaffirm its position by adopting my resolution by an overwhelming and impressive vote. Then we shall get somewhere. Spurred by this demonstration the other body, unless I am mistaken, will then pass either the McSwain bill or my resolution and, in either event, the common people—those who have to suffer and die when war comes—will win a great and significant victory.

Have you ever stopped to consider that over 23,000 American millionaires were made during the World War and that up to date, as shown by official records, one American munitions firm has reaped the dizzy profit of 1,143,725 percent on its original investment? You can see from the amazing hearings of the Nye committee how the bloody business of war fattens the fortunes of those who engage in it. While our boys in the trenches were going through hell itself in 1917 and 1918, the president of a large steel corporation was receiving bonuses totaling $2,887,725 and officials of munitions concerns were drawing salaries that stagger the imagination. Take the profit out of war and there will be few wars.

This House did something very fine; it did something very grand; it wrote an epochal chapter in history when it rallied at the last session to the principle of extracting the swollen profits from war. Let us not run away from that great principle like whipped dogs. Remembering our obligations to humanity and the country's eagerness to keep out of war, let us stand by that principle and revitalize it by passing the resolution I have introduced.

I have arisen to point out exactly the action I think should be taken by this House to register another milestone—an important milestone—in the direction of permanent peace.

The time to act is now and the course to be followed is plain.

Responsive to the almost universal sentiment of America, which is opposed to allowing selfish influences to maneuver this country into war for the sake of profit, this House of Representatives on April 9 last, passed the McSwain bill to take the profit out of war. The unanimity and determination with which the House went on record against war profiteering are shown by the report of that day's proceedings. Of 383 Members who were present and who responded to the roll call, 368 voted for the McSwain anti-war-profits bill and only 15 voted against it.

I wish that the time allotted to me today would permit me to quote the many eloquent speeches made by Members of the House in that debate denouncing war profits as a cause of war. Many of them are gems worthy of being embalmed in permanent literature. One of the most impressive of the numerous very striking utterances was by our able colleague, Representative FRED J. Sisson, of New York, who asked the question, "Who won the World War, anyway?" and then answered it thus:

Why, the war profiteers are the only ones who won the World War, because they added to their swollen fortunes; they increased the wealth and power of a few men at the cost of millions of heartaches and a hell of suffering beyond the power of any tongue to describe.

In passing the McSwain bill the House proved in a fine way its responsiveness to the universal demand that the Seventy-fourth Congress shall do something to protect our boys from being dragged into slaughter pens in foreign countries. It recognized in a very impressive manner the fact that if the profit is taken out of war there will be few wars.

McSWAIN BILL PIGEONHOLED

But what has happened to the McSwain anti-war-profits bill? It will soon be a year since that most meritorious measure, in which rest the hope and faith of the American people for protection from unjustifiable wars, passed this body.

Two days after its passage here it was read in another body and referred to the special committee on investigation of the munitions industry. That committee held it 29 days and referred it to the Committee on Military Affairs. That committee held it 13 days and referred it to the Committee on Finance. While the last-named committee from time to time makes some show of activity in regard to the measure, my firm conviction is that its final reference is going to be to a pigeonhole, where it will be resting when this Seventy-fourth Congress adjourns sine die unless this House, by some wise and energetic action, can do something to retrieve this very vital principle from the danger it is in of being submerged by approaching adjournment.

Now, I believe that the House can act wisely and that it can act effectively and that it should act as quickly as possible to save this situation.

On February 14, 1935, now considerably more than a year ago, I introduced a proposed anti-war-profits amendment to the Constitution of the United States (House Joint Resolution No. 167), and I quote the second section of the proposed constitutional amendment—the section that deals with war profits—as follows:

SEC. 2. Whenever war is declared the President shall immediately conscript and take over for use by the Government all the public and private war properties, yards, factories, and supplies, fixing the compensation for private properties temporarily employed for the war period at a rate not in excess of 4 per centum, based on tax values assessed in the year preceding the war.

The proposed constitutional anti-war-profits amendment, which I introduced, has now been pending more than 13 months before the House Committee on the Judiciary without action. Availing myself of my parliamentary rights I have filed at the Speaker's desk a petition to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from further control over House Joint Resolution No. 167, to the end that that very important resolution may be brought forward from the committee's pigeonhole into the light of the floor of this House for consideration and debate and action on its merits.

If it comes out of the committee I shall be entirely willing that it shall be thrown wide open for amendment. I have no pride of authorship and I will gladly accept any perfecting amendments that will not destroy the purposes of the resolution. In the resolution I have introduced, the anti-war-profits section is joined with a section providing for a popular vote on a declaration of war. If in the judgment of the House the two propositions should not be joined I shall agree to having them segregated for separate votes.

HOUSE CAN SAVE THE SITUATION

The point I am leading up to—and I believe it is an important and vital point in the achievement of peace legislation in this Congress—is that if the House will now take up and pass my proposed anti-war-profits constitutional amendment and send it over to another body, that action will most surely stir the other body out of its apparent attitude of indifference and lethargy, and then we may look forward to some action at this session to take the profit out of war, either by statute or by constitutional amendment.

Personally, I think a constitutional amendment is much to be preferred, as the selfish forces that sometimes maneuver a country into war have such control when the war stage is set as to enable them to wipe off from the statute books instantaneously any statutes that interfere with their nefarious purposes. They could not get rid of a constitutional amendment so conveniently and easily. Only a constitutional amendment has the permanency and stability necessary to meet this situation.

HAMILTON FISH'S SPEECH

I wonder if the Democratic side of the House, to which I belong, is going to pass unnoticed the sharp and stirring challenge issued by the gentleman from New York, Mr. HAMILTON FISH, in his very able speech in this chamber on March 11. The gentleman from New York is a very vigorous speaker and he never anesthetizes the subjects he operates on. He is a good deal of a partisan and sometimes does not rub the fur of our Democratic friends the right way, but I want to say this about him: He is also a great deal of a patriot and I admire him immensely, not only for his courage and ability, but also for the fact that although he was born to the purple, he takes the people's view of these great human questions. He is in favor of a referendum on war because he thinks that those who have to suffer, and if need be to die, and to bear the awful burdens and costs of war, should have something to say as to whether war shall be declared.

He also believes in taking the profits out of war. Mr. FISH is one of the signers of the discharge petition I have filed to bring my war referendum and antiwar profits resolution out of committee to the floor of the House for action, and I thank him kindly for his valuable support. In his speech in the House on March 11 Mr. FISH spoke approvingly of the McSwain bill to take the profit out of war—the bill that is now being put to sleep in another body—and the following colloquy ensued:

Mr. McFARLANE. Does not the gentleman know that we passed that legislation last session, and it is buried in a pigeonhole over in the Senate, where it will probably die?

Mr. FISH. I knew that. I am glad the gentleman stated it; but, after all, you have a Democratic Congress and a Democratic Senate. You say to me, "Bring it out." How could I bring it out? You are responsible for legislation. You have a 3-to-1 vote in the Senate and a 3-to-1 vote here. I believe that bill would be a great deterrent to war. I do not mind saying that I loathe and abhor war. There is almost nothing that I would not do to prevent war or to make it less likely. Take the profit out of war, so in another war industry will not make all these unlimited millions. I believe in the incentive of the profit system and in the American industrial system based upon private initiative and reasonable profit; but, if we do not take the profit out of war in future wars, particularly the munitions industry, then I am for Government ownership and operation of the munition industry in America.

CANNOT THROTTLE THESE MEASURES AND KEEP FAITH

Mr. FISH is right. We of the Democratic Party do have an overwhelming majority in both branches of Congress. On us rests not the entire responsibility, but the principal responsibility, for legislation. If we are to throttle these great measures that are intended to keep America out of war, and are to permit them to be killed in committees, fiddling while the world burns, and the dreaded time of American involvement draws ever nearer, the American people will hold us primarily responsible, though they will not excuse Members of the minority party who might be assisting us in the passage of this legislation.

OVER 1,100,000 PERCENT PROFIT

Take the profit out of war and there will be few wars. I repeat that aphorism because it is so everlastingly true. If you want to get a vivid picture of how profits enter into the fomentation of wars, read the hearings before the Nye investigating committee, which comprise one of the most shameful records ever written into legislative annals, showing how greedy, selfish interests have thumbed their noses at solemn treaties and embargoes and have deliberately incited nations to war for the purpose of coining filthy profits out of human blood, the profits in the case of one company rising to over 1,100,000 percent on the original investment!

"Again we dream as war clouds gather", declares that practical old warrior, Gen. James E. Harbord, in a recent magazine article. Let us quit dreaming and do something to justify the confidence and the expectations of those who sent us here and who are looking to us to keep our fine American boys out of the hell of foreign wars.

DISCHARGE PETITION NO. 28 MAKES ACTION ON WAR PROFITS LEGISLATION POSSIBLE

I plead with Members of the House to sign discharge petition no. 28. Let us get my anti-war-profits constitutional amendment out of committee and pass it and send it to the other body to let that other body know that we were in earnest and meant business when we passed the McSwain anti-war-profits bill. In that way we may hope for some action at this session in line with our promise to the American people to do something to keep our country out of war. Time is fleeting rapidly, and if we do not do this the Seventy-fourth Congress will come to an end with our promise unredeemed and with a mark of disgrace against our record which time will not efface. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] for 20 minutes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in my time I may be permitted to read a letter from the Comptroller, and also the extracts from a letter from the A. A. A.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. MAVERICK. It is my intention to introduce a privileged resolution that Congress shall adjourn on the 11th day of May. I want to help establish a sort of finish-our-business-and-adjourn consciousness. What does the gentleman think about it?

Mr. TABER. Congress had better adjourn before they appropriate and obligate all the money in the Treasury and all the country can bear.

Mr. MAVERICK. Does the gentleman think that we can do it so as to adjourn on May 11? [Laughter.]

Mr. TABER. At the rate they are going now they will have appropriated and authorized four or five times as much as there is in the Treasury.

Mr. MAVERICK. In any event, the gentleman does not think that May 11 will be too late, does he?

Mr. TABER. It will be too late unless you stop this spending business.

Mr. Speaker, on the 21st of February I introduced House Resolution 426, calling upon the Secretary of Agriculture to furnish the House of Representatives forthwith the name and address and the amount paid to each producer receiving more than $2,000 in each calendar year, pursuant to the A. A. A. That resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture of the House. That committee communicated with the A. A. A. Mr. Chester Davis, the head of that organization, replied to them—the date is not here, but the reply appears on page 3064 of the Record—indicating that—

Our comptroller estimates that it would take more than 6 weeks working his staff in two shifts to get this data. During this time about 80 percent of the machine equipment of the comptroller's office would be tied up. This would mean a practical stop in getting out checks to farmers on payments not yet made in connection with 1935 program. The expense, of course, would be great. We also doubt whether any really useful purpose could be served by gathering this data. The records, of course, show the amount of payments made by commodities.

The Committee on Agriculture on March 2 brought in a report recommending, in view of that letter, that the information be not demanded. A little later Senator VANDENBERG introduced in another body a resolution calling for practically the same information. That resolution was referred to the Senate Committee on Agriculture, and last week one day Senator VANDENBERG commented very forcefully upon the failure and the unwillingness of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration to furnish the information.

Following the receipt of that information, I began an investigation to find out how near the Secretary of Agriculture and the A. A. A. came to telling the truth. Secretary Wallace gave an interview which appeared in the Baltimore Sun of yesterday, stating that it would require the whole force of the Comptroller General's office for 6 months to work that situation out. What is the whole force of the Comptroller General's office? Four thousand one hundred and fifty employees. I took the matter up with the Comptroller General's office, and I have received a letter from the Comptroller General's office, showing conclusively just what it would take to get the information. These checks that are paid to these people are perforated and punched by the check-printing machines that the Government uses. As I understand it, the Government has 10 of these over in the Division of Disbursements of the Treasury Department. Some of the time these machines have been working 24 hours a day on three shifts. At the present time I understand they are working about one and a half shifts, and I read from a letter which I received from the Comptroller General under date of March 26. It came in yesterday afternoon.

It is estimated by a representative of my office with some experience with these cards and their use that by use of high-speed punch-card sorting machines the punch cards for payments of $1,000 or more could be segregated at the rate of approximately 147,000 per 7-hour day. Upon an estimated total of 25,000,000 cards for all payments on all commodities, it would require approximately 170 days of 7 hours each for one machine and one operator, or 17 days for 10 machines and operators.

By putting on three shifts in 17 days, or practically 3 weeks, all those checks of $1,000 and over can be segregated. As near as I can get at it, there are perhaps 20,000 to 25,000 of those payments of over $1,000 each. It is a fact that you can get at the payments of over $1,000 more easily than you can at payments over $2,000, because the number of figures involved on the checks governs the group into which checks can be segregated by the check-sorting machines. I quote further from the letter:

It is his view that segregation by payments of $1,000 would be better adapted to the sorting machines than segregation by payments of $2,000.

He further estimates that from the cards for payments of $1,000 or more, thus segregated, such payments could be listed by tabulating machines at the rate of approximately 480 per hour for one machine and operator.

That means that these items could be listed in approximately 50 hours, or possibly 60 hours of labor, to be on the safe side, by perhaps two people working for a week, and the contracts could undoubtedly be examined in another week by four or five people.

I appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that that is not just the information that was asked, but if the Secretary of Agriculture had wanted to give the Congress the information to which it is entitled, he could have told us that, or otherwise he did not make investigation enough or did not know enough about his own business to be competent to be running it. Since I made this request—and I made it because I had information of some payments of large amounts—many others have come to light. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROSSION] disclosed some. Senator VANDENBERG has disclosed some. It is perfectly apparent to me that there is a desire on the part of the A. A. A. not to take the Congress and the people of the United States into its confidence in this matter, and that they have something to cover up. I believe that the Congress should assert its rights and get what it is entitled to. [Applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to be helpful about this matter in getting at the truth, and I shall recite what I read yesterday about a gentleman who came before your committee and told the truth.

There was a man named Hagood,
Who told the truth as he should;
But for telling the truth
He was banished, forsooth,
So telling the truth don't pay good.

Mr. TABER. Well, I believe the people of the United States will insist on General Hagood receiving his rights and being restored to duty in the Army of the United States. [Applause.]

Now, frankly, if the Department of Agriculture wanted to be frank and square with the people of the United States and give them this information, they could do so, and do so at a very moderate expense. Let me say further it is apparent that this A. A. A. has been used for the purpose of making large payments to certain producers, away out of line, instead of being used as a matter of agricultural relief for the poor farmer. I do not believe the Department of Agriculture and the A. A. A. should be permitted longer to cover up their iniquities.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. Is it not also a fact that by limiting acreage and restricting production, thousands of sharecroppers and tenant farmers in the South have been thrown out of employment and placed upon the relief rolls, whereas the absent landlord who lives in New York or New Jersey has received vast benefits?

Mr. TABER. More money than he could have gotten out of the farm by operating it, and he has thrown his own help on relief.

Mr. SHORT. I can corroborate that statement by saying that farmers south of my district have received as much as the land was worth, by not working it.

Mr. TABER. For 1 year?

Mr. SHORT. For 1 year.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. Two southern universities, through their research departments, have found, after thorough investigation, that 5,000,000 sharecroppers have been placed on the relief rolls.

Mr. TABER. That is one of the ways in which the number of unemployed in this country has continued to rise.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Has the gentleman any definite information with reference to the story that is going around here that a Member of Congress received $225,000 for curtailing production?

Mr. TABER. No.

Mr. KNUTSON. And that an insurance company received $700,000?

Mr. TABER. Well, if that is the situation, the country ought to know it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. In a few moments. There is a tremendous interest in this country. I have seen editorials in many of the leading papers. They cannot understand, if this outfit over at the A. A. A. is playing the game with both hands on the table, why they do not come across and give the information to the public.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I think our friend from New York is the proper man to administer this whipping to Secretary Wallace, a Republican. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is a distinguished leader of the Republicans on his side of the House. The President of the United States has to depend upon agents to administer his program and to carry out his will. When his agents are not efficient they make a mess of administering. Unfortunately, instead of choosing a loyal, efficient Democrat, the President saw fit to select a leading Republican to put in charge of the Department of Agriculture, Henry Wallace, and I think the gentleman is the proper Republican to do the whipping. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. TABER. Now, the gentleman is just right in every respect, except that Henry Wallace is not a Republican. He has not voted for a Republican candidate for President, according to my information, in 15 years.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, look in Who's Who and the history of past national Republican conventions and you will find that Henry Wallace's whole family have been partisan Republicans back for generations, back to the time when the memory of man runneth not to the contrary.

Mr. TABER. Henry Wallace is one of those fellows who was brought up by a good family, but who had more education than he had capacity to absorb, and has been a fluke. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. My colleague is quite right. Henry Wallace is now and has been a fluke.

Mr. TABER. I hope that just what little I have said on the actual facts as to what this sort of thing would cost and how long it would take will arouse Congress and the country to demand their rights to find out who is the beneficiary of the taxes that have been placed upon the people, and whether or not and to what extent and how enormously this proposition under the administration of Henry Wallace has been a racket. I believe it has been a racket right along.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. This is an open book, is it not, in all of the counties of the United States?

Mr. TABER. It should be.

Mr. PIERCE. It is today.

Mr. TABER. It should be, but it is not.

Mr. PIERCE. These checks went back to the local communities. It is an open book at Pendleton, Oreg., and every county where these checks went. What is your object, except political?

Mr. TABER. My object is to find out the truth, and we do not know the truth and we cannot get it the way the gentleman can. It is absolutely impossible.

Mr. PIERCE. You can communicate with the boards that handle these checks. It is all an open book. The gentleman is just making a political speech.

Mr. TABER. I refuse to yield further, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PIERCE. It does not mean anything.

Mr. TABER. I refuse to yield further. It is the custom of those who desire to cover up their own iniquities to say that a man is playing politics when he wants to find out the truth. Now, that is the situation here. Let us find the truth. Let the politics fall where they may. If it falls on me, let it fall, but let us find the truth and do not try to dodge your responsibilities here in this House. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has expired.

THE FLOOD IN CONNECTICUT

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a copy of a speech I made on the air the other evening.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include my radio address on the subject, The Flood in Connecticut, delivered on March 24, 1936, over the Yankee Network System, from Station WJSV.

I had intended to talk this evening on a subject which I have been studying for years, namely, the part which is played in economic activity by the small commercial enterprises of our Nation and the important contribution to reemployment and recovery which it is in their power to make.

I was putting the finishing touches to my talk last Friday around noon when a Washington paper was brought to me, shrieking this headline across the front page: "Hartford Inundated!" I was stunned. I grabbed for the telephone, frantically called my office in Hartford. The operator told me no calls could go through to Hartford for the rest of the day. "What about tomorrow?", I asked. "I can't promise that", was her reply. I waited no longer. I took the train to Hartford that night.

The next morning I looked out from the station platform on Asylum Street, one of the leading thoroughfares of the city. I saw something I never expected would meet my sight. Asylum Street, running by our beautiful capitol grounds, was a sea of water. Guests were leaving the Hotel Bond, our leading hostelry, in rowboats, which carried them directly to the station. I had to use planks to cross the street from the railroad station. Rain was pouring. There were no taxis. The great Bond Hotel stood as though it were a tall building set in the middle of a lake. I made my way to my office, which fortunately was not flooded. But as far as my eye could see the other end of Market Street was a canal. The old Brown School that I attended as a boy was surrounded completely by water. Men and women bewildered, knowing not what to do, passed to and fro, silent, sad. Business was at a standstill. Stores were closed. The electric power had gone out of commission. All lights were out. Homes that depended upon oil for heat were cold. There was no refrigeration. Elevators were not running. I had gone to Hartford, expecting to see water along the Connecticut River front but I never expected to find it covering the heart of the city.

Soldiers and policemen patrolled the streets. The fire department headquarters had been flooded. The engines and apparatus were moved from the headquarters and were filling the street close to my office. Across the street, the police station was crowded with hundreds appealing hopelessly that the police might do something about the flood. Mothers of children and babes in arms, fathers asking for doctors for dear ones who were ill from exposure and cold. I went to the State Armory where Adj. Gen. William F. Ladd was in command of the Army and Naval forces. There I was assigned a naval aide and provided with passes to take me by the lines that had been laid out for the protection of the people and began a tour of the city and adjacent territory.

Down at the South Meadows were dikes, the building of which had been started by Samuel Colt back in 1854. They had withstood every flood, big and little. They had been supplemented by the best engineering skill obtainable. Saturday morning they were far under the swirling, rushing water. The South Meadows was a lake. The new sewage disposal plant, just completed by the metropolitan district commission was completely submerged. The Church of Good Shepherd had water almost to its roof. The famous Colt's Patent Firearms factory was half way submerged.

My naval aide and I got into a boat. Our boatman wound his way in and out cautiously. We had to be extra careful. There were the wires overhead which we must not touch for fear of their being charged. Water was running over land that had never before been submerged. We had to be careful also because of automobiles that were caught, fences, and low sheds under us.

The second story of a 16-apartment house was level with our boat at one point. We climbed into the house. In the top story we found furniture, bric-a-brac, bedding, all the goods of the tenants piled high in the hallways, in spare rooms, and on the stairways. In the hurry to save these goods there was much breakage. Upholstery was ripped and torn. The tenants had fled. There were hundreds of houses like that one.

Back to our boat, and farther out we rode. We came upon the shed of a brickyard that had come all the way down from Windsor, 10 miles up the river. There is grim humor in a brickyard's floating away, but to me it was stark tragedy. The owner's all was invested in that brickyard. We came upon tons of floating lumber which had been the property of a boyhood friend of mine. We came upon great gasoline-storage tanks which the floods had torn away from their foundations and sent hurtling down the river, ripping and tearing and destroying everything in their path. A Government cutter was doing great service in forcing these tanks up on to the ground where they might be anchored and kept from continuing in their path of destruction. Every store leading toward the Connecticut River, beginning with a few feet below Main Street, was submerged.

An automobile trip through the city brought me next to the municipal building, two sides of which were completely surrounded by water. The valuable records of many years had been taken out of the vaults and basement to save them from destruction. The mayor's office was open all night, where people sought refuge and help. I went down Morgan Street, the main thoroughfare leading to the million-dollar Memorial Bridge that spans the Connecticut. There I had to leave my car in order to proceed farther toward the bridge. We took a lifeboat provided by the Connecticut Navy Militia which was being used to ferry doctors and others on important business.

We rowed over the bridge where ordinarily we rode over in an automobile. We passed the great freight yards of the railroads. Hundreds of cars filled with perishable goods were almost completely submerged. I turned to the right and looked down Front Street, one of the important East Side business streets of Hartford. Every store was flooded, the tenements completely evacuated. The street was supposedly protected against floods by dikes built in connection with the Memorial Bridge. I am told that an owner of a small store gave a truckman and his assistants $200 to move his stock to a place where he thought it would be safe. Overnight the water reached the supposedly safe storage and engulfed that also. On the crest of the Memorial Bridge I looked up and down the river. Here I was told that the records of the floods in the Connecticut River Valley kept since March 18, 1639, had reached their height on this day. There have been many great floods but never one approaching this.

We rowed among the houses of East Hartford. From the East Hartford side of the bridge to Church Corner, a distance of over a mile, the entire boulevard was completely covered by water. We stopped at the tallest building in that district, climbed a fire-escape ladder, and from the roof viewed a scene of devastation such as had never before been seen in that district.

I was amazed at the havoc wrought. Up the river, jammed against the Willimantic Railroad bridge, were whole houses that had been swept from their foundations into the river and were bumping against the railroad bridge, seriously endangering it.

Again, great oil tanks, battered, were floating down the river. A heavy stillness like the quiet of a desolate cemetery hung over everything. The only motion was that of the water. Here there was no human activity. I turned back. I had seen enough.

In Hartford, everywhere people stopped me, each with stories more horrible than the other. A mother with a babe on one arm was leading a child with the other hand, talking with a girl about 14. I heard the young girl say, "Perhaps my cousin can take you in." This is the plight of 10,000.

I was told of small businessmen and industrialists who suddenly had lost everything. Hopelessness was everywhere, yet there was a spirit of determination and courage which was thrilling. Friday night, Saturday night, Sunday night the city was in total darkness. There was no heat, no hot food, no hot water. We moved by flashlight and by candlelight.

That afternoon I attended a meeting in the Governor's office. There were gathered those men and women who always come forward in great crises, ready to give of themselves for their fellow-men who need their help. The American Red Cross, the health departments, the welfare departments, the United States Army were represented. Engineers, doctors, civic leaders, businessmen were there. We did not discuss the havoc, but instead what must now be done for relief and rehabilitation. Everyone was ready.

Everyone was anxious to do something. Other conferences were held, one at my own office. Among those who were present were Charles A. Goodwin, chairman of the metropolitan district commission; Roscoe Clark, engineer for the metropolitan district commission; Caleb Saville, city engineer; Judge George H. Day, chairman of the board of police commissioners; Gen. S. H. Wadhams, chairman of the State water commission; Judge Solomon Elsner, former corporation counsel for the city of Hartford; Maj. Mason J. Young, district engineer of the War Department, of Providence, R. I., who especially made the trip to Hartford and gave valuable counsel.

The one question asked by all was, What are you going to do to prevent another such catastrophe? Flood havoc can be prevented. When will America rise to her responsibility and take measures which will prevent and curb the devastation of floods?

I learned that one small hospital on the very day of high waters had taken in 41 patients in spite of the fact that the hospital was already overcrowded. I was told of the illness, the disease which was overtaking the people as the floodwaters began to recede. I was told of the lives that had been lost, the property and business ruined, of the people thrown out of work because their places of employment had been flooded out.

The necessity for coordinated, cooperative action in the way of relief was forcibly driven home. The value of the experience of the Federal relief agencies has been proven. No time is wasted in first investigating conditions. The emergency is met immediately. In certain parts of the country, even as I am talking, the flood has not reached its crest. But already in the areas where the flood has passed through, the forces of relief and rehabilitation are at work. The Red Cross and the Surplus Commodities Food Corporation are rushing to the stricken areas additional supplies of food, equipment, clothing, and bedding. Officials and employees of the relief agencies are already working in the stricken zones. Concerted and coordinated action from Washington is disseminating help throughout every area. Appeals for aid coming from every section of the country include many from men who during the past 12 months have been crying aloud against the relief that has been given the unfortunate by the Government. Today, finding themselves in a severe plight, their criticism against the humane activities of this Government have been silenced in their own plea for help from the floodwaters.

Flood devastation, like bank failures, like unemployment, has presented a serious and menacing recurring problem. Efforts to control it have been made since the beginning of time. Surveys of the great tributaries of our country have resulted in suggested flood-control projects, recognized as imperative by the engineers of this Nation, but which were not undertaken because of the refusal to spend the funds.

Thus countless projects for flood prevention which have been recommended were never undertaken. The momentary loss resulting from the present flood alone would have paid a great part of the cost of this prevention work. The loss of lives, health, homes, business, jobs, because business was ruined, is inestimable.

Every time a dollar was spent on flood prevention there were those who protested the spending of the money. Vast damage has been prevented in those areas where flood-control construction has been completed. But the big jobs, carefully worked out, have never been started.

It is unfortunate that it took this catastrophe to bring us all to a realization that something must be done to avoid, or at least to ameliorate, flood conditions in the future in the Connecticut Valley.

We must get at the root of the problem. Expensive dikes are not the solution. The splendid dike system in southern Hartford rose many feet above the level of any flood previously recorded. It succumbed to this one.

The problem must be met by prevention along the source streams throughout New England.

The Government engineers have already developed complete plans for the construction of 33 storage reservoirs to be located along the Connecticut River and tributary streams in New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Vermont, and Connecticut. These reservoirs would greatly reduce the peril of future floods. Plans are so far advanced that work could be begun immediately upon the construction of 10 of these reservoirs.

The engineers of the War Department have found that these reservoirs may be operated so as to reconcile the interests of flood control and power. On the one hand flood devastation would be prevented and curbed; on the other hand additional force would be given to power operations. Sanitary and health conditions would be improved.

The 33 reservoirs could be constructed at an estimated cost of $43,000,000, which includes the cost of acquiring the land. To construct the 10 reservoirs suggested as the initial part of the program would cost approximately $13,393,000, which sum also includes the acquisition of the land.

According to the recommendation made by the War Department, it is suggested that the Government pay one-half the cost of constructing the reservoirs, or $5,000,000. It is up to the States to do the rest.

I hope conferences will soon be held by representatives of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Vermont, and Connecticut to form a compact and agree as to the division of the cost.

But in the event that there is likely to be a delay because of prolonged discussion and argument, because of disagreement as to the share of the expense, I hope that the Federal Government will assume the entire expense of constructing these initial 10 reservoirs, plans for which have been fully completed.

The property damage alone in New England resulting from this flood would more than pay for the entire cost of constructing the 33 reservoirs, which have been recommended by the engineers of the War Department. The loss of lives, homes, business, employment, health, the cost of rehabilitation of property which wasn't entirely damaged, the inconvenience and terror to which the people were subjected—these cannot be counted in dollars.

In this day and age, with the science of engineering so perfected that floods can be controlled, there is no excuse for the havoc which is being wrought in our land today. We cannot stop the rush of waters. We can stop or at least ameliorate the devastation that they wreak. It is up to the people to demand that flood-prevention work be immediately undertaken. I call upon you, the people of New England, to demand that this be done. When the Governors, the legislators, and other officers of your State find that you, the people, demand an end of floods, there will be an end of floods.

It has unfortunately remained for this catastrophe to overtake approximately one-third of the States of the Union, the most populous States, for the Nation to awake startlingly to the fact that we may no longer put off the construction of reservoirs, dams, and dikes, to insofar as we can combat the force of nature, keep our rivers from turning into forces of destruction.

MEMORIAL EXERCISES

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 467

Resolved, That on Tuesday, April 21, 1936, immediately after the approval of the Journal, the House shall stand at recess for the purpose of holding the memorial services as arranged by the Committee on Memorials, under the provisions of clause 40-A of rule XI. The order of exercises and proceedings of the service shall be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and all Members shall be given the privilege of extending their remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. At the conclusion of the proceedings the Speaker shall call the House to order, and then, as a further mark of respect to the memories of the deceased, he shall declare the House adjourned.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to; and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the gentleman going to talk about?

Mr. MAVERICK. I am going to talk about when we ought to adjourn. I am not going to offer the privileged resolution to which I referred earlier. This will save time. I should like to talk about 2 minutes. This will result in the saving of about 40 minutes for a roll call. I am giving a discount of time there of about 98 percent.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I object. I think the gentleman has made his speech twice this morning.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, unless the gentleman has some particular reason, I trust he will not object. This is a privileged resolution. The gentleman from Texas, of course, has the right to offer it. It will save a good deal of time if the gentleman from Michigan does not object.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the gentleman from Texas has any right to stand up here and say he is going to have a roll call if he does not get unanimous consent.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to be lectured by a Republican. I did not say that. What I said was that "I am not going to offer" the resolution. But since I cannot offer a short explanation, I will offer the resolution for the Record to show we ought to adjourn in a reasonable time.

Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution. I have as much right to offer it as has any other Member, and the gentleman from Michigan knows I have this right.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MAVERICK submits the following concurrent resolution:

"House Concurrent Resolution 46

"Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall adjourn on Monday, the 11th day of May 1936; that when they adjourn on said day they stand adjourned sine die."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to lay the resolution on the table.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that a quorum is not present and challenge the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw it; but I am going to offer the resolution next week.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is withdrawn.

The motion to lay the resolution on the table was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HOME MERCHANTS ARE OUR NEIGHBORS AND FRIENDS—CONGRESS MUST PROTECT THEIR INTERESTS

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on legislation reported out by the Judiciary Committee known as the Patman-Utterback bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, we have at last gotten favorable action on our home merchants bill, H. R. 8442, introduced June 11, 1935, by our distinguished colleague from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]. The Judiciary Committee has just ordered a favorable report on it, which will be prepared promptly and in a few days filed by our friend from Iowa [Mr. UTTERBACK].

ONCE UPON A TIME

I can remember through the days of long ago, when our home merchants were the leading, substantial citizens in our towns and cities. Their money was deposited in local banks. Their profits were invested in their home town. They were actively identified with the local churches, fraternal lodges, and civic associations. All of their employees were local citizens thoroughly identified with the best interests, progress, and growth of the community.

CROWDED OUT ONE BY ONE

Then monopolies began to operate. The retail business became organized and controlled by officials of high finance in New York and other large cities. They had unlimited means. They could buy in trainload lots. They could afford to sell certain staples far below what same cost the local merchant, and it was only a question of time when many of the home merchants were forced out of business. One by one they had to quit. Many lost their investments. Many were ruined. They were supplanted by strangers. Only a few have been able to keep their doors open. By passing this bill, Congress will grant them lawful protection. Congress will give the home merchant another chance. Congress will then say to monopolies "Let our home merchants alone; you cannot run them out of business."

ECONOMIC CRISES IN GREECE AND ROME

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the depression, and to include therein a letter from Dr. Arthur Patch McKinley which I found extremely interesting and which I should like to have published in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to include the letter to which he has referred?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, for some time I have had in my hands a memorandum on the methods used by certain ancient states in facing economic crises. I have always been an interested student of history and this material appealed to me from the historical standpoint, also, as of practical value in our present economic difficulties. Our so-called "depression" has gone on now 6 years, without the discovery of any real remedy, and it is my opinion that we may as well turn to history and study what was accomplished by the Romans, people so like us in many ways. The very striking parallel between Roman civilization and our own is brought out most effectively in Ferrero's History of Rome. It is, of course, essential that in any comparison we should note the difference between a civilization built on slavery and one built on machinery. The difference, however, is not so great as to destroy the value of comparative study of these crises.

Both ancient countries had an economic structure top-heavy with debt. The author of the memorandum to which I refer is Dr. Arthur Patch McKinley, professor in the University of California, at Los Angeles, and author of that delightful volume on Cicero, entitled "Letters of a Roman Gentleman." In that book he presented the difficulties that came to Rome from her financial dealings with the "allies", basing his comment on that experience of Rome. He suggested that if our own State Department and foreign investment bankers were not careful about placing their foreign loans, we might have the same experience Rome had. That warning was written in 1926.

The author is convinced that what we need is some immediate action to bring about a proper relation between the debts and capital structure of our country. I strongly recommend study of the provisions made by Caesar allowing interest payments to be credited on principal, and for real property valuation in liquidations. Whatever may be the opinions of my colleagues on the questions of inflation and deflation, I feel sure that this memorandum by a student of ancient history will be found entertaining and suggestive. I am not ready to go full length with my friend when he suggests that we knock off 40 percent of obligations, but it makes one reflect on the possible necessities we face unless we accept the fact of a changed economic order. I therefore insert it as part of my remarks, and ask unanimous consent that it may be included in the RECORD with this brief statement.

MEMORANDUM ON ECONOMIC CRISES IN GREECE AND ROME

You suggest that the experience of Greece and Rome may throw some light on the problem of what to do when the debt situation in a country has come to the place that the very life of the nation is at stake. In reply to this question I refer you to the legislation of Solon at Athens and to the Licinian laws of Rome, 377-357 B. C., and to the financial legislation of Caesar in 48 B. C.

By way of preface, a word about the social setting for these several occasions will help. At Athens, owing to wars and debt, conditions had become so perilous that all classes turned to Solon and gave him carte blanche to handle the situation. Rome of the fourth century was an heir to the social collapse that followed close on the expulsion of the Etruscan kings in 509 B. C. The Etruscans had made Rome into a thriving metropolis. With the destruction of their industrial edifice by the restoration of the noncommercially minded Latins, great numbers of citizens found themselves without any means of support. This condition obtained for nearly 150 years, with a gradual readjustment of the city to the new economic point of view until Rome reverted to its former status (before the incoming of the Etruscans) and became hardly more than a country village. Meanwhile the less favored classes kept pressing for social and political opportunity. In successive stages they finally won the latter, and came in a position to claim the former. Then a champion of the plebs arose in the form of the Tribune Licinius, who in 367 B. C. put through the bills referred to above.

Caesar's legislation of 48 B. C. was an outcome of an orgy of speculation following upon the Second Punic War and resulting in more than 100 years of deflation, most of which was one long agony of social struggles with the attendant phenomenon of crushing debt. At last, affairs muddled through into Caesar's dictatorship and his reform measures.

With this preliminary discussion in mind, we now pass on to the remedies applied to these intolerable conditions. Solon solved the problem by canceling all debts secured either by mortgage or personal security. He also inflated the currency so that the mina of 73 drachma now had 100. There is some dispute as to how this ancient tradition of Solon's financial reforms should be interpreted; but suffice it to say that he found a debt-ridden country and, if we may include the reforms of Pisistratus a few years later, left it so well reorganized from the debt point of view that in all the centuries to come his descendants did not have recourse to any further impairing of contracts or to tampering with the money standard.

At Rome, the Licinian laws of 377-357 provided that the principal of a loan should be reduced by the interest that had been already paid. Consequently (352 B. C.) a commission of five was appointed to liquidate the mass of outstanding accounts. This commission arranged for the payment of debts from public funds, substituting the state, with proper precautions, for the private creditor. They also paid off creditors with the goods of debtors, but took care that such goods should be taken at a fair valuation. Caesar, in his reorganization of finances, also allowed interest already paid to count against the principal. Debtors could also liquidate by handing over their real property to the creditors, and that, too, not at the vastly depreciated current value, but at the rate obtaining before the war. He arranged for arbitration in cases of dispute. To force money into circulation he allowed no one to hold more than $2,400 in cash. Caesar did this in 11 days.

Incidentally, it may be remarked that Sparta once was forced to a repudiation of debts. This was accomplished through a division of land among the people, just as the French did after the Revolution. It should also be noted that all these solutions of social bankruptcies were followed, whether in consequence or not, by long periods of great social prosperity. If it had not been for Solon's reforms, the Athenian democracy with its 100 years of transcendent glory could never have been. The 150 years following the Licinian legislation was the great period of the Roman Republic, just as likewise the 200 years subsequent to Caesar were the most prosperous centuries of the Roman Empire. Sparta prospered under the laws of Lycurgus for 500 years.

It is also interesting to note the modernity of some of the preceding measures: Inflation of currency, Government credit for refunding, commissions for execution and arbitration, financial dictatorships, post-war deflations as causes of social bankruptcies, and antihoarding provisions.

It is a great temptation for the student of ancient history to apply these experiences of the ancients to our own predicament and suggest that we might take the economic bull by the horns and knock off at one stroke 40 percent, say, of all obligations, mortgages, accounts, bonds, including war debts, life insurance, and building-and-loan-association obligations incurred before the crash in 1929. Besides, why not invoke the principle of caveat faenerator (let the lender beware) and require him to liquidate the property under lien at its value when the loan was made?

A word or two about the advantages of this plan: The immediate need at this time is to set millions of men to work. Knock off two-fifths of a firm's obligations and it will be in a position to start its wheels going. Properties too heavily obligated should be turned over to the bondholders, on the basis of the appraised value at time of loan. The new owners would no longer be a drag on industry but would perforce put their property to work.

Anyone familiar with the plans of the administration will recognize that the aims of the ancient and modern legislatures are similar, to relieve industry from the burden of parasitic wealth. If the inflation of the dollar can immediately result in a large reduction in debt, well and good; but it may turn out that it will be about as hard to get hold of an inflated dollar as of the deflated one. If so, precious time will have been lost and it will be fearful to contemplate what is ahead of a social order that has 75 percent of its wealth in the form of vested securities. As to any scruples about the sacredness of contract, one must recall the proverb that necessity knows no law, and also remind himself of the fact that, if he had died in 1928, nobody would have eked out the pitiful pittance (in buying power) the insurance companies would have paid his widow for the good dollars he had deposited with them throughout the early years of the century. Besides, a wise man will be satisfied with a 60-cent dollar that will buy a dollar's worth of stuff or more rather than to take what he will get if millions of men don't go to work pretty soon.

ARTHUR PATCH MCKINLAY.

THE ANTILOBBYING BILL

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I call up House Resolution 462.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 11663, a bill to require reports of receipts and disbursements of certain contributions, to require the registration of persons engaged in attempting to influence legislation, to prescribe punishments for violation of this act, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY].

Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the adoption of this rule will make in order the bill H. R. 11663, introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], and referred to usually as the antilobbying bill. I do not care to discuss the rule, which is the usual form of open rule, provides 2 hours of general debate, and leaves the bill open to amendment.

I want to say just a little something about the background of the proposed legislation. This bill is in a way a part of the report of the Committee on Rules in response to a resolution at the last session directing it to make certain investigations of the activities of so-called lobbyists around the Capitol last summer when utility legislation was under consideration. Pursuant to that resolution the committee met and held hearings for many days.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Will the gentleman yield so that I may propound a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

AUTHORITY OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency may have until 12 o'clock tonight to file reports on the bill (H. R. 11968) relating to the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make rehabilitation loans for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes, and the bill (H. R. 12014) relating to the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make rehabilitation loans for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

THE ANTILOBBYING BILL

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the investigation undertaken by the Rules Committee of lobbying activities is not widely different, according to my observation, from other similar investigations which have taken place from time to time. It is not easy for an investigating committee to get anything very definite, concrete, or satisfactory about lobbying activities under present conditions. These sporadic investigations which are made from time to time may result in some temporary good, but they are expensive and cumbersome and seldom result in the punishment of any violator of what may be right and proper in that respect.

The Rules Committee felt that some permanent and wise legislation should be enacted by the Congress which would tend within itself to retard these activities in the future and hereafter enable investigating committees to secure with a great deal less expense and a great deal less trouble, and in a great deal shorter time, much more concrete, direct, and satisfactory information as to what does take place and to provide a means of punishment for wrongdoers. Therefore this bill was introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], a member of the Rules Committee, and has been made a part of the report of the Rules Committee. It has since been passed upon by the Judiciary Committee and is now pending before the House.

It has just two objectives. Certainly no member of the Rules Committee questions the right of any citizen or any interest that may be affected by proposed legislation to appear and be heard. That is a high privilege of every American citizen and interest that should not be prescribed or abridged in any way. But as the Members well know certain things have happened. People who advocate or oppose the passage of important legislation come to Washington, set up an establishment, make such contacts as they may be able to make around the Capitol here, and then proceed to make an appeal to the country through propaganda of every description, in which they are not overly particular about the statement of facts. They thereby try to make the "worse appear the better reason." They try to create the impression here in the Capitol that the vocal minority is really the silent majority. This bill deals with both angles of these activities.

Under the terms of this measure the lobbyist who comes here must register under oath. He must state by whom he is employed, how much he receives in the way of salary and expense accounts, and in what manner he spends these funds. Any organization which collects money for the princial purpose of going out and putting on one of these propaganda campaigns by which they hope to stir up enough fuss to confuse the representatives of the people in the Capitol as to what is the status of public opinion, have to file reports showing how much money it collects, and from whom, when the collection of that money is for the principal purpose of that kind of an activity.

Mr. Speaker, this bill does not in any way prohibit lobbying. It certainly does not prohibit or seek to proscribe any American citizen or interest in an appeal to the public; but it does undertake to bring lobbying activities to the point where the Representatives of the people in Congress may see what is going on, whether here at the Capitol or by way of appeal to the country at large. This is accomplished in such a way that the American people may understand from what source the appeal comes, what it costs, who contributes to it, and what the objective is. It does not undertake to prohibit these activities, but it does seek to draw them out into the broad light of day in order that we may see and the public may see just what is being done.

Count Leo Tolstoy was a wise man. He was a private citizen, but the world made a beaten path to his door. In one of his great books in which he deals with some of the major movements of men and of nations, a book completed in his older days, he opens one of the concluding chapters with the question: "What is the force that moves nations?" Bringing into play his great analytical mind and drawing upon the great fund of information acquired by observation and research during his long life, he answers the question a few chapters later by saying, "The force that moves nations is the will of the masses." That pronouncement of this great and wise man is but another way of saying that public opinion is king. In this country of ours, so organized as to be peculiarly responsible to the will of the people, public opinion is king, and there is no more important question before the country today than the necessity for a sound, intelligent, wise, and well-balanced public opinion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed 10 minutes.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. Speaker, this bill does no more than to pull back the smoke screen and lay all these activities out in the light of day so that the American people may see and form intelligent and sound opinion, and that we in Washington may have no smoke in our eyes when we undertake as best we can to interpret their will and purposes. [Applause.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise either to oppose the rule or to oppose the bill. I trust that if the bill is enacted into law it may do some good, although I am not very sanguine of that.

The bill has two major objects. The first is to compel all persons or organizations that seek to influence legislation and to elect or defeat candidates for Congress or Members for reelection in order to influence legislation, either to advance or oppose legislative propositions, to keep account of all the moneys they collect for this purpose and all the moneys they expend for such purpose and make reports to the Clerk of the House of Representatives to be filed in his office. In other words, it imposes similar duties upon persons or organizations that seek to influence legislation as the Corrupt Practices Act imposes upon persons or organizations that engage in attempts to elect Members of Congress.

I think insofar as organizations influencing legislation is concerned, this provision will have about the same effect as the Corrupt Practices Act has had in political campaigning in this country.

The other provision is that lobbyists who come to Washington to establish contacts for the purpose of influencing legislation are to register and state by whom they are employed, what their compensation is, and so forth.

The trouble with this provision is that it may catch a practicing lawyer here in Washington who has been retained to engineer a private claim through the Congress, or somebody of that kind, while it excludes all the important lobbyists concerning whom all the to-do has been about in the last year.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? That is a rather important statement the gentleman has made.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In what way does this bill exclude from its operations the important lobbyists to whom the gentleman has referred?

Mr. LEHLBACH (reading):

Any person who shall accept employment for any consideration to attempt to influence the passage or defeat of any pending or proposed legislation or appropriation by the Congress of the United States.

This applies to that kind of individual and no one else. Now, every lobbyist who has been belabored here, justly or unjustly, is not within this classification. Hopson was not employed for the purpose of influencing legislation. No general counsel of a big corporation is employed for such a purpose. It may be incident to his employment. And the person who organizes and gets contributions from persons interested or persons gullible enough to send in contributions and then is here in Washington and purports to advocate or to oppose something in the interest of his contributors is not employed for that purpose.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield briefly for another question?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If what the gentleman states is true with respect to a proper interpretation of this bill, then it certainly seems to me that if that type of serious omission has been made in the provisions of the bill, it should be corrected by an amendment, if such an amendment is possible.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I do not know how such an amendment can be drawn without infringing upon perfectly legitimate rights.

I just wanted to make these two comments on the bill. I do not see any reason why anybody should get excited about it at all. There is no reason to oppose it, but it is not going to do what some may hope it will do.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman is aware that in the time the Rules Committee spent on this measure, and we spent a good deal of time on it, we were of a fairly unanimous opinion on the necessity of the bill.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes; I have no opposition to the bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. We did intend to reach the Hopsons and the Robinsons and the other people who have been around here lobbying on legislation.

Mr. LEHLBACH. You reach them by section 6 of the earlier sections, but so far as their personal representation here is concerned, and making them disclose their purposes, and so forth, the presidents of utility holding corporations, general counsels of big corporations, and commanders of veterans' organizations are not people employed for the purpose of lobbying. Their representation of the interests of their organizations is incident to their executive positions in such organizations, and they do not come under the classification of people specifically employed for such purpose at all.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. FULLER. If the bill would exempt all those the gentleman has described—labor organizations, mail-carrier organizations, Federal employees, the Legion, and all veteran organizations, and if it is going to also exempt the officers of the big corporations—whom is it going to reach?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Perhaps an attorney who has been retained to help through a private claim.

Mr. FULLER. Can the gentleman name any particular one he has known around here lately that would be reached? Can the gentleman describe a case where it would reach anybody who has come around here lately trying to influence Congress?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; I will name one, if the gentleman will yield to me to answer.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It would reach this fellow Smith, who was lobbying on the Pettengill bill, and if the Members of Congress had known he was a lobbyist by reason of his registration in the Clerk's office they would not have been inveigled into attending his party.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I do not know the terms or conditions under which Mr. Smith was here.

Mr. FULLER. Did not he claim he was attorney for the firm he represented?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I do not know; but the mere fact that he was here in Washington would not make him an attorney employed for that purpose.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. Does the gentleman think the bill is broad enough to include the old-age-pension plan which is now being investigated?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Not as far as registering lobbyists, but as far as the accounting it does.

Here is one thing in the bill that I want to point out, and particularly to those who are specifically backing the legislation.

In describing the organizations who will have to file accounts of their receipts and expenditures, it was intended to exclude all those who already, insofar as the election of Members are concerned, must file such statements under the Corrupt Practices Act, and for that reason it excluded political committees as defined in said act.

(The time of Mr. LEHLBACH having expired, he was given 5 minutes more.)

Mr. LEHLBACH. The provisions of this act will not apply to any committee now required by the Federal Corrupt Practices Act to file such report.

That means that the Republican, Democratic, and Socialist political parties or political committees do not have to file expense accounts over again because they are taken care of in the Corrupt Practices Act. But that act says that a political committee includes any committee, and so forth, other than a duly organized State or local committee of a party. For instance, branches of the Democratic or Republican Party in a State, county, or municipality, or a congressional district are not required each one of them to flood the Clerk's office of the House of Representatives with an account of their receipts and expenditures. So that they are excepted from the definition of political committees.

In this bill you except political committees as defined in the act. Consequently the local committees are included in the bill under consideration, which means that every county and congressional political committee must file with the Clerk of the House.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. That is a complicated matter and was overlooked. There is an amendment contemplated to cure that.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I was going to suggest an amendment that would cure it, providing that the act shall not apply to those committees excepted in the Corrupt Practices Act.

The amendment I intend to propose is as follows: On page 5, line 10, after the word "act", insert the words "and except an organized State or local committee of a political party."

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Would it not be a good idea to have it provide for a duly legal committee, organized legally, a recognized committee?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I am using the language of the Corrupt Practices Act in suggesting this amendment. I refer to the language in the Corrupt Practices Act used to except those local committees from the workings of the Corrupt Practices Act. The point is that what is in the Corrupt Practices Act should be excluded in this bill, and this bill takes in everything that is excluded in the Corrupt Practices Act, but the local branches of a national political party should be excluded in both instances. For that reason I am offering the amendment. As far as the language is concerned, it is always safe to use the language of a law instead of trying to improve upon it.

Mr. KNUTSON. What is the gentleman's construction of subsection (c) of section 6 on page 6?

Mr. LEHLBACH. It means any organization, for instance, the Townsend organization, that seeks to influence Members of Congress to vote for a bill incorporating the Townsend plan and threatens to defeat Members who refuse to accede to their directions. That brings them within subsection (c) of section 6—

To influence, directly or indirectly, the election or defeat of any candidate for an elective Federal office.

They have to show where they get their money and to show for what purpose and how they are spending it.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. I want some personal information with reference to this bill. Would this prevent an organization back in a district writing a Member urging or opposing legislation?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I should not think so.

Mr. MICHENER. For instance, I hold in my hand a notice that was sent out by an organization to many citizens of my district. This notice contains much misinformation. This was forwarded to me by one of the recipients of the notice. It is as follows:

Urgent! Urgent! Urgent!

We are informed Michigan Congressman Hon. EARL C. MICHENER opposing action on Robinson-Patman bill in present form. Also trying to amend bill to make it worthless. Suggest you write or wire him today demanding the support bill in present form. Address him at Washington, D. C. Get all merchants in other lines to write or wire him. Understand bill would be on floor of Congress except for MICHENER and a few others. Don't mince words. Let the gentleman know your attitude toward his present opposition. Act now! Passage of this bill is new hope for small-business men.

Mr. LEHLBACH. What is the organization that sent this?

Mr. MICHENER. I do not care to mention that, but there is much misinformation in that card. Would this bill affect a notice of that kind?

Mr. LEHLBACH. It depends upon the organization that sends out such a notice.

Mr. MICHENER. Say, it was a retail organization? I do not want to do anything to prevent my constituents from communicating with me.

Mr. LEHLBACH. If it were a wholesale grocers' organization or a wholesale drug organization, it would not apply for the simple reason that it describes an organization—

The principal purpose of which is to aid in the accomplishment of the following purposes:

The enactment or defeat of any legislation or appropriation, etc. To influence directly or indirectly the election or defeat of any candidate for any elective Federal office.

An organization that is permanent in character and looks out, generally, for the welfare of those in a particular line of business, just because it advocates or proposes to try to influence specific Members of Congress to advocate or oppose a particular legislation, does not come within the provisions of the bill. The major purpose of such an organization is not to defeat or further specific legislation. But an organization like the Townsend organization, which is organized for the purpose of passing specific legislation, would clearly come under it.

I would suggest that, with the amendment I propose, I see no reason for opposing the bill. I hope it accomplishes in a measure what its authors expect.

Mr. KNUTSON. How about Father Coughlin's organization? Would that be classified the same as the Townsend organization?

Mr. LEHLBACH. In my judgment, it would, because it exists for the purpose of influencing legislation, not specifically, but generally.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, several weeks ago I spoke in reference to this bill. Since then the Committee on the Judiciary has reported the bill after having made certain amendments to it. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] has raised a serious question, but I think he has overstated the case. When he says that most of the lobbying is carried on by the individual himself, he overlooks the fact that the evidence before the investigating committee shows that these corporations and utility associations acted almost invariably through lobbyists.

Hopson was acting through a paid lobbyist whom he had stationed in the city of Washington and who represented him for all purposes and to all intents. The same was true of Smith. The same was true of Magill, and the same was true of Mr. Cramer. I think you will find very few instances of these utility magnates actually lobbying themselves or contacting Members of Congress. However, this amendment can be strengthened by including not only those who usually accept employment for a consideration but those who are paid directly or indirectly for such purposes, so as to include the attorney of any corporation or any utility concern who, although he is paid a regular salary, devotes a portion of his time to lobbying.

Of course, the intent and purpose of the bill is to reach that class of professional lobbyists who prey upon the credulity of businessmen in this country. There is a type of lobbyist who advertises the fact that it is necessary to keep some paid experts with political influence in the city of Washington to influence legislation. Those professional lobbyists are engaged in a character of racketeering. There are many business individuals and groups who think it is necessary to maintain in this city those whose primary occupation is presumably to influence the course of legislation. They succeed in creating the impression that they have numerous contacts in the city. They make it a point to form the acquaintance of Members of the House and the Senate, so that when in company with their employers they can address Members of the House or the Senate. That condition has steadily grown worse not only in the Capitol but in some of the State legislatures. If it were not for the business of the lobbyists in some State capitals, the hotels would be compelled to close down.

Now, whether or not we can expand this bill so as to include all people who are seeking to influence legislation is a matter for the Congress to decide. It certainly is the right of every citizen, of every individual, of every business concern, to present his or her views to the Congress of the United States, and there should be no disposition to curtail or abridge that right. Therefore, whatever amendments are offered, we should bear constantly in mind that the farthest we can go is to reach that type of professional lobbyist who is preying upon the credulity and ignorance of the country and who seeks to bring into disrepute the Congress of the United States, because there are many people who believe that legislation is materially influenced by paid lobbyists.

This bill not only seeks to make those lobbyists register and to give to the country all of the information in regard to their employment and in regard to their salary, so that it will be available, not only to the Congress but likewise to the country at large, but it also seeks to reach those associations and those groups who are soliciting funds or receiving funds for the purpose of influencing legislation or for the purpose of bringing about the election or defeat of candidates for office. It was my hope that the bill could contain a provision that would reach not only general elections but would likewise compel those associations and groups to disclose their activities in regard to primary elections. But evidently, under the Newberry case, where the Supreme Court held that Congress had no jurisdiction to legislate in regard to any primary election and that that was a matter wholly without the scope of congressional authority, the Committee on the Judiciary decided that it could not reach that type of political activity. It is most unfortunate that we are unable to do so, because in many States nomination in the primary is equivalent to election, and many States have no laws governing this matter, and some States, like the State of Texas, have ineffective laws, with the result that these organizations can influence the nomination of a candidate for office in some States without having to disclose that fact, whereas in other States, where the election is the important thing, they will be compelled to disclose their activities.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. We have had State campaigns for many years, especially the last few years, where candidates for office who never earned a fee of over $1,000 in their lives up to the time they ran for some important State office can run for office and spend two or three hundred thousand dollars to be elected.

Mr. DIES. Of course, that is a matter of public knowledge in Texas. I do not know how it is in other States, but it is a matter that we have seen in Texas with our own eyes. In fact, we have seen men run for State offices of the State of Texas who never made over $4,000 in their lives, and who have spent $100,000 or $200,000 in behalf of their campaign, with an army of paid assistants, with radio hook-ups, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. McFARLANE. Further in regard to the gentleman's statement regarding the Newberry case, in Texas, as in many other States, election in the primary is equivalent to election to office. We should enact legislation that will adequately cover the situation just discussed.

Mr. DIES. I think this bill could contain a provision providing for nominations, in spite of the Newberry case, on this theory, that this bill is not directed at the candidate. It is directed at these Nation-wide organizations that are formed for the primary purpose of influencing the nomination or defeat of a candidate for office. Upon that theory I cannot understand why we could not insert in the bill a provision that would include primary nominations.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I will tell the gentleman why it cannot be put in there. If the gentleman will read the Newberry case, he will find that the authority of Congress in dealing with party organizations is not in existence at all.

Mr. DIES. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER. The only authority that the Congress has is derived from section 4 of article I of the Constitution. In the Newberry case the Court had that question squarely before it. It would be a futile effort on the part of Congress to attempt to regulate primary elections. This is a matter wholly within the province of the State.

Mr. DIES. I agree with the gentleman in regard to the holding in the Newberry case, except there is this distinction, that the Newberry case dealt with the candidate himself under a law requiring him to do certain things. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman will read the decision carefully, he will find it holds as I have indicated.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE].

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LUDLOW). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of the purposes to be served by this kind of legislation. I think Congress has neglected far too long to bring in adequate legislation to require paid lobbyists and those who exert influence upon Congress to disclose this confidential information the Members of Congress are entitled to have in order properly to evaluate the reasons back of these lobbyists and others appearing here to influence legislation. I say, therefore, that this bill is certainly a step in the right direction and while it seems to me, as has been pointed out by several other Members, that some of the provisions of the pending measure are rather vague, indefinite, uncertain, and it is doubtful whether or not it will compel even some of the superlobbyists, such as Mr. Hopson and others who have been in the forefront in the matter of lobbying before Congress in recent times, to register. I think we ought to amend it wherever needed and make it an airtight bill that will apply to everyone who comes before Congress who for any kind of consideration comes for the purpose of influencing legislation, so we shall get a complete background of the person and their reasons for trying to influence legislation.

No honest person ought for a minute to object to giving a complete disclosure of all information as to why he is here trying to influence legislation, and certainly all the crooks ought to be required to give this information so the Congress can properly look at the background and understand the reason prompting their action.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does this mean that representatives of veterans' organizations who are here for legislative purposes, and representatives of farm bureaus who are here for legislative purposes would also have to register?

Mr. McFARLANE. I doubt it under this bill as it is drawn, but I think they ought to. I think we ought to amend this bill and enact a law that will require all such organizations to register. I think we ought to treat them all alike. Then the Congress can properly look at their background and credentials, see how much money they are collecting and spending, and what their motives are.

I offered legislation of this type while serving in the Senate of Texas. I even went so far in the legislation I offered as to propose that the members of the legislature, the house and senate, be required to register and disclose full information as to any fees or anything of value they had received directly or indirectly while serving in the Legislature of the State of Texas.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. DIES. What success did the gentleman have in the State senate along this line?

Mr. McFARLANE. They threatened to impeach me and throw me out of the senate. Down in Texas I put them on record, and you will find officials holding high office in Texas today who voted against that resolution.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. DIES. We heard a great many promises in that State about driving the lobbyists out of the Capitol, in the last State campaign. Does the gentleman know whether any progress has been made along this line in Texas?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes; we in Texas all remember that the special-interest lobbyists, who have controlled legislation in Texas for years, were the one big issue in the last Governor's race. Our present Governor made this the real issue of his campaign. He recommended that such legislation be enacted, but the legislature refused to pass such legislation, and the lobbyists still rule Texas. Back in the early twenties they passed a resolution requiring these lobbyists to register, but after the first session the lobbyists stole the register and threw it away. [Laughter.] Since that time we have been unable to enact any legislation requiring the lobbyists to register. Somehow or other the special interests in Texas have completely controlled and dominated the situation, so much so that we have never been able even to require the setting up of any kind of an adequate State regulatory commission to regulate the utility rates.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time, 4 minutes, to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, the Rules Committee, following its investigation, as directed by the House, of the utility lobby, has given a great deal of thought and attention to this matter. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr.

SMITH] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLARK] have been especially industrious in working out a proposal which the Rules Committee endorses in its report on the lobby investigation.

It is not extravagant to say that countless millions were expended on the utility lobby. The Associated Gas & Electric Co. confessed to expending nearly $1,000,000, and Mr. Hopson, of that company, testified there were about 19 or 20 companies, equally as large as or larger than his company, and that in his opinion they spent as much as his company did, if not more; so it may fairly be said that the stupendous sum of $20,000,000 was spent, and, of course, as usual, with no effect.

I have never seen any effect a lobbyist ever had in Washington, but they are, at the same time, a nuisance to the Members. They claim to do what they never can do, and they collect money from organizations and people back home by deceiving the people as to their influence, which is nil. In my opinion, the janitor of the building has as much influence as any lobbyist who ever appeared in Washington, including the "boiled shirt" lawyers from my city and elsewhere, who often receive fees as high as $250,000. [Applause.]

Information was conveyed to me recently that one of the lobbyists in Washington who lobbies for a number of matters was opposed to the bill because, as he stated, "if you have to register, nobody will hire you." If that is what this bill is going to accomplish, all Members ought to be for it. Why, when the utility bill was being considered on the floor of this House, the Members had difficulty getting into the Chamber. The lobbyists were out in the lobby in large numbers. There was one fellow from Ohio calling out the Members through that east door and there were lobbyists clogging the entrance to the Speaker's lobby. If this bill has no more effect than to keep these leeches away from us so that we may walk through the corridors of the Capitol, it is well worth while passing.

Mr. Speaker, this bill does not interfere with anyone appearing before a committee. That is specifically exempted. It does reach these organizations which collect from gullible people huge sums of money to influence the passage or defeat of legislation and to influence the election or defeat of candidates for Congress. This bill is a supplement to the Corrupt Practices Act, which pertains to elections for Members of Congress. Under that act, every candidate must file his return. This bill will require these organizations and individuals mentioned to register and file returns showing how much they have spent.

There is such a thing around here as "universal lobbyists." For instance, when the utility bill was in here for consideration, the utilities called in all the standing lobbyists and put them to work, no matter what organizations they usually represented. They had a universal lobby here, and they did not miss many lobby representatives of these other organizations. Even the lobbyists for charitable organizations were put on the pay roll of the utilities. Now, that situation, of course, is at least an annoyance.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does the gentleman believe this bill will go to the extent of reaching certain public relations people and the expenditures of large corporations, which have included money under miscellaneous items for this purpose? Will this bill require an accurate accounting from those organizations and individuals so that we may judge what influence they are exerting, if any?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Offhand I could not say, but I hope it does. This bill, of course, is a start in the right direction. We must do something to deter lobbying. It will, we hope, have a deterring influence. I have some sympathy with the point raised by the gentleman from New Jersey as to whether it will cover people who are not actually "employed." Our committee and the Judiciary Committee sat in conference together and jointly we gave some thought to that problem. If a start is made by making everybody employed who comes here trying to influence legislation go into the Clerk's office and sign the book there and then every 3 months file an account of his expenditures, and so forth, we will have done something worth while to dissipate this idea which exists throughout the country that these people can come here and influence Congress. Of course, they never did and never will.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. I may say that I am in full accord with the evil that this bill seeks to reach. I am in favor of the bill because when it comes back for the final vote some of the provisions, now too broad, will be eliminated. I want to ask the gentleman if there is anything in this proposed legislation which would require a Member of Congress who introduces a bill, then floods the country with propaganda in order to get organizations to threaten Members of Congress if they do not support his legislation, to be included under this bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Unfortunately, not.

Mr. LAMNECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LAMNECK. I would like to know whether this bill covers, say, representatives of the administration that may be in power or any department thereof who may come down here and urge us to pass or not to pass certain legislation?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I regret to say it does not. That problem was considered, but the difficulty of meeting it must be quite apparent to the gentleman. The same thing may be said of Members of Congress who might urge other Members to support or defeat certain legislation.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE. Is there anything in this bill to reach the lobbyists who work through the members of a department to influence Members of Congress?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, I do not think any lobbyist could prevail upon a member of a department. We are the only susceptible people!

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Let us make this practical and assume that the Lake Carriers' Association is interested in a bill that has been introduced in Congress. Assume further that a representative of theirs here in Washington is requested by that association to see the Members of Congress in reference to this bill. Does the pending legislation include that individual?

Mr. O'CONNOR. He comes down here, as I understand it, and registers in the Clerk's office; then he files a statement which shows who employs him and how much he receives in pay and what he expends in connection with the mission. There should be no reluctance on the part of the lake carriers, or the individual, to disclose this information.

Mr. DONDERO. This might go far enough to include labor organizations and farmer organizations?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. LAMNECK. Does it include those organizations?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I understand it includes any organization that is trying to influence the passage or defeat of legislation.

Mr. LAMNECK. As an illustration may I say that a week or two ago there appeared before our committee Admiral Hobson who is interested in a narcotic drive throughout the United States. He was down here urging us not to do a certain thing in reference to a bill which was then pending before our committee. He is not hired as a lobbyist. He is an employee of this world-wide organization. Would this bill prevent him from coming down here and urging us to pass or not to pass legislation?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does the gentleman mean that he appeared before a particular committee?

Mr. LAMNECK. Yes; and he contacted many Members of Congress.

Mr. O'CONNOR. As to the proposition of appearing before a committee, he is specifically exempted. I hesitate to answer some of these questions, because members of the Judiciary Committee and some members of our Rules Committee know much more about the situation than I do, but, as I understand it, if he is here representing an organization and contacting Congressmen he must register and account for his expenses. I do not know why he should object to that.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. SCOTT. This does not prevent anybody from coming down here. All they have to do is to register when they get here; is not that true?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; that is true.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. The gentleman is the very able chairman of the Rules Committee, and, aside from the matter immediately under discussion, I am wondering if the gentleman would inform the House why the Rules Committee has seen fit to give no consideration to the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY], to investigate the Federal Communications Commission.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does the gentleman want to inquire about a number of other measures before the Rules Committee? [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MILLARD. The gentleman from Ohio asked the gentleman from New York about lobbying by the executive departments or the administrative bureaus. As a matter of fact, on page 7, the bill specifically exempts any public official acting in his official capacity.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is correct. I had forgotten that for the moment. That was put in there to meet the suggestion as to Congressmen principally.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee, who is an able lawyer, whether in his opinion under the terms of this bill representatives of farm organizations, labor organizations, veterans' organizations, flood-control and waterway organizations would come under it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I think I have answered that question by saying that in my opinion they would, but I would prefer to have the committee go into that fully. In my opinion they would, and I can see no objection to that.

Mr. SHORT. Do the provisions of this bill forbid any lobbyist from seeing a Member of Congress while we are not in session, for instance, calling upon us at our homes?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not think so, but it should be discouraged. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me on one further point?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. LAMNECK. We are now having a tax bill considered before the Committee on Ways and Means, and I have several hundred letters from prominent business men of my district who want to come here and talk to me about the tax bill. Would they be prevented from coming here and talking to me about it, or would they have to register?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Not at all.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LUDLOW. I am entirely in harmony with this proposed antilobbying legislation, but I would like to ask the very able gentleman from New York for his interpretation of the bill in one respect. Would representatives of individual companies who come to Washington on matters that pertain to their business alone be covered by this bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR. In my opinion, not.

Mr. LUDLOW. Or would they have to establish a domicile here and engage in general lobby to come within the terms of the measure?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. I notice a provision at the top of page 6, subsection (c), of paragraph 7, containing this language:

To influence, directly or indirectly, the election or defeat of any candidate for any elective Federal office.

Under the present Corrupt Practices Act, Members of Congress file reports with the Clerk of the House only with reference to the general election and with the authorities of their own States with respect to primary elections. Would this subsection also require the filing with the Clerk of the House of Representatives of an account of the contributions and expenditures in primary elections?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That matter has been discussed thoroughly here this afternoon, and it was pointed out that, in the opinion of a number of the members of the Judiciary Committee and the Rules Committee, in the Newberry case, in the Supreme Court of the United States it was held that no Federal law could be passed applying to primaries, and any measure that we might enact must apply only to general elections.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. FULLER. That applies to the candidate himself, but would it not affect such people as the Townsendites, who go out and try to defeat a man who is opposed to their plan, or would it not apply to Father Coughlin, who is in the same line of business, or to the Liberty League? They would have to file a report under that provision, would they not?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GREGORY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11663) to require reports of receipts and disbursements of certain contributions, to require the registration of persons engaged in attempting to influence legislation, to prescribe punishments for violation of this act, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11663, with Mr. COLE of Maryland in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. GREGORY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I can be of any material assistance to the Committee in discussing this bill or not. It shall be my purpose to clarify, if I am able to do so, some of the questions that this bill covers and some things it attempts to do.

The history of this bill is this, as I understand it: We have had a great many lobby and antilobby bills before the Judiciary Committee of the House. I would like to have the membership get this statement, regardless of how they feel about the passage of lobby or antilobby legislation. It is practically impossible to agree upon the terms of an antilobby bill which is broad and comprehensive, and one that will satisfy the various groups and interests of this Nation.

We have had hearings day after day in an effort to work out a bill that was comprehensive enough to cover situations that you and I know ought to be covered, but we run afoul of labor, we run afoul of the veterans' associations, we run afoul of the rural letter carriers, farm organizations, and we run into trouble on every turn.

We also come in conflict with the advocates of free speech, and so forth, and the right to petition guaranteed by the Constitution.

It is very easy to say, "You ought to draft a bill that is comprehensive and has teeth in it", but you undertake to do it and get it through a committee or pass it through this body, and you will find that you are up against it. That was the situation we had confronting us.

This bill came to us from the Rules Committee. I am not a member of the subcommittee that considered the bill. Subcommittees 3 and 4 considered the bill for days; they wrote it and rewrote and wrote it again and again in an effort to arrive at a bill that would really meet the situation.

The bill before us may be divided into two divisions. Sections 1 to 6, inclusive, are simply that part of the bill requiring an accounting of money collected from and by various organizations, and so forth.

It seems to me that is a wholesome provision and should be enacted into law. What is there that should prevent or what argument should be made against any organization that collects money from its membership for the purpose of influencing legislation or other action by the Congress—what reason is there that organizations should not be compelled to file an account of the money collected and expended? That is all that the first six sections do in effect.

Now, I want to call attention particularly to section 6, and let us see to whom the bill applies.

It says:

The provisions of this act shall apply to any individual, partnership, committee (except a political committee as defined in the Federal Corrupt Practices Act), association, corporation, or any other organization or group of persons who by themselves, or through any agent or employee or other persons in any manner whatsoever, directly or indirectly, solicit, collect, or receive money or other thing of value to be used in whole or in part to aid, or the principal purpose of which organization is to aid, in the accomplishment of any of the following purposes:

(a) The enactment or defeat of any legislation or appropriation by the Congress of the United States, or the repeal or nonrepeal of any existing laws of the United States, or the adoption or defeat of any amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

(b) To influence directly or indirectly the passage or defeat of any legislation or appropriation by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. MILLARD. What is the difference between the first portion of subsection (a) and subsection (b)?

Mr. MILLER. Subsection (a) refers to the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States and was intended to deal primarily with the repeal or nonrepeal of existing laws. The first two lines of subsection (a) are not different from subsection (b). Subsection (b), of course, is self-explanatory.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. HARLAN. Let us bring this down to a practical proposition. There is not a community here that does not have an organization along the lines of the Knights and Ladies of the Right, or something else.

Mr. MILLER. That is correct.

Mr. HARLAN. That has some idea to change the world overnight.

Mr. MILLER. That is correct.

Mr. HARLAN. They meet in their sewing circles and take up a collection to have some literature printed and sent to the Congress. They do not come here at all. They simply have something printed and sent here.

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. HARLAN. Then somebody collects $25 from their membership and it is used for that purpose. Do they come under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. MILLER. If the principal purpose of the organization is to influence legislation or to amend the Constitution of the United States, they do.

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. LAMNECK. I want to know whether this applies to the National Association of Letter Carriers, the National Association of Clerks, the National Association of Rural Carriers, or the National Association of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, or to the United Mine Workers, and such organizations as those.

Mr. MILLER. If the organizations collect money and distribute money intended for the purpose directly or indirectly of influencing legislation, they do, of course.

Mr. LAMNECK. The gentleman knows that all those organizations have legislative agents in Washington.

Mr. MILLER. That is true.

Mr. LAMNECK. As a lawyer, does the gentleman say that it would apply to those groups or that it would not?

Mr. MILLER. I say that it would apply to those groups.

Mr. LAMNECK. In other words, if they come down here for a bill to increase salaries or to do something else, they have to register.

Mr. MILLER. That is correct.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. DIES. I call the gentleman's attention again to subsection (c), and I want the gentleman to explain how under the Newberry case, which only applies to the candidate himself in a primary election, we would be precluded under that decision from requiring these associations and groups to report their expenditures, to affect the nomination of a candidate for office.

Mr. MILLER. Simply in this way. The gentleman overlooks his premise. The constitutional provision does not deal with individuals, it does not deal with the individual who is a candidate, but it deals with the election, and the provision of the Constitution which gives the Congress its authority over the election of its Members deals with the election, and not with individuals. That is the distinction.

Mr. DIES. Under the terms of this bill, if there is an indirect effect upon an election, let us say, assuming that a utility company is in the gentleman's district—

Mr. MILLER. Oh, I ask the gentleman not to take up my time. The gentleman is confused about the definition of the word "election." The word "election", as used in the Constitution, refers to that operation by which a candidate is chosen by the people. If the gentleman will look at the case of United States against Gradwell, decided about 15 years prior to the Newberry case, he will find that the court took up the history of primary elections and pointed out the fact that primary elections were never included or thought of when the Constitution was written, and primary elections were not even intended to be included in the Corrupt Practices Act. I am sure the gentleman is a better lawyer than I am, and things that look confusing to me look plain to the gentleman.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. Suppose an industry in the district of any Member of this House is informed of legislation that may affect that industry either adversely or favorably. The industry selects a man to come here to Washington to inquire about the legislation and to see the individual Members of Congress. Does this bill go far enough to stop him from coming here?

Mr. MILLER. It would not stop him from coming or from talking, but he ought to register if he did come, or I am afraid that he would run afoul of the law.

Mr. DONDERO. Suppose he comes for that one purpose only and goes back home. Would he be a lobbyist?

Mr. MILLER. I believe that he would have to register under section 7 of the bill.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mrs. KAHN. Take an organization such as the League of Women Voters, where the service is practically voluntary. They certainly take a great interest in bills being passed by the Congress. Would they come under this?

Mr. MILLER. If they collect money for that purpose or expend it, I think they would.

Mrs. KAHN. If they did not collect it directly, but if they were financed by the dues of the organization, would they come under this bill?

Mr. MILLER. Of course, it would depend upon whether or not they were principally organized for the purpose of influencing legislation.

Mrs. KAHN. Of course they are principally organized to consider the principles of good government.

Mr. MILLER. If they were, they would probably have to file a statement of their receipts and expenditures.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. This is a very serious question. Representing the textile industry, if certain officials paid by textile manufacturers, sent a dozen men to Washington and they all spoke before a committee but afterward saw me personally, each of the dozen men must register as lobbyists, get a receipt for his railroad fare, for his hotel bill, keep those receipts 2 years and go through all that formality?

Mr. MILLER. No, no. They would not have to go through all that formality of keeping their receipts and so forth, because they would not be collecting any money from any organizations, the primary purpose of which was to influence legislation, but they would have to register when they came here as lobbyists.

Mr. GIFFORD. If they spoke to a committee alone, would they have to register?

Mr. MILLER. No, no.

Mr. GIFFORD. But if they happened to come to my office, a dozen of them, they would have to register?

Mr. MILLER. The purpose of this bill—

Mr. GIFFORD. Never mind the purpose. We understand the purpose is to terrorize these people.

Mr. MILLER. Oh, no.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, yes.

Mr. MILLER. Oh, no. In all seriousness—

Mr. GIFFORD. Now, be serious. If they spoke to me personally, they would have to register?

Mr. MILLER. I do not know anybody who wants to terrorize anybody.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, that is the intent of this.

Mr. MILLER. No. This is not the intent of this bill. I would not want to terrorize anybody and I am very much in favor of this bill.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. I want to pursue my inquiry a step further. Suppose a representative who comes here for an industry happens to be their attorney through the year, or even an officer of that industry himself; does the gentleman then say he would come within the provisions of this bill, where his visit is incident to his regular work?

Mr. MILLER. He might not come under section 7, but I am going to offer an amendment to bring him under it. [Laughter.]

Mr. McFARLANE. I already have one prepared.

Mr. MILLER. Further discussing the question raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts, that is a pertinent question, and I want to call attention to section 7 of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] has again expired.

Mr. GREGORY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. HESS. Mr. Chairman, I also yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to section 7. I do not want to do anything to prevent any constituent of anybody or any interest in the United States from presenting his or their case to the American Congress. Everybody has a perfect right, whether that right be guaranteed under the Constitution or otherwise—they just simply have that natural right to speak for themselves. Congress or any other lawmaking body is always glad to hear from the real parties in interest in proposed legislation. It is not the purpose of section 7 to curb that right or to prevent that right from being exercised at all. Now, what does section 7 do? It does not matter what my personal views are about it or what your personal views are about it. We are up against not so much a theory as against a condition that exists here. It is said there are lobbyists running wild in Washington. I do not know whether I ever saw one or not. I heard a great deal of talk about lobbyists all during this utility legislation, and I became convinced of one thing, and that was that I did not amount to anything, because no lobbyists ever spoke to me, as far as I know, and I think probably the situation is altogether overdrawn.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MILLER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. I simply wanted at this point to say that I do not know that I have been approached by any lobbyist, to know him, but you now want to tag all my friends as lobbyists who come here from my State. You want to tag them as such, and I object.

Mr. MILLER. No. The gentleman's friends are not all lobbyists; they are good citizens. [Applause and laughter.] They are good citizens and mean well.

Mr. GIFFORD. But I want to say to the gentleman that if these friends of mine identified with business, come down here and take expense money, they have to go over and register and then everybody says, "Lobbyist! Lobbyist"! It is a terrorizing word, really.

Mr. MILLER. Under section 7—and I want to call attention to it—any person who shall accept employment for any consideration—now for what purpose? If he accepts employment for the purpose of attempting to influence the passage or defeat of any pending or proposed legislation or appropriation.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. DIES. Would an attorney be within the terms of the bill who is primarily engaged to represent a corporation and comes to Washington only occasionally during the sessions of Congress to lobby?

Mr. MILLER. It is doubtful, as pointed out by the gentleman from New Jersey, that such a person would come under it. I say he should come under it.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE] and myself, have prepared an amendment strengthening this provision which will be presented in due time. Is not the gentleman from Arkansas in favor of strengthening this provision so as to get the attorneys of these corporations?

Mr. MILLER. I thought I had made myself perfectly clear on that; I am. If these gentlemen from Texas can work out an amendment of this kind, so far as I am concerned, I would be perfectly satisfied to have them do it.

What else have we? Whether it is true or not, the people of this Nation think a great deal of legislation is effected by lobbying; that the judgment of the Congress is warped or directed by sinister influences; and they always speak about "the interests", and about this influence and that influence affecting Congress. I think we owe it to the people to pass this legislation, and I do not see why any honest person who has legitimate business to present before a body of the Congress, a committee or otherwise, would have the slightest objection to registering as provided by the terms of section 7.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again? I hate to trespass so much on the gentleman's time.

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman explain why he omitted from the bill these lobbyists who appear before bureaus and agencies with regard to having Government contracts canceled or altered in favor of their employers?

Mr. MILLER. This gentleman did not omit anything from the bill. This bill came from the Rules Committee, as I said, to the Judiciary Committee, and subcommittees 3 and 4 worked on the matter.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Quite a number of the departments require attorneys and others practicing before the department to register and obtain a license, as the gentleman knows. Included in these are the Patent Office, Treasury Department, and a dozen others. They have what might be called bars of their own.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman does not mean that all of them require registration?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. There are 10 or a dozen which do.

Mr. DIES. What is that to the hundreds there are?

Mr. MILLER. I would like to proceed for just a little while, and then I shall yield the floor.

Mr. Chairman, I want now to call attention to one condition which, in my opinion, justifies the enactment of this bill; that is the publication of articles by lobbyists or others in an effort to create public sentiment for or against legislation. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], at the time the gentleman from New Jersey was speaking, called attention to certain propaganda that swept this country with reference to a certain bill recently before the Committee on the Judiciary.

The greatest harm done in this country today, the greatest disservice that is done your constituents and my constituents, is done by organizations that do not give them the facts of a situation as it exists, but through the publication of syndicated articles in various magazines and periodicals build up and control public sentiment without disclosing to the people their selfish interest in the subject matter. It is perfectly natural for a person to believe what he reads.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me once more?

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I presume the purpose of this bill is to protect Congressmen. Would the gentleman be willing to accept an amendment providing that when the lobbyist registers he should be handed a blue ribbon in order that he may be plainly marked so we shall know him?

Mr. MILLER. I would if the badges were made of different colors, for we must have something to keep them separated. I do not, however, think at all it is for the purpose of protecting Congressmen.

Mr. GIFFORD. It is a stigma on them.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What language does the bill contain which will make available to the public and the press the registry and the information to be filed by the lobbyists? The public is as much interested in this as are the Members of Congress.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman asks if it will be made available to the public?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the information, for instance, be subject to review by newspapermen so they can place it before the public?

Mr. MILLER. It will be a public record; yes. It will be such a record that will disclose the selfish interest that has prompted the publication of the article and in that manner the people will not be misled. The people can be trusted fully if they have the facts before them, but they never get the true facts by reading the statements and newspapers that are printed by the paid lobbyists and who are serving the interests of their employers.

The bill is a step in the right direction and should be passed. It will help us all serve the people who have no paid lobbyist here.

Mr. HESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN].

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I am in somewhat the same position as the gentleman from Arkansas in that I have never had any lobbyists trouble me particularly. I have always thought that the Members of Congress were men of such conviction that what lobbyists might say to them would not have any particular effect. Of course, we have different types of lobbyists.

Since my return to Congress a year or so ago I found the most iniquitous type was the Government lobbyist, who comes up here and tries to bring pressure upon Members to legislate in a certain way. I do not know whether there is anything in this bill that will compel those men to register so that we may know just what kind of work they are carrying on.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MILLARD. The bill specifically exempts them. The chairman of the Rules Committee so stated.

Mr. ANDRESEN. I think there should be an amendment to the bill so that we may know who the men are that are clogging up these halls and preventing us from getting into the Chamber. We should find out whether those men belong to the executive department of the Government or to the other iniquitous class of lobbyist. Possibly this bill will accomplish a great deal of good. I expect to vote for it, and I hope it will function according to the intent that its sponsors claim for it.

Mr. Chairman, I am wondering whether the bill takes in small groups of men and women throughout the country who may get together and present their views to Members of Congress, either in person or by way of petition with reference to legislation in which they might be interested. Some have said the bill does not cover that. This morning I received a communication from a group of 50 individuals in Minnesota who got together and collected enough money to have their communication written by a stenographer and attach the necessary postage thereto.

These individuals are the residents of a Federal homestead project which is being sponsored by the administration. It appears that this group of men and women has written to the officials of the Government to get information in connection with their particular troubles, and not being able to get any information whatsoever, they saw fit to write to me and to other Members of Congress, as well as Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, wife of the Chief Executive of this Nation. I want to read this communication and inquire whether or not this group comes under the provisions of the bill, and whether it would be necessary for them, under the provisions of the bill, to register. They write me as follows:

DEAR SIR: Word has been received from Washington that the administration desires to know how this homestead project is being received by the homesteaders and what impression it is making upon the citizens of the surrounding territory.

We, the homesteaders, welcome this opportunity to make a direct contact with the administration.

We were chosen as dependable people with salaries, people who would take pride in keeping and improving a home, and we were given to understand that we would be buying homes of small cost at a low rate of interest on the unpaid balance.

When we signed our temporary licensing agreement we were promised that our permanent contracts for title would be in our hands by March 1936. With this understanding we moved in. We put our own money and labor into improving the places, making them habitable, and planning homes in which we would have quiet, peace, and security.

The following questions have been asked of Government officials, but they have not given satisfactory answers.

Will the cost of the repairs, which are now being made and which we are told are necessary due to the fact that the houses were improperly built, be added to the final purchase price in addition to what the houses originally cost? Such repairs as insulating the bathtubs, weather-stripping windows, repairing roof boards which were improperly installed and now necessitate removing a strip around the entire roof, adding cold-air ducts to the heating system, installing water pans in furnaces, repairing leaks in roofs, resealing the basement headings, repairing basement floors, etc.

Why, if we are merely lessees or renters, as our present contract states, must we maintain our own repairs on homes that do not belong to us? Why must we pay taxes, maintain our own roads? How can we afford to paint, varnish, build cupboards, plant annual shrubs, other than the ones which we are told that we are going to receive, when we have only a 30-day assurance that we have our homes to live in?

When mechanical features were placed in these homes no directions were given as to the proper method of oiling, cleaning, and their general care; nor was general advice given for their proper usage. Why then must we, as renters, be held responsible for their operation and repairs?

Why must we be forced to build a $10,000 community house, equipped with conveniences which we do not need, necessitating a continuous fire throughout 8 months of the year, and a custodian to do away with the ever-present menace of vandalism, when a meeting house is all that we would need? This could be built for about $2,500. We hear it rumored that $5,000 already has been allotted and is included in our monthly payments. If that is so, the difference could be returned to us for more needful purposes.

Who is to pay the salaries of the officials who have been sent here from time to time for the purpose of investigation and supervision? Why must we be sent new supervisors at short intervals who have no personal interest in our welfare, and who have proven incompetent, dictatorial, and ungentlemanly, stirring up a feeling of uncertainty and discontent, and disrupting the neighborly spirit of our community?

Why, when we have caused an organization of our own to be formed for the betterment of our entire group socially and for a more convenient form of dealing with representatives of the Government, must an official who is sent to us with the purpose of cementing friendship, start breeding seeds of discontent by appointing committees of outside people over the heads of our group and cause a general disturbance in our organization?

Why are we now to be put upon a 5-year proving period before we receive a contract for deed; this 5 years was not in the original agreement. We were told by the first committee that the term of payment would be 20 years; later Mr. Plum informed us that the term of payment would be 30 years, and upon this we understand our payments are based. Now, Mr. Stephenson informs us that the term has been changed to 40 years. When will our payments per month be lowered in conformity with this change. We are told that during these 40 years we will not be allowed to pay up our contract other than paying the greater share of it for the purpose of lowering our interest rate. In the event of our death, would our equity in these homes be passed on to our heirs?

We entered into the idea of a good little home on a small acreage where we could be happy, and now we are told that we are merely living in these homes from month to month, with the ever-present menace of being forced out by each new supervisor whose ideas may conflict with those of his predecessor. These conditions rather than being conducive to happiness, cause such a state of mental uncertainty that it is impossible to live a normal life.

Why has not the final contract for title been presented this month as was originally promised, so that we could become legitimate taxpayers and not taxed renters? When do we receive a final contract? When will we be able to use and improve the property in our own way without the necessity of having an overseer in charge?

Copies to Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Hon. Henrik Shipstead, Hon. Elmer Benson, Hon. Rexford Tugwell, Mr. B. G. Stephenson, Miss Corrine Jahren.

Mr. Chairman, this communication is signed by all of the men and women who reside on this particular Government subsistence homestead project which is located in my congressional district.

Mr. CREAL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CREAL. May I ask the gentleman if there is a Republican precinct committee man on that list?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I am frank to say I do not know any of them, but these are men and women who had faith in the good intentions of the Government. They were willing to go ahead and spend their own money in order to obtain a home. Apparently the Government is now saddling upon them so many burdens that instead of getting a moderate-priced home they will be forced to pay for more than 40 years, or for a generation or two, in order to get a home for themselves and their families.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CULKIN. I assume the gentleman knows that the particular activity to which he has just referred is under the charge of Prof. Rex Tugwell. Does the gentleman know further that Mr. Tugwell at present is boondoggling with some $290,000,000, but his tenure of office is uncertain, because Field Marshal Farley is demanding his resignation? However, some other influence is keeping him in. That may be the reason for the fact these good people cannot get a reply.

Mr. ANDRESEN. I thank the gentleman for his comment. I have not had the pleasure of meeting Dr. Tugwell.

Mr. CULKIN. He is a very charming gentleman, a great personality.

Mr. ANDRESEN. But I feel these people, who have entered into contracts with the Government, as citizens of this country, have a right to receive courteous treatment. They are entitled to a fulfillment of the contracts which they entered into. The Government should carry out the specifications of the contracts in reference to the building of those homes without extra cost to the people. These individuals are entitled to an answer. They are entitled to an "honest deal" at the hands of the Government.

Mr. HESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether these good people up there could be called lobbyists or not. I do not feel that they are lobbyists. I feel they have a right to get together, just as they have done in this instance, and file their petition, asking their Representative in Congress, whether it be myself or someone else, to intercede for them with the officials in Washington who have absolute and unlimited power and money.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. Would you consider that they are lobbyists if they selected some person to come down here with photographs and present the matter to the Congress, and would they have to register as lobbyists?

Mr. THOM. Their Congressman ought to do it for them.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Their Congressman will take care of it, and I am pleased to have the opportunity to serve them in this or any other capacity.

Mr. THOM. He does not seem to have done it.

Mr. ANDRESEN. I do not think they would be considered as lobbyists, although there might be some gentlemen on this side of the aisle who would brand them as such.

Mr. THOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. THOM. Has the gentleman submitted those questions and complaints to the proper department here before publishing them in this way?

Mr. ANDRESEN. The letter of complaint which I have just read reached me today and I have transmitted it to Dr. Tugwell by mail.

Mr. THOM. No; the gentleman has not done a thing yet in behalf of his constituents.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Because these people submitted these questions to the Department time after time and got no satisfaction. Therefore they were forced to communicate with their Member of Congress in order to bring the matter to the attention of the high and distinguished gentleman in the executive Department, and I am now calling it to your attention and to the attention of the other Members of the Congress.

Mr. THOM. But as yet the gentleman has not presented the complaints to Mr. Tugwell or to any official authorized to deal with the matter.

Mr. ANDRESEN. They are in the mail and now on the way.

Mr. THOM. Oh, I see.

Mr. ANDRESEN. And this is a very opportune time to let you gentlemen know what is being done by men high up in the administrative departments here in the Nation's Capital. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GREGORY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER].

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I have carefully read this bill and attempted to digest it. I realize the bill is going to pass, because the Members of Congress think they are under suspicion and have not nerve enough to try to amend the bill or try to defeat it. In the language of my colleague the gentleman from Arkansas, "we owe it to our people back home to pass this bill." We do not owe them anything of the kind. We do not owe them any right to acknowledge that there is a lobby here that is influencing Members of Congress, because it is not a fact.

I think I can truthfully say, without fear of successful contradiction, that during the time I have served here of four terms I never even heard a man in this House suspected of having solicited or accepting anything or having been improperly influenced in voting for any measure on the floor of this House. You cannot force honesty into people by law any more than you can religion.

The purposes of this bill are commendable, but it is just like fishing for a minnow and getting hold of an alligator. They go out and take in the entire universe. They drag in honest men when they are trying to get crooks, and they do not even seek to catch a crook. Why, a crook who is a real crook, and would come here for the purpose of lobbying and buying and influencing a Member of Congress, would not come here and register, would he? Certainly not; and whom would you get? You would get the legitimate people of my district, your district, and the legitimate people all over the United States. Whom else would you catch? The railroad employees, who, more or less, maintain an organization here to look after their interests. All the union labor and veteran organizations which come here not only to appear before the committees but to contact their Congressman from their district, and also to send out literature and propaganda. You would get each and every one of them as lobbyists and require them to register. You would also catch the civil-service employees, the mail carriers and the rural carriers and the clerks and all the Federal employees here in Washington, who keep a bureau here continuously and are sending propaganda to us almost daily, both personally and in the newspapers, thus seeking to influence legislation. They would be designated as lobbyists.

Not only this, but under the terms of the bill every farm organization in the country is a lobbying organization, and the heads of these organizations would have to register when they came to Washington. They come not only for the purpose of appearing before committees but they want to talk to their Congressman. I want them to talk to me. I am not afraid of being contaminated by people of this character who come here to talk and lay their cards on the table. They would have to register under the terms of this bill and be branded as lobbyists.

If a constituency has a Representative in Congress that it suspicions, the way to remedy that situation is to remedy it at home and keep him there, and not send him to a Congress that has to pass a law to rule and regulate him and keep lobbyists from coming in contact with him.

It would catch men coming here today in connection with public improvements. Men who are here in the interests of W. P. A. and P. W. A. and their attorneys and engineers. They are coming here for the purpose of influencing public officials in connection with appropriations for courthouses, schoolhouses, roads, libraries, universities, and especially when it comes to a matter of post-office appropriations that we are going to have to pass upon. You would get them all.

Mr. LAMNECK. Also Governors and mayors.

Mr. FULLER. Certainly; none of them are exempt.

Why, some good women came here from my State the other day to talk to the Arkansas delegation, including myself. They were sent by the tuberculosis association of my State with the purpose in mind of having a law enacted to carry out the objects of their association. Only a few days ago various officers of my State were here in the interest of the Arkansas Centennial, seeking an appropriation. Under this law they must register, give an account of money received and expended, and thus be branded as lobbyists. Such legislation is childish.

Mr. HESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. FULLER. Why, Mr. Chairman, if any of these good women came here on birth control they would have to register as lobbyists. [Laughter.]

If they have to register, as the gentleman from Massachusetts said, what is the use of having a register, if you cannot identify them? If conditions are as bad all over the country as they say they are in Texas, they ought to have a badge on them that states, "I am registered as a lobbyist", and it ought to be in red as a sign of danger, so that we who are presumed to be the suckers may know when we come in contact with them.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. Is the gentleman worried about birth control? [Laughter.]

Mr. FULLER. Not a bit in the world. I recollect when the gentleman from Texas appeared on the floor of the House and made a wonderful speech in which he paid a tribute to his State and got an appropriation for $3,000,000 for a celebration. Today the gentleman said in substance the legislators in his State were so dishonest they had to pass a bill requiring the lobbyist to register, and when they came to register it was discovered the register was stolen. [Laughter.] My people are not that kind. Few of that kind of people are coming here asking for legislation. They would have no influence if they did.

The Rules Committee was designated as a committee to investigate lobbyists as a result of the utility legislation. This bill is the result of that investigation. It is a demonstration that the mountains have been in labor and brought forth a mouse. If a representative from any person or corporation, even as attorney or agent, comes to Washington with his expenses paid for the purpose of influencing an appropriation or influencing the action of any Congressman, he must register and therefore is branded as a lobbyist. The good citizen, of course, would register, but the crook would never register; and, in fact, would find another way of doing business if he were engaged in corrupt practices. The whole purpose of this bill is to protect Congress from sinister influences. To me it is a demagogue bill which seeks to appease the public, but it is a bill that has no teeth in it, goes nowhere, does nothing, and accomplishes nothing except to humiliate the good citizens of our States who come here on legitimate business. Suppose a lobbyist were to register, how would Members of Congress know him or know that he had registered? In my opinion a law should be enacted to make it a penitentiary offense to in any way be interested in influencing improperly or with dishonest or sinister motives a Member of Congress. In fact, that is practically the law now. If any other measure could be suggested to make it stronger, it would certainly meet with my approval; but to me this bill is nothing more than an insult to the Members of Congress, an acknowledgment that we are possibly being influenced, and in order to protect ourselves we are willing to have our friends who come here register as lobbyists.

This bill should never become a law in its present form.

Mr. GREGORY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee, I am sorry that the gentleman from Arkansas who just preceded me was not with us when we worked so many days and weeks over the language of the bill, that he did not have an opportunity with other Members to study and realize the purposes of the bill and the reasons behind it. If he had, I am sure that the eloquent speech that he has made would have been for the bill instead of against it.

We all know that there is no purpose of terrorizing anyone or branding anyone. I think in giving an explanation of the purposes of the bill I would begin by perhaps telling you what the bill does not do rather than what the bill does do.

There is no legislation on this subject at this time. As you all know, there have been efforts from time to time to secure legislation on this subject. Nobody could hope to get a perfect bill, perfect legislation on the subject in the first bill that is enacted. It is going to be a process of evolution, and we have sought to bring in a bill here for your consideration which would in a measure correct the evils without running into many complications.

I want to tell you a few things that the bill does not cover, and that perhaps will answer some of the questions that have been asked here today.

In the first place, it does not prohibit anyone from doing anything. The bill does not stop or preclude any activity that is going on now. The only thing it does in that particular is to make them come forward and disclose whom they represent, who pays them, and the amount they are paid. It seems to me that no person can object to that—no one but a dishonest person, and it is the dishonest persons we are after in this bill.

I would say there are three classes of people affected by this bill, commonly known as lobbyists. One class will be those people who sit at home and raise great funds to flood Congress with false propaganda; people who cause telegrams and letters to be sent to you and to me to try to make it appear to us that there is a great surge of public sentiment for or against a certain measure proposed here.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. DOBBINS. I do not believe that the bill as drawn covers those people. It refers to any one employed by certain organizations. Take an organization like Magills. That is not employed by anyone. It receives contributions from people.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I think I can answer that. I think it does reach that class. That is perhaps the most harmful class, in my estimation, because they seek to make us believe that the sentiment at home for or against legislation is not what it really is; and the Magill case and the case of Hopson in the matter of the utilities bill last year are strong illustrations of that situation, where millions of fictitious letters and telegrams were sent to Members of Congress.

There is another class of lobbyists, and he is the man who gets employed under the false pretense that he has a great influence with Members of Congress. He comes here and probably registers at some hotel and may perhaps sit in the gallery for a few days, write some letters back home, and learn to speak to a few Members of Congress, but he never does a single thing toward influencing legislation, good or bad. Yet he poses as performing a great service for his people. That class of people will object to registering.

The third class of people are those who come here regularly employed, honestly employed by honest organizations, honest trade and other associations. They have a legitimate purpose here. They disclose that purpose frankly and openly; and at times they give to Members of Congress, I have no doubt, as they have given to me, valuable information. They come here openly. These people will be required to register; and my view of the subject is that when we compel them to register and disclose who they are, the honest, legitimate employee who comes here to represent his people will be placed on a higher plane and will not be placed in the class with those folk who come here under false pretenses.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. This week I have had in Washington two members of the board of directors of a corporation in Pontiac, Mich., who came here to confer with me about the proposed tax bill as it will affect their company. Does the gentleman think those men should be registered as lobbyists and subjected to that embarrassment?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. If they have come here and are paid for coming here, they are required to register. If they are here for an honest purpose, they ought not to object to registering, and if they are here for a dishonest purpose, we ought to know it.

Mr. DONDERO. But they have come as representatives of their own property, of their own company, to confer with their Congressman regarding taxes to be imposed upon them. Does the gentleman think they should be required to register under those circumstances?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. No.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. I commend the gentleman for his efforts to eliminate, or to try and bring about control of a bad evil, but I want to ask if the gentleman does not think the language of the bill, especially section 6, goes a little bit too far. For instance, you are going to require the filing with the clerk of the membership of great organizations whose representatives are here and who have been here for years and years. They are all interested not only in legislation but in other matters. Does the gentleman not think that that should be amended to some extent?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. The bill as it is drafted would perhaps require a tremendous organization like a labor organization that has millions of members who contribute, under some construction, to report to Congress all dues that they receive, but in order to meet that situation I should be very glad, when we reach the 5-minute rule, to offer an amendment which would cut that out and make it all right.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am very glad to hear the gentleman say that, as the statement is in keeping with the gentleman's view as expressed to me privately a short while ago. The gentleman's attitude clearly shows his desire to be perfectly fair. I am sure all Members appreciate the very difficult task of the gentleman from Virginia, and I am confident in view of the gentleman's attitude, when this bill is finally sent to the White House many Members now opposed to its provisions will be found supporting and commending our good friend from Virginia.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. LUDLOW. I am in sympathy with the spirit and purpose of the gentleman's bill, and I intend to vote for it, but I want an interpretation from the gentleman himself. Suppose a businessman or an attorney employed by that businessman should come to Washington to take up with Members of Congress a matter affecting that businessman's business. Would he have to be registered as a lobbyist?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I do not think so.

Mr. LUDLOW. Or would his attorney have to register as a lobbyist?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. If his attorney is here for the purpose of endeavoring to influence legislation, he would have to register.

Mr. LUDLOW. Representing only that one company?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes. If he is here to influence legislation. Undoubtedly there will be some cases where registration may be required where it ought not to be required, but you cannot frame this language for every case, because so many people come here for so many different purposes. Doubtless there will be some hardships under any language you may adopt, but I think the good of the bill will far outweigh the hardships.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. The gentleman has stated that perhaps organizations, such as the American Federation of Labor, might be affected by this legislation. I would like to ask the gentleman if this provision in section 7, requiring the person or organization to state the names of papers, periodicals, and magazines to which they have contributed articles, would also affect organizations maintaining newspapers, such as the American Federation of Labor and other organizations that do maintain periodicals?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. In the original draft of the bill there was a provision that required publications which were published for the particular purpose of influencing legislation to come under the terms of the bill. After consideration by the Committee on the Judiciary it was concluded that was going too far and struck out that provision with respect to publications. The only reference to publications is the one that is now in the bill.

Mr. HEALEY. What situation does the provision apply to now?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. If they take a page advertisement in all the Washington newspapers, for instance, saying we are going to ruin the pickle industry. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. FORD of California. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia the status of an attorney who lives here in Washington, has an office in Washington, who represents some interest, mining, coal, or whatnot.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. But what is he doing? Is he attempting to influence legislation?

Mr. FORD of California. In that capacity, if he undertakes to influence the activities of Members of Congress, will he then come within the purview of this bill?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I think so, if he is employed for that purpose.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman said he intended to introduce an amendment to exempt labor organizations?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Not specifically, but to cover a case of that kind, where their activities here are merely incidental, where it is not the principal purpose of the organization to influence legislation.

Mr. CULKIN. Of course, that general amendment would cover farm organizations, such as the Grange?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Anything that falls within that classification. However, their representatives here, who are paid and employed here for the purpose of influencing legislation, would have to register just like anybody else.

Mr. CULKIN. It would be difficult to carry out the provisions of section 3 without some such exemption.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I realize that.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. FULLER. As I understand the real intent and purpose of this bill, it is to protect the Congress from sinister influences?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Not at all. I do not think Congress needs any protection. I think we can protect ourselves.

Mr. FULLER. What could be the purpose of this? If a man registers, we would not know that he has registered.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. No, sir. You would not know he had registered unless you took the trouble to walk into the Clerk's office to find out; but it would be there just the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. HESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, it is not strange that a jittery administration should try to do something to prevent opposition to a lot of New Deal legislation such as we have had. A few moments ago I stated they wanted to do something to "terrorize" the business of the country. That is, this entrenched greed they talk about should now be curbed. They should not be allowed any longer to "gang up" against this administration. They wish now to put them on record and know exactly who they may be that oppose them in the future. Heretofore I have boasted that lobbyists did not bother with me. I did not know who they were. But now, in the future, when my friends come here representing my business interests I must first ask them, "Are you registered and stigmatized as a lobbyist?" That word "lobbyist" certainly carries a stigma with it. I read that in this country today people are being taught to believe that there are at least 7,000 Du Ponts, each of them contributing $12,000,000 to beat the present administration.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I do not have much time, but I will yield briefly.

Mr. HOOK. Should the word "lobbyist" carry any stigma with it?

Mr. GIFFORD. It should not, perhaps, but it does. All I ask is that when you make those who represent my people and who come to Washington register, that you give them a blue ribbon. Please give them a blue ribbon, reading "Lobbyist", and then when the contact men of the President or other public officials come here to lobby, put a red ribbon on them, so I can tell them apart. Think of the power of the patronage of this administration and with billions to spend! Their lobbyists are to be excused, but the poor little business organization coming down here must tag his man. This discrimination is utterly ridiculous.

A chamber of commerce often takes the initiative. It collects money from the various businesses involved when there is a bill affecting them pending here. If it collects money they will now have to report it. Then they select a certain number of men to come down here, pay their expenses, and often they pay them for the time which they lose, so they receive remuneration. They may come here and appear before a committee. That is excusable. But if they should happen to see a Congressman and tell him about their errand, I for one would have to first ask, "Have you registered?" I do not want to be pulled into court as a witness against a constituent who may have failed to register, perhaps from ignorance, and who possibly may be made to pay a fine of $1,000 and perhaps put in jail. I shall have to remember to ask, "Are you registered? I do not dare talk with you unless you are—even if you are here but for 1 day on this particular legislation."

When he goes to a hotel he should register as a lobbyist, and the proprietor should notify us as follows: "There is a lobbyist in the hotel, Congressman. Beware of him. You may become involved."

We should have a private detective to go around with us lest we speak to anybody for fear they may be a lobbyist! I can talk freely; I am not under the influence of any lobbyist. I owe nothing to them, I am perfectly free. Some of you may have had a dinner with one of them recently. But, however, in the future as they will have to report how they spend their money and perhaps you have attended such a dinner, your name may appear in his report.

The bait in the bill is that these fellows must register and tell all about it if their activities are used to defeat or elect us, because this is in it we are supposed to vote for it. Mr. Chairman, I do not even know that I would dare vote against this bill. I am afraid the gentleman who may oppose me, whoever he may be, might attempt to make political capital of it. However, this bill, of course, is aimed against the Townsend plan, and as I am against that plan I would be supposed to vote for it.

I have often taken the floor here and now I suffer what I may call "the weariness of futility" in trying to point out weaknesses in some of the things connected with this administration.

Mr. HESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, many of these things ought to be ridiculed and I am proud of the gentleman from Arkansas who does not fear to do so. Many times he has had the courage to stand here and oppose foolish measures and he does not always excuse this socialistic administration which frames legislation through the help of the Frankfurter boys who have their standing of public officials and would not have to register as lobbyists.

We all agree, of course, that lobbying in regard to the public-utility bill was undoubtedly carried too far. We are glad to have it corrected; but the method you use to correct abuses is generally to abolish or make the innocent suffer more than the guilty.

There is a stigma attached to the word "lobbyist"; you know it; that is why you want to do this. You wish to stigmatize many good citizens. Think of my chamber of commerce back home reporting every 3 months as to everybody who contributed to send labor leaders or other representatives to Washington to tell you the effect of this bill or that bill should they be passed. A person may, of course, appear before a committee, but in what a position we are placed if he comes to see us! Think of the annoyances! He must get a receipt from the railroad; it says so in the bill if his fare is for more than $10. He must get a receipt from the hotel if his bill is for $10, and he must hold them 2 long years and must report every 3 months how he spent the money for his expenses.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Gladly.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am just wondering if the gentleman has read the bill he is discussing.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes, carefully; and I can read a bill; I have had a lot of experience. [Laughter.] I have read it very carefully. I have it here, marked in almost every paragraph. The gentleman's definitions I find no fault with. As I say, section (c), whereby the fellow who tries to defeat us will have to tell all about it, is there as bait. I think the gentleman suggested an amendment with reference to chambers of commerce, labor organizations, and other organizations. I think an amendment may be necessary as they probably ought not to be included; but as I read the bill in its present form a chamber of commerce which solicits money to send people here to defeat or pass a bill certainly would come under it. The gentleman says, "If people are honest they will not object to registering." I would remind the gentleman that the honest man is not the man who desires to come here and register and be known as a lobbyist. The honest man would hesitate lest he fail to live up to all these regulations and be punished. The honest man does not like to take the chance of going to jail, but the dishonest man is used to taking chances and would not so much care.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina, if I have time remaining.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. What objection could an honest man have to registering and letting it be known that he is in Washington?

Mr. GIFFORD. An honest man hesitates to take such chances, and the present stigma as a lobbyist does not appeal to him.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. FULLER. What is the object of having a man register? If he has a sinister purpose in his mind, the mere fact of registering will not disclose it.

Mr. GIFFORD. Probably not.

Mr. HESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE].

Mr. GREGORY. Mr. Chairman, I also yield the gentleman 10 minutes.

WE NEED ADEQUATE ANTILOBBYING LEGISLATION

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who preceded me has raised some interesting questions as to the necessity for this legislation. It is not meant by the proponents of this legislation that those who come to Washington to influence legislation are crooks or are dishonest. That is not the point at all. Might it not be possible that the author of this legislation and those who believe in it have some honest and sincere purposes in mind in offering the legislation?

MANY STATES HAVE ANTILOBBY LAWS

Let me call attention to some of these motives. Everything done here is not done, I take it, with an ulterior motive in mind. This is not new legislation to the Congress of the United States or to the legislatures of the various States of the Union. I have taken the time to study carefully the different antilobby laws of the various States of the Union. Some of you may be surprised to know that a majority of the States of this Nation have in effect some kind of antilobby legislation today. It is true that much of the legislation on this subject in the different States is very inadequate to cope with the situation, but the fact that they are trying to deal with the subject shows that the legislators of the various States have recognized the importance of requiring information from these lobbyists for their membership, and that is very necessary in our complicated system of government. The thing we must be very careful of is to see to it that all parties trying to influence legislation must be required to register and give complete information showing their whole interest.

The Members of Congress are all elected every 2 years and one-third of the Members of the Senate each 2 years. A great many of these Members have had little, if any, previous training or experience in the methods of legislation, and the many different ways these shrewd lobbyists carry on. They come down here unfamiliar with the procedure. The Congress is entitled to know all about their background. These new Members have to learn it all. Under these circumstances it is easy for the lobbyists to deceive an unsuspecting Member however honest and sincere his motives may be.

HONEST WILL NOT MIND—OTHERS DO NOT MATTER

Mr. Chairman, is there anything wrong in requiring an honest man to register and give information with reference to the nature of his employment, how much he is receiving, who is paying him, and what legislation he is interested in? No honest man will object to that and certainly the crooks ought to be required to give this information. Why should not Members of Congress know all the motives back of what may be prompting the opposition or the support of any particular legislation? Every Member of Congress is entitled to know the driving motive back of what is prompting an individual or a group to take a certain action. He is entitled to know how much the lobbyist is being paid and who is paying him. The Congress should know the whole background of everyone appearing here for or against legislation. We are entitled to know the size of their fee, whether or not it is contingent, and all such information should be always available to the public. This will give us some idea of what is back of the legislation presented, and perhaps help point out some of the jokers that may be written into such legislation. Legislation is rather speedily presented here. Much of the legislation presented is under gag rules, permitting limited debate, and rushed through under pressure that does not permit mature consideration.

When you know who is supporting a given bill, how much money is being spent to put it over, this gives you notice that you should carefully investigate it and see if it will be for the benefit of the classes or the masses. Most of the legislation enacted prior to this administration for many years has been legislation for the benefit of the special interests.

Why should not the Members of Congress have complete information on these lobbyists? The answer is, They should have it. The answer has been given by a majority of the State legislatures of this Nation which have enacted legislation on this subject. This legislation does not question the motives of the Members of Congress. It simply tries to give to the Members of Congress as much information as it is possible to give, so that the Members may act intelligently upon the legislation which is presented to them for consideration. I submit that we should get all the information that we can on any pending legislation, and when we know the complete background of the different groups for or against a measure it will help us to better arrive at a fair decision for all parties concerned.

TEXAS LEGISLATURE FAILED TO ACT

Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate that we have not adequate antilobby legislation in the State of Texas to take care of the situation there.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield to my colleague from Texas.

DOES NOT APPLY TO PRIMARY ELECTIONS

Mr. DIES. There is one thing that disturbs me about the bill, and that is the fact it does not apply to nominations. Take the case of the gentleman who is now speaking. It is well known that the utilities are fighting the gentleman in his district. However, this legislation will not make it necessary for them to disclose how much money is being spent to try to defeat the gentleman in his own district.

Mr. McFARLANE. The gentleman is right. But I do not believe the people of my district will be misled by the tactics pursued by this crowd not only in my district but throughout the country. It is unfortunate that in the South, where we are elected in the primary, the special interests, such as the public utilities and the other special interest groups that largely control elections, cannot be required to divulge this information and show how much money they have put into these political campaigns toward the election of Congressmen. It seems that there should be some way of requiring this crowd to furnish this information. There is no doubt but what the special interests have elected men to high offices. Under our primary system election in the primary is equivalent to election in the general election, because very seldom do we have any opposition in the general election in the Southern States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is it not within the power of the State of Texas to obtain this information?

NO RATE REGULATORY COMMISSION IN TEXAS

Mr. McFARLANE. Why, we do not even have a State regulatory utilities commission down there, and the special interests control such legislation in Texas, and they have done so for years. They have blocked such legislation in Texas. Try to get legislation enacted down there to require these paid lobbyists to register and disclose their background—they just have not been able to do it, that is all.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman will recall that an effort was made to bring about certain disclosures with reference to enormous sums of money that had been spent in the State of Texas, and the Supreme Court held that the act could not be enforced because, under our Constitution, it was not a requisite for holding office.

SUPREME COURT DECLARES VOID CORRUPT PRACTICES ACT

Mr. McFARLANE. They have so held. The law that we had, weak as it was, required certain disclosures to be made in primary elections regarding the campaign contributions received and to limit the amount of money a candidate could spend, but the Supreme Court of Texas in October 1934, as I understand it, practically nullified the accountability in primary elections and held that a corrupt practice act statute that refused to allow a candidate's name to go on the ballot for spending more than allowed by law was adding provisions of disqualifications not mentioned by the Constitution and was void.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In view of the description given by the gentleman from Texas of the horrid conditions prevalent in his State, may I inquire what political party is in the majority there?

Mr. McFARLANE. Well, the State went for Hoover in 1928, but that will not happen again. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact it is not a horrid condition that prevails down there. It is just democracy of its kind asserting itself, such as you have in many other States; and if we can enact legislation on this subject, we think we can further correct the situation.

Mr. DIES. Does not the gentleman believe that if we set a good example here in Washington maybe the Legislature of Texas will follow suit?

Mr. McFARLANE. I am hoping that may be true.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will the gentleman yield for a short observation?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAVERICK. My district had a Republican Representative in Congress for 14 years and I may say he was a good Congressman too. There are a great many Republican voters down there in Texas. There are many Republicans in my own district; I mention this for the benefit of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am wondering whether the same question which was just propounded might not be asked relative to the State of Maine, where some 25 men had money given to them by the utility and holding companies back in 1930, as disclosed in an Interstate Commerce report. I guess there is no question about what party was in power then in the State of Maine, but there is some question now, thank God. [Laughter and applause.]

SPECIAL INTERESTS LOBBYISTS ALWAYS WORK NATION-WIDE

Mr. McFARLANE. In answer to the gentleman let me say it is well known that the special interests have taken a very active part in politics. They have done this in my State and I take it they have taken the same active part and interest in the politics of the different States of the Union, perhaps no more or no less than in Texas.

MOST IMPORTANT LEGISLATION WE CAN ENACT

Mr. Chairman, if we had had an adequate antilobby legislation law in effect since the World War, so that the Congress could have had complete information on the background of all lobbyists and paid propaganda of all kinds that floods Washington, I do not believe we would have had the depression in which we now find ourselves. I believe that much of the special interests legislation written into law would have been prohibited. The many pieces of special-privileged legislation such as the tariff laws, amendments to the banking laws, procurement laws, and tax laws would have been strongly amended for the benefit of the masses of the people.

THE MONEY TRUST LOBBY

As it is, for example take this administration, and go back even to the Banking Act of 1935, which we find was a compromise measure, as finally written which leaves under the control of the five presidents of the Reserve banks the right to largely control the open-market operations of the banks of the Nation which allows them through the purchase and sale of Government bonds to largely contract and expand the credit of the Nation and thus to regulate the value of money and cause future panics. Other similar amendments to the law favor private banking at the expense of the Government.

A later illustration was the recent second consideration of the bill to permit the preferred stock of national banks in the hands of the R. F. C. to be exempt from taxation by the States and local subdivisions thereof. We defeated this legislation on February 25 only to find the lobby reorganizing to come back and enact it March 19.

THE POWER TRUST LOBBY

The second strongest lobby is the Power Trust. We had a fair illustration of their power in the tremendous battle waged last session by the Congress in trying to enact adequate regulation of the utility-holding companies under the Wheeler-Rayburn utility bill.

You will remember how the Congress fought from January until August trying to enact adequate legislation on this subject and finally were forced to accept a compromise in order to get any legislation on this subject. It is well known that the Power Trust who admittedly are collecting about $1,000,000,000 annually in the Nation beyond what is considered a fair rate for the electricity consumed have determined to defeat any and all Members of Congress who voted against them on this legislation. Since under our inadequate rate regulatory laws the Power Trust is able to spend unlimited amounts of money in political campaigns and charge these expenditures up as part of their overhead expenses and thus make the consuming public pay for them, should cause the American people to rise up in their might and insist upon adequate laws on this subject to stop this kind of high-powered racketeering.

POWER TRUST PROPAGANDA AT WICHITA FALLS

Coming a little closer to home, we find that the Power Trust dailies at Wichita Falls are now wailing long and loud about being oppressed and insulted because the Black investigating committee inspected their telegrams and because two Government inspectors were sent to check up on the February 8 municipal-light-plant election. I see no reason why the Power Trust dailies crowd should feel outraged. They did all within their power to defeat the rights of the people to secure lower light rates even to the extent of sending Mr. J. H. Allison to Washington to try to block the project. Failing in that, they misrepresented all the facts they could to defeat the election, and now that the truth is fairly well known to the people in Wichita Falls as to how the election was bought, they try to act like they are outraged about the exposure. They say that "snoopers" should not be allowed to tell the truth about them. They have made so many complaints about what they allege to be the unfairness of the P. W. A. investigators' report on the February 8 election that additional investigators have been sent down to check the report and see if any errors have been made. So it seems that the "snoopers" are all right if sent at the instance and request of the Power Trust crowd. I predict that when the people of Wichita Falls and elsewhere realize how they have been duped by the Power Trust through their paid hirelings, and their misrepresentations and falsehoods scattered, that they will rise up and demand legislation that will put a stop to such tactics and will permit free people to operate and manage their Government for the benefit of all the people rather than the privileged few.

Many other special interests' lobbies now functioning before Congress could be mentioned, but time will not permit.

Now, I have a few amendments I expect to offer to this bill. One amendment will be on page 6 in regard to disclosures with respect to certain publications.

It was disclosed recently, as I mentioned here on the floor of the House, that no record is required to be kept of radio broadcasts. Speeches are not required to be filed under our Federal Communications Act, and there is no such requirement by the Commission. The radio stations are not required to file any report of broadcasts made. I believe we ought to require that a report of any broadcast made to influence legislation should be filed as other information is required to be filed under this bill.

Mr. HESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

LOBBYING

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, as I understand this proposed bill, it will not prevent anyone from talking to a Member of Congress about any proposed legislation, whether he is interested in its adoption or its defeat, provided, of course, he is not accepting, soliciting, or collecting funds from some other person or corporation for the purpose of influencing such legislation. If I am wrong about this, I hope some member of the committee will speak up and say I am wrong.

Mr. FULLER. I can tell the gentleman that he is wrong.

Mr. PATMAN. Where is the provision in the bill?

Mr. FULLER. Section 7, page 6:

any person who shall accept employment for any consideration to attempt to influence the passage or defeat of any pending or proposed legislation or appropriation.

Mr. PATMAN. I know what the gentleman has in mind. That refers to employment. If they are employed, certainly, they are representing another person or corporation. They would not be employed by someone else if they were not representing some other person or corporation. Therefore, the bill does not include any person who visits your office for any purpose on earth in regard to the adoption or the defeat of legislation, unless that person is collecting, receiving, or soliciting funds from some other person or corporation in order to assist him in placing this proposal before such Member of Congress.

Mr. FULLER. I cannot agree with the gentleman.

Mr. PATMAN. I know I am right about that.

Mr. FULLER. I cannot agree with the gentleman because the gentleman cannot find language in the bill to substantiate what he is saying.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman pointed out the provision referring to employment. I have the bill here and the gentleman can read it over himself.

Mr. FULLER. I know what it does.

HIDDEN AND CORRUPT LOBBIES BROUGHT OUT INTO THE OPEN

Mr. PATMAN. All in the world this bill does is to bring out into the open hidden and corrupt lobbies. It is true that some good lobbies will be involved. You cannot bring out all the crooks before the public view unless you inconvenience a few innocent people. The innocent people should not object to this if it is for a good purpose.

I have been chairman of a special committee investigating lobbies in different States, and here is the policy that they pursue. They first hire some person in the State with influence. They do not care whether he is a good lawyer or not. They will pay him sometimes on a contingent basis, paying him $2,500 to stay there during the session of the legislature, with a provision that if he succeeds in stopping the bills they want stopped they will give him $2,500 more at the end of the session.

They are sometimes employed on a contingent basis. If they were known, possibly, such persons would not be able to suggest certain amendments and have influence.

The way to defeat legislation in Congress or in the legislature of a State is to get some person who is innocent, myself or yourself, convinced that certain amendments should be inserted in a bill. We have not studied the amendment like the person who tells us about it. We think offhand it is all right. We go ahead and get the amendment in there, and maybe it destroys the bill or causes the bill to be held unconstitutional.

Under this proposed law the people who are around here suggesting these amendments and endeavoring to influence committees and Members of Congress will be required to register. We will know whom they represent, we will know where they are getting their money, and when they come to us asking us to suggest certain amendments and do certain things, we can still listen to them and tell them that we shall be glad to give the amendments consideration.

Mr. GREGORY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 more minutes.

Mr. PATMAN. We will still listen to them, if we desire to give their views consideration, but we will know their interest in the matter and we will take their interest into consideration.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. In just a moment. So, after all, this is just a matter of bringing hidden and corrupt bodies out into the open.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I cannot yield right now.

We had one situation before this committee where it was shown that a certain organization known as the "Cornstalk Brigade" had a lobbyist who was paid big money. The corporations had gone in together and paid him an enormous sum. He was to go out and get certain farm leaders—innocent they were—get them to do certain things, go to the State legislature and tell the members certain things about the legislation, hoping to get it defeated.

If that lobbyist had been required to register, these people would not have been misled and the members of the legislature would not have been misled.

The same situation will apply here. It will bring them out into the open. If the man is honest, he does not care, he will put his name on the book, on the register. There are going to be good lobbyists and bad lobbyists. This brings out the facts, so you may know who they represent.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Briefly, as my time has almost expired.

Mr. McFARLANE. What does the gentleman think about the lobby situation in Texas?

Mr. PATMAN. I wish we had an effective lobby law there. But that does not affect the legislation here. I am for an effective law for the Congress of the United States, for the protection of the public, for the protection of the Members of Congress as well. Not that we will ever be bribed or influenced; I am not afraid of that. Members of Congress are influenced, sometimes improperly, when they do not know it. If we knew the interests behind the person who is seeking to influence the passage or defeat the legislation,

Members of Congress and the public would be in a better position to protect themselves. This bill is to protect Members of Congress and the public as well.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. The gentleman knows that there is an antilobbying bill known as the Black bill. What is the difference between that legislation and this bill under consideration, if the gentleman is familiar with it?

Mr. PATMAN. I am not familiar with the Black bill; but this bill, it occurs to me, is a good bill. It will not restrict anybody's rights. Anyone will still have the right to ask a Member of Congress to vote for or against a bill. This will only affect those who are working for some other person or corporation where they are soliciting or receiving money. I hope the bill will pass and become a law.

Mr. HESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, one of the most dangerous forces in this life of America have been influences within the Government.

This measure as now written brings into the open all the influences outside of the Government which seek to influence legislation, but it does not include the bureaucracies which have been created in the last several years. More than $7,000,000,000 has been turned over to these inexperienced and nontechnical gentlemen for disbursement. Much of this has been used unwisely. It is stated that some of it has been used to influence legislation. Let me give you an illustration: Last year a bill was pending before one of the House committees that had for its purpose the establishment of a public-works department, which would take over all of the public works of America and put them under the Secretary of the Interior. The bill was defeated in committee, largely by Democratic influence, but while the bill was pending, the minions of Honest Harold Ickes, went to and fro among members urging them to support the bill, talking knowingly about public works in their several districts. Ickes then had the spending of some four billions of dollars. He held the purse strings of our Government for this purpose of protecting the membership of the House against such influence. I propose to offer an amendment to the bill at the proper time as follows:

Excepting that no public official shall use the power or patronage of his office for the purpose of influencing legislation.

This amendment, if adopted, will protect Congress from a greater temptation perhaps than the temptation from without. It will protect the integrity of the legislative branch of government. I am for this bill. I will be for any bill of this general nature which bears the name of my distinguished colleague from Virginia, Judge SMITH. The amendment I propose will insure that the bureaucrats who are vested with temporary power, with the disposition of billions of dollars, shall not use that power within the law for the purpose of making over the pattern of this Government or for the purpose of boring from within.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I cannot yield now as I have only 5 minutes. I trust the Members on both sides of the aisle, mindful of this peril, this ever-living peril of bureaucracy, will support this amendment to the end that this Republic may not be destroyed from within.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I am not opposed to the principle involved in this bill. As a matter of fact, I am in hearty accord with it, but there are certain inherent dangers in this bill, involving such groups as labor organizations, unemployment organizations, and farmers' organizations, that I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill certain questions on that particular phase. For instance section 6 defines what organizations must comply—those having for their purpose:

(a) The enactment or defeat of any legislation or appropriation by the Congress of the United States or the repeal or nonrepeal of any existing laws of the United States, or adoption or defeat of any amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

(b) To influence directly or indirectly the passage or defeat of any legislation or appropriation by the Congress of the United States.

Under section 2 they must file a list of contributors and contributions of any amount or of any value whatsoever. Throughout the United States there exist many so-called unemployed organizations, organizations composed of the unemployed, whose contributions amount to perhaps no more than 25 cents a month. These organizations are interested in legislation before Congress. They are interested in adequate appropriations for relief, both direct and work relief. My question is, Would such organizations be compelled to file the names and addresses of any members making any such contribution or contributions of any value whatsoever?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. No; unless their principal purpose is to influence legislation or to influence directly or indirectly the election or defeat of any Federal officer.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Is not that rather vague? Some organizations may have a different principal purpose tomorrow from what they have today. Let us say that an organization is today in existence for the simple purpose of petitioning Congress for adequate relief appropriations?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. If that is the principal purpose of the organization, if the principal purpose is to influence legislation, it does not make any difference what the organization is.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Their purpose is to bring about adequate appropriations for relief. They would be required to file according to section 2. In other words, they would be required to give a full list of the 10-cent and the 25-cent contributions? Does not the gentleman think that is a rather absurd situation?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I do not. If they are organized for that specific purpose, for the purpose of trying to influence legislation, whether their sums are made up of a few contributors of large sums or of many contributors of small sums, I do not see that it makes a great deal of difference.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. It does for the reason that if you are going to compel an organization of the unemployed, with a membership perhaps of 50,000 or 100,000, whose contributions are in nickels and dimes, to comply with the provisions of section 2 of your bill, what you are accomplishing here is merely hampering minorities of unemployed and propertyless people, men without money or privileges at all in their petitioning Congress. In other words, you are aiming at the real lobbyist of special privileges. You miss him and you hit the unemployed and labor organizations. Unless this bill is amended, that is just what you are doing.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I think the gentleman is unduly worried about the actual working out of the matter.

Of course, the organization that collects 25 cents in dues usually has a record of its membership, and so forth, but where they take up collections of nickels and dimes, of course, it probably will be impossible to have the individual contributions. They would say they took up a collection at such-and-such an occasion and collected so much money.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Very well, then why should there be any serious objection to fixing a specific amount, say, of $5, under section 2, instead of saying "of any value whatsoever"?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. My thought was, as I stated before, that, no matter whether a few people are contributing large sums or many people are contributing small sums, the public ought to know where the money is coming from.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. That is just what I was referring to. The result will be that you will know very little about the money behind privileged interests and you will expose contributors to the causes of labor and the unemployed to all sort of intimidation. Why not be realistic about this matter? Why has not the House committee adopted the Black bill, which does a real job on the lobbyist of entrenched interests? What you are doing is hampering organizations such as the unemployed, from effectively petitioning Congress.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. You are not hampering them. You may be putting them to a lot of detail accounting. I agree with the gentleman that far.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Yes; but the organizations which we are really after, representing privileged interests, which come here to promote legislation, have accountants and a number of clever specialists to prepare their reports, and they will always present reports keeping them within the law, but if you want to get at some unemployed group you can very easily strike at them through this bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am not talking about any unemployed group.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. That is what I am interested in.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It does happen, and it is happening right now, that a greater total amount is being collected in dimes than in dollars.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Even so, it is about time that the underprivileged got together and contributed for their own benefit. They have just as much right to use nickels and dimes as the "big boys" have to use their hundreds and thousands. In those cases where they are collecting nickels and dimes, the cause for which they are fighting, whether it is right or wrong, irrespective of the merits of the cause, is not for the special privileged property and financial interests. What you should be aiming at is to compel the lobbyists for the privileged interests to sign up and register and throw light on their activities. They constitute the real evil we should get at. When you compel a list of the contributors of the unemployed organizations to be registered, or even that of a labor union, you are exposing those lists to their enemies, whose lobbyists we should eliminate.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Now, will the gentleman tell me why any unemployed should be contributing a nickel to anybody, and what form of human being ever took a nickel from the unemployed? There are plenty of people ready to champion them without taking nickels and dimes from them.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. That should be true, but experience has taught the unemployed, the farmers, and labor that to rely on their so-called friends is futile. They are better off when they rely on themselves, on their own collective action. This united collective action requires money for organizational purposes, literature, and other necessary expenses. Unity and a good war chest will bring these masses real results. They are contributing to themselves. This policy of self-reliance is better than expecting anything from "friendly" politicians.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have never heard of an unemployed having contributed a nickel or a dime or a quarter. If they do, the people who take the money ought to be put in jail, and the gentleman knows that.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The unemployed are not contributing for anybody else's benefit but for their own. They need bigger and better organizations. Their nickels go for literature and for the distribution of that literature and for newspapers of their own. They have just as much right to contribute their nickels and dimes to fight for their cause as the big politicians or the big industrialists have to collect their thousands of dollars to influence Congress. The people who should be in jail should be those who refuse adequate relief and not the leaders of the jobless.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Now, can the gentleman give us a concrete case of where anybody collected money from the unemployed for any purpose?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Just now all I know is this, that the various unemployed organizations are contributing nickels and dimes for literature, to be distributed among the unemployed and to send to the Members of Congress and to send to the various influential citizens of the community. They are building their own organizations. Have they not a legal and ethical right to do this?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That has nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Oh, they would have to register and give a list of everybody who gives a nickel or a dime, when they organize for the purpose of petitioning Congress. The proponent of this bill does not even deny that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] has expired.

Mr. GREGORY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK].

LOBBY LEGISLATION GOOD—TEXAS NEEDS IT, TOO

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I am especially interested in this bill because I come from the State of Texas, where we have no similar legislation, where the big corporations dominate the State, and where lobbyists go wholly unrestrained; where they do practically as they please.

In considering lobby legislation let us consider it as it applies to all types of organizations, including those devoted to labor. I have studied the labor movement a great deal. I know there has been crookedness in labor organizations, in radical organizations, just as there has been crookedness in conservative organizations. I am not saying that to please the conservative organizations, but it was found in Chicago and in other places that there were labor leaders who were shadily making from forty to seventy-five thousand dollars a year. We ought to know, if it is a labor organization or any other kind, where the money is coming from. We are entitled to know, and so is the public. I think this type of legislation will lead to tracing a great many things that we want to know. For instance, every now and then somebody rises and roars that the American Civil Liberties Union, of which I am a member, is getting money from Moscow. You know everybody has to use the word "Moscow" when they have not got any brains or have not got anything to say. It is just an alibi. The American Civil Liberties Union spent $40,000, the American Liberty League spent around $400,000—each in the year 1935—and the first one defended many friendless people in their rights under the Constitution; the latter, none. This should be known, but in both cases the sources of funds should be available for the public.

LOBBY LEGISLATION SHOULD APPLY STRICTLY TO ALL TYPES OF ORGANIZATIONS

When such a bill as this becomes law every organization—labor, industry, business, commerce, or the unemployed—will be required to furnish information that will give the whole background to movements of all kinds in this country. In Germany Hitler fooled the people, but he could never have done it without the money of the reactionaries and munitions makers. Had the people known, he might not have come to power. This bill should apply to all—radicals, too; and we will know where they get their money. The principle, at least, will protect all honest citizens. This is a reasonable proposition; it works on all classes of people; and I do not see any reason why an organization of unemployed, an organization of liberals, an organization of radicals, whatever they may be called, should not be put on the same basis as the Liberty League. Now, I like to get up here and say hard things—and true, by the way—about the Liberty League. I do not like what they do, and I should like to destroy their organization. I consider them to be as arrogant and as ignorant as the French nobility; but it would be both arrogant and ignorant of me to deny them their full civil rights or to require reports from them, but not from labor and unemployed organizations; but I want to do it with truth. Every organization that operates with lobbyists in this country should be willing to give the truth to the people of the United States, not because we as Congressmen particularly want to put somebody in jail, not because we are afraid we cannot take care of ourselves, but because we want the American people to know the truth.

I just want to get these few words in about my own State. I do not have to tell you about the greatness of my State; it is the greatest State, the largest State, in the Union. We have fine large trees, high cactuses, beautiful sunsets, pretty moonlight, and all that; but we have myriads of lobbyists, too. We have some crooked lobbyists. We have utility lobbyists, we have great corporations, owned outside the State, robbing us of our natural resources; and as I said before, they just about run the State of Texas. Although this is Federal legislation, it will help every State, including Texas. I hope we will pass this bill for the benefit of the people of the Union and to give my people back in Texas a good example. [Applause.]

Mr. GREGORY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to declare in favor of the bill before the House. I have been convinced for quite some time that something must be done to bring under control this pernicious lobbyist element which is so much in evidence here in the city of Washington. I do not much care how we do it, just so we can accomplish what we set out to do. There are altogether too many cheap lawyers here whose practice is about on a par with petit larceny, who would starve to death anywhere but in Washington. When a bill comes up, no matter whether it is good, bad, or indifferent, these men with their special connections immediately send wires to your home town and my home town and create a panic by telling our legitimate industries and organizations that their liberties are at stake, or that they are about to be destroyed; and immediately you receive an avalanche of telegrams and appeals, followed by delegations that come to call on you. Frequently legislation that is intended for the best interest of all the people is defeated or emasculated in such way as to be made absolutely worthless. In the absence of any disturbing legislation this slimy element frequently tries to introduce sandbag legislation which it later agitates against and thus it creates an atmosphere of doing something to protect either legitimate industries or organizations. Thus they justify their existence and continue to draw big retainers and fees. Their service is worthless; they are not needed. They should have to go.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] expressed concern about organizations of labor and the unemployed. I am not afraid the interests of the unemployed will be jeopardized under this bill, and I am confident that my labor friends and board of commerce element in Detroit will be willing to register if they qualify as lobbyists. This bill is not intended in any way to compromise such people or organizations, to restrict their efforts, or to prevent their working for a good bill or against a bad bill, as they may see it; it is for the purpose of knowing the scoundrel who seeks to influence legislation. He is the only one who has any reason or cause for concern.

I am not at all fearful about my board of commerce element or about the Detroit Federation of Labor or the American Federation of Labor or any church organization or any honorable element that is interested in legislation. They will be willing, if they come here as lobbyists, to register; they will be willing to uncover, to work in the open. It is the scoundrel permanently here or who comes here to sell you in what seems to be a disinterested way, and the man who would compromise you, that this bill is aimed at. These are the men we want to put on record. The professionals who will work for any cause or for any element, good or bad, just so they are paid for their services.

I do not see how any Member of this House can honestly and conscientiously object to this legislation. I am not certain that it goes far enough. I am positive of one thing, the bill is not perfect; but it is not the only time a first attempt has not produced perfection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to my Michigan colleague.

Mr. DONDERO. Suppose the president of a corporation in the gentleman's district should come to Washington and talk to the gentleman about legislation; does the gentleman think he ought to register before he talks to the gentleman?

Mr. DINGELL. No; and I do not believe he has to register under the terms of this bill. My colleague from Kentucky tells me he does not have to register.

Mr. DONDERO. I call the gentleman's attention to section 7, which states that the provisions of this section shall not apply to any person who merely appears before a committee. No one else is excluded, everybody else is included. Does the gentleman think it should be left this way?

Mr. DINGELL. It also indicates he must be employed, and I assume that means employed for the express purpose of lobbying and does not apply when he comes down here to protect himself.

Mr. DONDERO. The gentleman would not object to an amendment to clear up that situation?

Mr. DINGELL. No. I believe the committee is anxious to protect everyone under this bill. I believe they want to protect anyone who may come here to ask a Congressman or a group of Congressmen to consider certain action in reference to some particular legislation that may be pending. I assume the bill will exclude nonprofessional lobbyists, seeking to protect themselves and their interests.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the use of offering a clarifying amendment when it is already admitted that the bill would not apply to such a situation as the gentleman has stated? There is no need for a clarifying amendment.

Mr. DINGELL. I may say to the gentleman from Alabama that I am not familiar with every detail of the bill; however, I am confident that the committee is willing to agree to such clarifying amendments as may be necessary to protect honorable individuals and organizations as may be interested in certain legislation. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when used in this act—

(a) The term "contribution" includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or any thing of value and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make contribution;

(b) The term "expenditure" includes a payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money or any thing of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make an expenditure;

(c) The term "person" includes an individual, partnership, committee, association, corporation, and any other organization or group of persons;

(d) The term "Clerk" means the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of every person who shall in any manner solicit or receive a contribution to any organization or fund for the purposes hereinafter designated to keep a detailed and exact account of—

(1) All contributions of any amount or of any value whatsoever;

(2) The name and address of every person making any such contribution and the date thereof;

(3) All expenditures made by or on behalf of such organization or fund; and

(4) The name and address of every person to whom any such expenditure is made and the date thereof.

(5) It shall be the duty of such person to obtain and keep a receipted bill, stating the particulars, for every expenditure of such funds exceeding $10 in amount, and to preserve all receipted bills and accounts required to be kept by this section for a period of at least 2 years from the date of the filing of the statement containing such items.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU: On page 2, line 16, after the word "contribution", insert "in excess of $5 in amount or value."

On page 2, line 20, insert "in excess of $5 in amount or value."

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct the attention of the chairman of the committee to this amendment. The bill in its present form requires that each person or organization receiving any money shall, in accordance with the terms and conditions of this bill, keep an accurate and complete record of each and every contribution regardless of amount, together with the name of the contributor. There are a large number of organizations that are collecting money, and within their constitutional right, for the purpose of influencing legislation. I know there will be no attempt on the part of the membership of this House to deprive such organizations of their right to function.

They have the right to collect money from interested persons and to present their views to the Congress of the United States.

I think, however, it is advisable to keep an accurate record of the names of those people who are supporting such organizations through large contributions. But it seems to me ridiculous to expect an organization such as the Townsend plan, we will say, or the Father Coughlin organization, or any of these others, to keep a record of everyone who contributes a dime or a quarter or some other small amount. I believe such organizations should make an accounting of the aggregate amount received. If they receive a hundred thousand dollars a year, the public is entitled to know that fact, but certainly it is unimportant to know whether Bill Jones or John Smith contributed 25 cents or 50 cents.

Mr. Chairman, I think the purposes of this bill could well be met if we required them to keep an account of the aggregate amount collected, but when it comes to keeping a record of the names of contributors, we should require them only to keep a list of those who contribute $5 or any amount in excess of that sum.

Mr. CREAL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CREAL. I believe the gentleman is a little high in his figure. Let us make it $4.98.

Mr. BOILEAU. I do not know whether the gentleman is being facetious or not, but it does seem to me ridiculous to ask the Townsend organization to submit a list of everybody who pays 10 cents a month dues. I want to say right here and now that I am not offering this amendment for the purpose of advocating the Townsend plan, because I believe it is obnoxious, and I believe it is wrong.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. The statement of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL] about $4.98 is not at all facetious. There is a serious part of the question which he raises. The gentleman from Wisconsin is endeavoring by his amendment to provide a loophole. If it is under $4.98, it will be all right to lobby without registering.

Mr. BOILEAU. No; the gentleman is in error. It means that the organization who collects funds must keep a record of the name of contributors of $5 or more. They still have to register, and would have to do so in either event.

Mr. DINGELL. If anything is paid in for the purpose of lobbying, they would not have to report it?

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman is in error. This amendment is such that if they collect any amount, regardless of what it may be, they will have to register. The bill in its present form, however, requires them to keep a list of everybody who contributes, even a penny. They have to record the name of the person, and that, it seems to me, is ridiculous. If it should be required that they keep a record of the names of those who contribute any sums in excess of $5, that should be sufficient. Certainly there is not going to be any great amount of corruption on the part of persons who contribute such small amounts.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the Committee to give this amendment its serious consideration.

Mr. GREGORY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has raised a question with reference to the Townsend organization making a report. I do not believe the objection upon that score is applicable at all, because that is the basis and foundation of the Townsend plan. They want everybody to make a report on every transaction and certainly they will not object to reporting 10 cents or a quarter. I am sure therefore that group will not offer a strenuous objection.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREGORY. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. I hope the gentleman understands that my amendment will still require the Townsend organization or any other organization to keep a record of the aggregate amount of receipts. My amendment only provides that they will not have to list the names of everyone who contributes a dime or a quarter. Under the present provisions of the bill they might have to report millions of names, and it would not be of any particular benefit to the Congress because no one would be interested in knowing who contributed such small amounts.

Mr. GREGORY. How would the gentleman find out what the aggregate contribution was unless he knew something about the source of the contribution? Would there not be quite a loophole there affording an opportunity for incorrect reports to be made unless we required the name and address of those who had made the contributions which made up the aggregate fund reported?

Mr. BOILEAU. If we take the Townsend organization as an illustration, the Townsend Club in the gentleman's district or in mine that contributes $50 to national headquarters would have to be listed as a contributor.

Mr. GREGORY. As defined in lines 11 and 12, on page 2, if it is a fund for the purpose hereinafter designated, which is outlined on page 5, in section 6, and if they do these things for this purpose, then they ought to report, and there should be no exemption of anyone.

Mr. BOILEAU. My only object is that we may have an effective antilobbying bill. I am as anxious to have such a bill as the gentleman or any other Member of the House, but it seems to me we are tying this down so it will be ridiculous, and I may say, with all deference to the committee, I do not think this matter has been given sufficient consideration, and it seems to me we are asking too much to require all these small contributions to be listed here with the name of the contributor. It is not going to be helpful to the Members or anyone else to know whether these individuals contributed 25 cents or 50 cents.

Mr. GREGORY. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, it is very important to retain this section as written. The committee has given very careful consideration to the matter, and I hope the committee will vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU and Mr. SCOTT) there were—ayes 21, noes 45.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 3. Every individual who received a contribution for any of the purposes hereinafter designated shall within 5 days after receipt thereof render to the person or organization for which such contributions were received a detailed account thereof, including the name and address of the person making such contribution and the date on which received.

Sec. 4. Every individual, partnership, committee, association, corporation, and any other organization or group of persons receiving any contributions for the purposes hereinafter designated shall file with the Clerk between the first and the tenth day of each month, a statement containing complete as of the day next preceding the date of filing—

(1) The name and address of each person who has made a contribution of any size or value not mentioned in the preceding report; except that the first report filed pursuant to this act shall contain the name and address of each person who has made any contribution to such organization during the preceding 6 months;

(2) The total sum of the contributions made to or for such person or organization during the calendar year and not stated under paragraph (1);

(3) The total sum of all contributions made to or for such organization or person during the calendar year;

(4) The name and address of each person to whom an expenditure in one or more items of the aggregate amount or value, within the calendar year, of $10 or more has been made by or on behalf of such person or organization, and the amount, date, and purpose of such expenditure;

(5) The total sum of all expenditures made by or on behalf of such organization during the calendar year and not stated under paragraph (4);

(6) The total sum of expenditures made by or on behalf of such organization during the calendar year;

(7) The statements required to be filed by subdivision (a) shall be cumulative during the calendar year to which they relate, but where there has been no change in an item reported in a previous statement only the amount need be carried forward.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU:

Page 3, lines 20 and 21, strike out "organization" and insert "person."

Page 3, line 23, strike out "or organization."

Page 4, lines 6 and 7, strike out "or organization."

Page 4, line 9, strike out "organization" and insert "person."

Page 4, line 12, strike out "organization" and insert "person."

Mr. GREGORY. Mr. Chairman, the committee will accept the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU: Page 4, line 2, strike out "organization or."

Mr. GREGORY. Mr. Chairman, the committee will accept the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 5. A statement required by this act to be filed with the Clerk—

(a) Shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the person filing such statement, taken before any officer authorized to administer oaths;

(b) Shall be deemed properly filed when deposited in an established post office within the prescribed time, duly stamped, registered, and directed to the Clerk at Washington, D. C., but in the event it is not received, a duplicate of such statement shall be promptly filed upon notice of the Clerk of its nonreceipt;

(c) Shall be preserved by the Clerk for a period of 2 years from the date of filing, shall constitute a part of the public record of his office, and shall be open to public inspection.

Sec. 6. The provisions of this act shall apply to any individual, partnership, committee (except a political committee as defined in the Federal Corrupt Practices Act), association, corporation, or any other organization or group of persons who by themselves, or through any agent or employee or other persons in any manner whatsoever, directly or indirectly, solicit, collect, or receive money or other thing of value to be used in whole or in part to aid, or the principal purpose of which organization is to aid, in the accomplishment of any of the following purposes:

(a) The enactment or defeat of any legislation or appropriation by the Congress of the United States or the repeal or non-repeal of any existing laws of the United States, or adoption or defeat of any amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

(b) To influence directly or indirectly the passage or defeat of any legislation or appropriation by the Congress of the United States.

(c) To influence, directly or indirectly, the election or defeat of any candidate for any elective Federal office.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 10, after the word "Act", insert a comma and the following: "and duly organized State or local committees of a political party."

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment is to cure an oversight in the original draft of the bill, as I stated this morning to the gentleman from New Jersey. It was intended in the original draft to except political committees and those required to file under the Corrupt Practices Act. In going over it more carefully, we felt that there might be some misunderstanding about the meaning of that clause, and therefore I offer this amendment.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. LEHLBACH. My attention was distracted at the moment the Clerk read the amendment. Will the gentleman state just what his amendment is?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. It inserts the words "duly organized State or local committees of a political party."

Mr. LEHLBACH. After the word "act"?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. After the word "act."

Mr. FULLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. FULLER. I notice that the committee accepted an amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU], in which it struck out the word "organization." What purpose does that serve, when on page 2, line 4, it says that the term "person" includes an individual, partnership, committee, association, corporation, and any other organization or group of persons?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. The gentleman has discovered the reason why the amendment was offered and why it was accepted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SMITH of Virginia: Page 5, line 15, strike out the words "in whole or in part" and insert the word "principally."

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the language of the bill on page 5, line 15, as it now reads is:

Solicit, collect, or receive money or other thing of value to be used in whole or in part to aid, etc.

The amendment proposes to change that language by striking out the words "in whole or in part" and by inserting the word "principally." The reason for that amendment is, it was brought to my attention, and I think to the attention of other members of the committee, that there were many organizations of national scope who have large memberships of thousands and some of millions of members organized principally for other purposes than affecting legislation, but many of those organizations do from time to time become interested in legislation, and they undertake to do something about it. It was not thought necessary or proper that that class of organization, because a minor part of its funds were devoted to purposes of influencing legislation, should be required to report all of the dues of their hundreds of thousands of members, and for that reason this amendment is proposed so that it would not apply except where the money is collected for the principal purpose of undertaking to influence legislation or the election of Federal officers, and I think it takes care of the question the gentleman from Wisconsin is interested in.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. I call the gentleman's attention to line 16 of that same section, where the word "organization" is used. Does not the gentleman believe that that should be changed to make it read "person", because there are others than organizations receiving money, and the word "person" would relate back to include organizations, associations, and so forth.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I do not think we object to that.

Mr. BOILEAU. I think it is important, because some individuals will be receiving money and it seems to me we want to include them. Also, in the first few words we have a repetition of the definition of the word "person." That is not so important. That can be changed in the interest of clarity, but it seems to me in line 16 it is vital that the word "organization" should be changed to "person."

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I suggest that we dispose of the pending amendment.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. If the word "principally" is to be used here, the matter of the Townsend Club is suggested, and how can one tell whether their activities are principally to aid, and so forth? Would it not provide a loophole to let out some of these organizations?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I think it would not if they are engaged in the activities mentioned in the bill.

Mr. McFARLANE. If we are to have the word "principally" in there should we not define it by saying at least one-half or three-quarters of their efforts, and so forth.

Mr. MILLARD. And who is going to determine this "principally" that is referred to?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Ultimately it will be determined by a court if someone is haled into court for violation of the terms of the act.

Mr. GIFFORD. I hope the gentleman will recognize the great danger there of defeating its purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SMITH of Virginia) there were—ayes 59, noes 18.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BOILEAU: Page 6, strike out all of lines 1 and 2.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is intended to strike out all of subsection (c), at the top of page 6:

To influence, directly or indirectly, the election or defeat of any candidate for any elective Federal office.

If this language remains in the bill, it will require that any person who advocates or attempts to influence, directly or indirectly, the election or defeat of any candidate for any elective Federal office must file in accordance with the provisions of this bill. If we look at the last section of the bill, section 10, we will find that it provides—

The provisions of this act shall not apply to any person now required by the Federal Corrupt Practices Act to file such reports, nor be construed as repealing any portion of said Corrupt Practices Act.

In other words, this section I now direct attention to requires that any person who attempts to influence the election of any Federal officer must file under the provisions of this bill, while section 10 provides that he does not have to do it because of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act. One provision puts him in and the other puts him out. It seems to me that that is not well considered and that this language should be stricken from the bill.

It is not my purpose to try in anyway to protect anybody who attempts to control an election. I think they should file under the Corrupt Practices Act. That certainly is not lobbying. When a man tries to influence the election of a Member of Congress or the President of the United States, he is not lobbying. He is campaigning. That is taken care of under the Corrupt Practices Act. Section 10 specifically exempts him from the operation of this bill, so why have him in here?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I am glad to yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is it the gentleman's contention that the provision he has referred to in section 6 and section 10 are inconsistent?

Mr. BOILEAU. I think so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And contradictory?

Mr. BOILEAU. Contradictory to this extent, that lines 1 and 2 on the top of page 6 require persons who are attempting to influence, directly or indirectly, the election or defeat of any candidate for any elective Federal office to file. I am under the impression that the Federal Corrupt Practices Act now requires them to file. If so, section 10 exempts the same people that subsection (c) of section 6 tries to put into the bill.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Is there not this distinction? Does not the Corrupt Practices Act simply require the candidates and the committees who expend money and who receive contributions as a party organization, to file those reports? Lines 8 to 17, on page 5, section 6, make it applicable to a person or to those organizations which go out and collect money independent of a political organization and independent of politics entirely, and simply open fire on a particular candidate?

Mr. BOILEAU. But he collects money and attempts to influence the election of Federal officers.

Mr. MILLER. That is true.

Mr. BOILEAU. I may be in error. Perhaps the Committee on the Judiciary has this information. I regret I do not have it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOILEAU. I will not use all of this time if we can get this matter clarified. I am satisfied that the Corrupt Practices Act provides that any person who collects or expends money for the purpose of influencing an election must file a report with the Clerk of the House of Representatives. Does anyone dispute that? If I am in error, I would like to know it.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. DOBBINS. The gentleman is exactly right if the amount expended exceeds $50 and is expended in more than one State.

Mr. BOILEAU. That is assumed. I assume no one is trying to investigate any huge organization that does not expend more than $50 a year. So I believe the gentleman from Illinois will agree that this language is unnecessary?

Mr. DOBBINS. I believe it is necessary if section 10 is clarified as it should be. Section 10 is faulty as it is printed now.

Mr. BOILEAU. I appreciate it is faulty and should be corrected, but I believe this language should be stricken out in any event.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The bill seems to open up possibilities which perhaps were not intended, yet I am not sure that the thing I suspect is actually in it, but I want to ask the gentleman if, under section 6, paragraph (c), on the top of page 6, speakers employed by a national committee, who collect money from it, would fall under the terms of this act? I refer to political speakers. They influence directly or indirectly the election or defeat of a candidate, and they collect and receive money for doing it. They are paid as speakers.

Mr. BOILEAU. I believe the gentleman is absolutely correct in that respect. I presume that under the Corrupt Practices Act they would be obliged to specify that they paid John Jones $200 a month for the purpose of campaigning in Arkansas, for instance.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. FULLER. But the gentleman will concede that it will get Dr. Townsend and Father Coughlin and the Liberty League? You will get them under this section, will you not?

Mr. BOILEAU. I do not think that helps at all, because such persons as are included in section 6 are also included in section 10.

Mr. FULLER. Those are the fellows we intend to catch up with by paragraph (c) in the first two lines. We do not want you to eliminate that.

Mr. BOILEAU. Anybody that section (c) brings within the scope of the bill is automatically kicked out of the bill under section 10.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin strikes at the very vitals of this bill. I think it strikingly illustrates the difficulty of undertaking to write a bill of this kind, or almost any other kind, on the floor of the House. As was stated this morning, almost every word of this bill has been given most careful thought as to interpretation and possible meaning by the Rules Committee, by two separate subcommittees of the Committee on the Judiciary and by subcommittees composed of both members of the Committee on the Judiciary and of the Rules Committee. Perhaps we have made some mistakes in the bill, in that we have not been able to make as strong a bill as some of us would like to have had.

This bill undertakes to parallel the Corrupt Practices Act. The very purpose for which the bill was drafted was to bring in and make disclose their receipts and disbursements those organizations which are not now required to report under the Corrupt Practices Act. Let me explain: If the gentleman runs for Congress, or if I run for Congress, and we are supported by our committees, we have to file, under the Corrupt Practices Act, a statement of our receipts and disbursements. An organization may be formed, however, for the simple purpose of defeating Members of Congress. Under the law as it exists now, such an organization can raise all the money it is able to raise, can spend it freely in the gentleman's district or in my district, and account to nobody. The very purpose of this section to which the gentleman calls attention is to bring in this class of people; and the only reason there is the apparent conflict, to which the gentleman calls attention, is to distinguish this bill from the Corrupt Practices Act and to see that those who already are required to file reports under the Corrupt Practices Act do not have to duplicate their reports under this act. Strike these words out of the bill, and you strike out the very vitals of the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, we are taking a lot of time on this bill, possibly rewriting the bill on the floor. It might be well for us to appreciate the parliamentary situation and what is going to happen. The Black antilobbying bill passed the Senate and came to the House; it was referred to the Judiciary Committee. The Smith bill originating in the House was referred to the same committee. The Judiciary Committee reported the Smith bill. The Smith bill is being rewritten here. It will pass the House—there is no question about it. It will go to the Senate, and then the work will commence.

The antilobbying bill, if there is one, will be written in conference after the passage of this bill. Many things have been agreed to here today; we have been going along nicely, adopting almost any kind of amendment. Some of us who have been here a number of years realize the procedure and know what it means. The mere adoption of an amendment on the floor does not mean a single thing. When the bill passes the Senate and goes to conference it will be rewritten. So do not be surprised if when the bill comes back you see the Black bill almost as it originally passed the Senate.

The pending bill is divided into two parts. The first six sections deal with these organizations about which we have heard so much today. This is the only purpose of the first six sections of this bill. Section 7 is a sort of consolidation of many of the meritorious points in the Black bill.

I call attention to these things in order that you may realize just what the situation will be when the bill comes back from conference. For my part, I cannot see much advantage in spending a great deal more time here today amending this particular bill, for I believe what we are doing now is futile.

I think we are all opposed to lobbying, as that word is significantly used throughout the country. My own experience teaches me, however, that there is very little pernicious lobbying in Washington. True, there are crooked lobbyists, but let us not forget that in reality all of these organizations interested in good government act in good faith, rightfully present their views, are honest, and should be given consideration. Personally I am not afraid of lobbyists. My office is always open to any citizen who wants to present his or her views on pending legislation. All wisdom does not repose in Members of Congress. Good and wholesome legislation comes from study and investigation, and much of the valuable information comes from organizations and interested individuals, who have given especial attention to the particular subject matter in which the group, or the individual, is particularly interested. We do not want to do anything to discourage or prevent this legitimate help. Our constituents should be encouraged to give us their views rather than prohibited from contacting us.

There are lobbying evils, yet we must not destroy the benefits of wholesome information in order to kill off a few violators. I can see no objection to legislative representatives of farm organizations, business organizations, labor organizations, or any other organizations having headquarters in Washington, being compelled to register. I have talked with several of them and feel that they have no objection. That is their business and that is why they are in Washington; there is no secret about it and no harm can come from it. On the other hand, I am hesitant about doing anything that might discourage the folks at home from writing to me, talking with me, or sending delegations to Washington in the interest of what they believe to be necessary and good legislation.

I do not want to do anything that will make it impossible for my conscientious constituents to meet and discuss their problems. If it becomes necessary, in their judgment, to take up a collection or make individual contributions in order that their views and reactions might be communicated to me, there is no necessity for a lot of bookkeeping and receipts on their part.

Of course, some so-called lobbyists do disreputable things, but we cannot make people honest by legislation. I realize that in these days of acquisition and demagoguery it is difficult to vote against anything that appears to strike at lobbying. Yet, I am sure that the good far outweighs the reprehensible so far as most of the information and propaganda coming to Congress is concerned. Undoubtedly, evils exist. We want to cure those evils, but it seems to me that the first six sections of this bill are so drastic that the right of petition on the part of the people will be denied in some instances. A reasonable, regulatory bill should be worked out, but the floor of the House is not the place to do it. May I hope that the Members of the House will give more careful consideration to the language of this bill as it goes to the Senate and, therefore, be in a position to act intelligently and definitely, when the bill comes back from conference?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer a perfecting amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU: On page 5, line 16, strike out the word "organization" and insert the word "person."

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I call to the attention of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] that this is the amendment to which I referred a little while ago. Does he object to the amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. This amendment is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the members of the committee a question about section 7.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there is much uncertainty as to whether or not one of the largest legitimate factors there is in the matter of influencing legislation is included. I refer to employees of newspapers and special writers. Section 7 reads, in part:

Any person who shall accept employment . . . to attempt to influence the passage or defeat of any legislation, etc., shall register, report expenses, pay, etc.

It seems to me the employees of newspapers might very well be considered to be within the provisions of this section. We certainly do not want to do anything like that. We do not want to affect this entirely legitimate means of influencing legislation. I am not sure, however, but that under the provisions of this section we are doing this very thing. I notice toward the end of the section certain exceptions are made, and I am wondering whether this section ought not to be clarified by the addition to the language now in the bill to the effect that this section shall not apply to any person who appears before a committee in support of or opposition to pending legislation the following: "nor to employees of regularly published newspapers and periodicals"?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. The very sentence the gentleman read, line 3, on page 6, starts with this language:

Any person who shall accept employment for any consideration.

If the newspaperman to which the gentleman refers is working for the newspaper, he is employed to set type, to edit the paper, or what not.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. But he is employed by the newspaper, and the newspaper attempts to influence legislation. We have four newspapers in the city of Washington which are continually hammering at us, influencing or attempting to influence legislation, and they should not be hampered.

Mr. MILLER. That is true; but that employee has not been employed for the purpose of influencing legislation; he has been employed to run a newspaper.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. The newspaper, in substance, hires its editors and pays them for the purpose, in many cases, of carrying out the policy of a publisher to influence legislation, as he views it, in the public interest.

The statute as written will force registration of a person hired to write an article for a newspaper directed against any pending bill, even if the writer did not come within 1,000 miles of Washington. Even if it does not apply to general editorial employees, it surely would apply to a special writer hired because of his knowledge and understanding of a legislative problem to discuss in the newspaper or magazine a bill pending in Congress. Surely we do not want it to apply to such situations. I think the bill should be clarified. In the case of regularly employed editors supporting or opposing legislation pending, it is not entirely clear that such editor was not employed for the purpose that his political writings indicate. I recall one writer who was brought here to expound in the press one economic principle then before Congress in a banking bill. He would have to register under this act.

The regular editorial writer has been employed to assist in running a newspaper which influences or attempts to influence legislation.

Mr. MILLER. It seems to me it is very clear now.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. But it is not stated in your bill that this man is employed for the sole purpose of assisting in running a newspaper. It is stated that if he is employed to attempt to influence the passage or defeat of legislation he must do certain things. Now, the newspaper is a corporation and cannot speak itself; it must speak through its editors.

Mr. MILLER. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this is a criminal statute, which will be strictly construed, and everything that is not prohibited by the terms of the statute will not be an offense. In other words, whenever a criminal act is defined, it is defined according to the substantive provisions of the law itself, and any act that is not prohibited is not included within the act.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. It seems to me it is a rather doubtful proposition, and I do not see why the gentleman should object to an amendment clarifying the situation.

Mr. MILLER. I do not object to it, but I do not see any necessity for the amendment.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I am not going to offer the amendment, but I trust the conferees will give some consideration to the fact that this bill is aimed at lobbying here in Washington and not at legitimate public criticism and discussion of legislation in the public press.

BLACK LOBBY BILL A GOOD ONE; BILLS SHOULD BE COMBINED

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I understand Senator BLACK has pending a bill on the subject of lobbying and that it is an excellent bill. I also understand that bill is considerably different from the House bill. I am not familiar with the technical differences. In any event, if the bill as passed by the Senate is much different from the House bill, may I ask the gentlemen who are proponents of the bill what the parliamentary situation will be in reference to obtaining final passage, because we all want an effective piece of legislation?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Does the gentleman wish me to answer that question?

Mr. MAVERICK. I will appreciate it.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Section 7 of this bill contains the provisions of the Black bill as passed by the Senate as far as the Judiciary Committee felt justified in reporting it. Section 7 of the bill is the Black bill so far as the House committee concurred in the Senate bill. The rest of the bill is different.

Mr. MAVERICK. But what will be the parliamentary situation?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. If we pass this bill it will then go to the Senate and will there be referred to a committee. It will not go to conference. It will have to be passed by the Senate first.

Mr. MAVERICK. It will have to be reported by the committee over there, but will that not take a long time?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I do not know.

Mr. MAVERICK. I just mention this matter, because we should get through an effective piece of legislation at an early date.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I think that will be accomplished.

Mr. MAVERICK. I thank the gentleman from Virginia. I trust my colleagues will forgive me for a more or less repetitious statement. I urge the proponents of this bill to get the parliamentary kinks out of the situation. Let us not have the situation of a Senate bill in the House and a House bill in the Senate, both lost in committees and never meeting each other. We should have a bill like that, and it should be effectively drawn up in such a way as to expose lobbying practices, whether good or bad, and any corrupt practices of any kind. We ought not to let good legislation be lost in a congressional shuffle.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. Any person who shall accept employment for any consideration to attempt to influence the passage or defeat of any pending or proposed legislation or appropriation by the Congress of the United States shall, before doing anything in furtherance of such object, register with the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate and shall give to those officers, in writing and under oath, his name and business address and the name and address of the person by whom he is employed and in whose interest he appears or works as aforesaid, how much he is paid and is to receive, by whom he is paid or is to be paid, how much he is to be paid for expenses, and what expenses are to be included. Each such person so registering shall, at the end of each 3-month period, so long as his activity continues, file with the Clerk and Secretary aforesaid a detailed report of all money received and expended by him during such 3-month period in carrying on his work as aforesaid; to whom paid; for what purposes; and the names of any papers, periodicals, magazines, or other publications in which he has caused to be published any articles or editorials. The provisions of this section shall not apply to any person who merely appears before a committee of the Congress of the United States in support of or opposition to pending legislation and who engages in no further or other activities in connection with the passage or defeat of such legislation; nor to any public official acting in his official capacity.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CULKIN: On page 7, line 4, after the word "capacity", strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the following: "except that no public official shall use or threaten to use the power of patronage of his office for the purpose of influencing legislation."

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I called the attention of the Members of the House a moment ago to the fact that the danger to the life of this Republic is not necessarily from without but from within. May I say that in the Continental Congress and afterward in the writings of Washington and Jefferson it was definitely impressed upon the people of the country by these great Americans that it was necessary to keep the separate divisions of the Government coordinated but apart.

We have witnessed in the past 4 years a tremendous delegation of power by Congress to the executive departments—sometimes to untrained men. I am not going to discuss that from the political angle, but merely state it. These men have been given the purse strings of government which under a popular dispensation belonged to this House. As the result of this great delegation of power they have become infested with delusions of grandeur and have attempted to rewrite the governmental pattern of America.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have just offered permits their recommendations to be made, but makes it a violation of the statute if they use the patronage of their office for the purpose of influencing legislation. I could go into that phase of the matter in great detail, but will not do so at this time. May I say, however, particularly to you gentlemen on the other side of the aisle, that you are not always going to be in power. Your power will be terminated by the people of the country in the coming November election. I am earnestly praying that it will. The proposed amendment is an anchor to the windward, as the sailors say, for you in the next administration, which is sure to be Republican in this House and Executive Mansion. May I say in all frankness that bureaucracies sometimes during Republican regimes have reached for power. But they never developed the boldness or success that they have under the auspices of the Democratic Party. The difference is that we Republicans never surrendered the purse strings to them. [Applause.] I am glad that you concur in that sentiment; and, in view of that alleged concurrence, I hope you gentlemen on that side will support my amendment, which, in my judgment, will make for the continuance of popular government in America.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. Chairman, if the fond hope of the distinguished gentleman from the banks of the Oswego Canal should ever be realized, and the remote possibility should ever happen that his party as now constituted should regain possession of the Government, I can picture him offering such an amendment as this! Of course, it is a political amendment purely and simply. It is one of those Parthian thrusts at the administration or some of the officials of the administration, not to mention how ridiculous would be any attempt to carry it into effect or how difficult it might be to prove whether anybody ever gave patronage to influence legislation. From my own personal experience I am afraid I might be corrupted if the form of a bribe was offered to me. I have not been tempted, I am sorry to say, and I have an idea that no other Member has had the prize dangled before his eyes.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. May I interject the remark that I personally believe the gentleman is absolutely incorruptible by ecclesiastical or other influence. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. I think patronage is the only form of corruption to which I might knowingly submit, but I believe the amendment should be defeated because it is only a political gesture, offered in a spirit of merriment—I will not even say partisanship. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CULKIN) there were—ayes 33, noes 69.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. REED of New York: Page 6, line 4, after the word "consideration", insert a comma and "or any administrative official of the Federal Government who visits the Capitol other than by invitation of a committee of either House."

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I realize the hour is getting late and that you are impatient to get away, therefore, I shall try not to take the entire 5 minutes.

I am offering this amendment in good faith, at least to the extent of asking you to listen for just a moment. I believe you people who have been here in Congress a long time realize that the bureaus of the Government, like Tennyson's brook, go on forever.

I may say, without intending any reflection upon the younger Members of the House or those who have had less experience, that there are men in the bureaus who are better equipped, who have a more thorough knowledge, perhaps, of legislation and legislative tricks than the Members on the floor of the House. It is well known to the Members of the Congress that the inside lobbyist is the most dangerous lobbyist of all. There are corporations in this country that have their men in the present administration, as they have in other administrations, who hold key positions, who are in the most strategic positions to influence Congress. I think if the dairy interests of this House were to realize what is happening to them they would understand the implication of what I am saying.

It was not so long ago that we had a situation in the House that was in the headlines of every newspaper in the country. If I had the time I would read just a short bit of the testimony showing the arrogance of men connected with departments of the Government, walking into the lobbies of Congress, putting up charts and invading the Speaker's lobby and occupying every door of the Congress, button-holing Members with reference to the utilities. You have had an investigation of that matter. You know how far these inside lobbyists will go, and I believe it would be very wise to put in the bill the amendment I have offered here.

If you will read the proposed amendment in connection with the language of the section, you will realize it is not depriving them of coming to the Capitol unless they come here for the specific purpose of influencing legislation.

They can and they do go out into the various districts and with their propaganda attempt to defeat experienced Congressmen who are getting in their way, who are preventing them from obtaining large appropriations for their bureaus. They are delighted when they get a large number of freshmen in the Congress. To use plain language, they can make monkeys out of new Members and get all kinds of appropriations and privileges at the expense of the taxpayers of this country.

I believe this amendment will help the entire situation on both sides of the House if it is adopted. Now, just get the language as the bill would read with this amendment:

Any person who shall accept employment for any consideration, or any administrative official of the Federal Government who visits the Capitol other than by invitation of a committee of either House, to attempt to influence the passage or defeat of any pending or proposed legislation.

Mr. Chairman, we are sent here to legislate for our constituents, and we have seen the situation in the last few years—not alone, perhaps, in your administration—when bills have been written by these bureaucrats and handed to committees. They have even sat in executive sessions with the members of committees, and when any member undertook to state his views on the merits of the case hostile to the views of the inside lobbyists, within 24 hours the member was burned up with a deluge of propaganda. The departmental lobbyists had built the fires back home. It is time to stop such practices.

CONGRESSIONAL FRESHMEN NOT HALF-WITS AND NEED NO PROTECTION

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I notice the talk of the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] was mainly about the poor freshmen who come to Congress and do not know anything. The gentleman stated that they needed protection from these wicked bureaucrats who come up here and lead us astray. If we presume that his amendment, which provided, in effect, no Government employee can talk to a Congressman about legislation without permission or invitation, is necessary, I would say that we freshmen in Congress are a bunch of intellectual half-wits. I have not been approached more than two or three times by members of the Government concerning any legislation whatever, but when they did it was respectful, fair, open, and for the purpose of giving me information. Had it been otherwise, I would have thrown them out; and so would any other Congressman, no matter what party he belongs to.

I have asked for information at the Indian Bureau, I have asked for information at the Department of the Interior. I have asked from all departments, and I have always gotten it. These departments have been willing to give me necessary information and factual information concerning legislation and its effect. Naturally, when some situation arises, they explain certain matters of legislation to me, as they do to all Congressmen, and they ought to do it.

ADMINISTRATIVE AND LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENTS SHOULD COOPERATE

Some gentlemen seem to think that the administrative branch of the United States Government are our enemies. The administrative branch is a part of the Government just as we are. The answer is, we should cooperate with each other in giving the people good government. Moreover, I consider myself intellectually able to withstand the political blandishments of a few men in any branch of the Government.

If the Republicans were in power they would not dream of offering any such amendment. It is a political rider to this bill. I think the gentleman from New York is serious because he looks serious, but I think the amendment is ridiculous.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes.

WHEREIN IT IS SHOWN IT IS NOT A SIN TO GAIN KNOWLEDGE

Mr. REED of New York. The gentleman knows that recently it has been disclosed that persons in a department of the Government have written speeches for new Members of Congress to deliver over the radio.

Mr. MAVERICK. That may be an exaggeration, but why not? As far as I am concerned I am proud to have a "brain truster" give me information. For instance, I went to the Department of the Interior and worked all night with one of them to help me prepare a speech that I later delivered over the radio. And I knew what I was saying when I spoke over the radio. I have no contempt for knowledge and learning.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Did the gentleman tell the public how much was his and how much he got from the brain-truster?

Mr. MAVERICK. No; certainly not. Anyone has the right to get his information from where he can get it best. If you search the books and get scientific information, you do not say that 40 percent of it is yours and you got 60 percent out of the books. And if we discuss matters with men who have learning, we can improve ourselves. There is no patent on learning; I try to get it from everybody and everywhere. Anybody has a right to use research information. I do not think it a sin to gain knowledge from men who have it, and I make no bones about the fact that I give and receive information all the time. Only a fool would refuse to discuss matters with well-informed people.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment should be defeated.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I do this for the purpose of directing a question to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED], who offered this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GREGORY], a member of the committee.

Mr. GREGORY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky that debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CHRISTIANSON) there were—ayes 61, noes 43.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CULKIN) there were—ayes 36, noes 63.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifteen Members present, a quorum.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 3, after the word "legislation", strike out the semicolon and the remainder of the paragraph and insert a period.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WADSWORTH: Page 6, line 20, after the word "purposes", strike out the remainder of the line and all of lines 21 to 23, ending with the word "editorials", in line 23.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McFARLANE: Page 6, line 6, after the word "States", insert "or to influence any Federal bureau, agency, or Government official or Government employee, to make, modify, alter, or cancel any contract with the United States Government, or any United States bureau, agency, or official as such official, or to influence any such bureau, agency, or official in the administration of any governmental duty, so as to give any benefit or advantage to any private corporation or individual, shall."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment that it is not germane.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, that amendment is taken verbatim from the Black resolution on this same subject that is before this committee, and it covers very fully and completely the situation that was considered by this same committee. It is the identical language included in the Black resolution on the antilobbying question before the Senate committee. I think it covers a very important phase of this subject clearly and fully and ought to be made a part of this legislation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Texas, although what he says may have been in the original Black resolution, there is nothing in the bill affecting anything except influence on the Congress of the United States and legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. Section 7 deals very definitely with legislation pending before Congress. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas to which the gentleman from Alabama makes the point of order, is not germane to that subject, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McFARLANE: Page 6, line 23, after the word "editorials", insert "and to furnish an exact copy of all radio broadcasts made concerning any proposed or existing legislation pending before the Federal Government."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McFARLANE: Page 6, line 25, insert "or any Member of Congress."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. Any person who violates any of the foregoing provisions of this act shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both.

Mr. MAIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is being sponsored by the majority party. It is obvious it will pass, no matter under what conditions the vote is taken. I want to go on record as being unalterably opposed to the bill. It is safe to assume that a quorum will not be present when the vote is taken, but out of consideration for the feelings of my colleagues I shall not make that point of order at this late hour in the afternoon. I simply want to record myself as opposed to the bill, regardless of the manner in which the vote may be taken.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, the last amendment that I offered was offered as an amendment to line 25, which added the words "or a Member of Congress." It is a corrective amendment and I think if the rule had not been put on closing the debate the committee would have at least accepted this amendment. It would make this provision then read as follows:

"The provisions of this section shall not apply to any person who merely appears before a committee of the United States Congress, or a Member of Congress."

As it is in the bill, it does not apply to one of your constituents who comes here to present a matter before a committee, but it may apply if he appears and talks with you personally about a piece of legislation in which he is interested, if for any consideration he should appear for himself or for someone else.

Certainly that is a corrective amendment.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. It would not apply to that constituent unless he was employed for that purpose.

Mr. McFARLANE. This is an amendment that would release a constituent from the provisions of this bill. I understand it goes back to the proposition, if he appears before a committee of the Congress in support of or in opposition to any pending legislation. You certainly cannot read something into the bill that is not there, and if he so appears voluntarily and without compensation for a friend I believe the provision without the amendment I offer would require registration.

In regard to the other amendment that I did not have an opportunity to speak upon, as the bill now reads, it applies to certain papers, periodicals, magazines, or other publications in which he has caused to be published any articles or such editorials. That amendment made it also apply to propaganda and radio speeches advocating or opposing legislation pending before Congress, broadcast over the radio by these paid lobbyists. Under existing laws and regulations of the Federal Communications Commission it is not mandatory that any radio speeches be filed with anyone. I think all speeches as delivered should be filed with the Commission and available to the public. Certainly such an amendment as that should be placed in this bill. I am just rising at this time to call it to your attention because I did not have an opportunity to do so previously because debate was shut off before reaching my amendments.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I wish to query the proponent of the bill briefly. At the outset of this discussion the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] stated on the floor that during the progress of the bill he would offer an amendment which would, in effect, exempt farm cooperatives, labor unions, the Grange, and other similar types of organizations from the operation of the bill. I have listened and I have not heard such an amendment. Does the gentleman intend to offer it?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. What I intended to say was that an amendment would be offered eliminating it from that section of the bill which required them to report all of their receipts and disbursements.

Mr. CULKIN. And that amendment has been offered?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes; and it was adopted.

Mr. CULKIN. I am not seeking to give these groups an immunity bath, although the purposes of their organization are beneficial to the country, but section 3 would seem to make this unworkable as far as those organizations are concerned.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. The amendment to which the gentleman has reference has been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. If any provision of this title or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and of the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 10. The provisions of this act shall not apply to any person now required by the Federal Corrupt Practices Act to file such reports nor be construed as repealing any portion of said Federal Corrupt Practices Act.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Dobbins: Page 7, line 14, strike out the words "any person now required" and insert in lieu thereof the words "practices or activities intended to be regulated."

In line 15, strike out the words "to file such reports."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to that amendment. It is a clarifying amendment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOBBINS. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. What it is intended to regulate is not the point.

Mr. DOBBINS. The reason for the inclusion of the words "intended to" is to meet a certain situation which might arise in a criminal case. Without the employment of those words the question might arise as to whether the particular and individual practice involved is covered by Corrupt Practices Act and that would then entail a judicial determination of the individual transaction rather than of such practices as a general class.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It does not sound like legislative language to me. The act either covers certain practices or does not. The gentleman's amendment should read "practices covered by the act." The gentleman should leave out "intended."

Mr. DOBBINS. I think it is more specific as I have written it, if the chairman please.

The purpose of the amendment is to make it impossible for a man to buy immunity from the provisions of the act by the expenditure of $50. Section 306 of the Corrupt Practices Act provides that anybody who expends $50 or more in influencing a national election and makes the expenditure in more than one State is required to file a report under that act. This section of the bill as here written would permit anyone who is required to file a report under the Corrupt Practices Act to escape all regulation by this so-called anti-lobbying bill.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOBBINS. I am glad to yield to my distinguished colleague from Minnesota.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. It is true, is it not, under the provisions of section 10 as originally written, a defeated candidate for Congress who as such filed a report under the Federal Corrupt Practices Act might turn lobbyist and by reason of this provision be exempt from the provisions of the act?

Mr. DOBBINS. Yes. Any candidate for Congress would be exempt from the provisions of the act as originally written, but they may be only a few hundred men, as against 120,000,000 persons who could buy immunity from the provisions of this proposed law by merely spending $50 to influence a national election.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Anyone who spends $50 to influence the election of a candidate for Congress under section 10 would be exempt.

Mr. DOBBINS. No; not to influence the election of just one Member of Congress. To bring the spender under the Corrupt Practices Act the money must be expended in more than one State.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Under the Corrupt Practices Act a Member of Congress must file statements of receipts and disbursements.

Mr. DOBBINS. Both the elected Members and the defeated candidates must file.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COLE of Maryland, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 11663, pursuant to House Resolution 462, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Virginia, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SAN JUAN NATIONAL MONUMENT, PUERTO RICO

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the San Juan National Monument.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to include a resolution adopted by the Military Order of the World War, Puerto Rico Chapter, with respect to H. R. 7931, "a bill to establish the San Juan National Monument, Puerto Rico, and for other purposes."

A companion bill, S. 2864, passed the Senate July 30, 1935, and is now on the Speaker's desk—table. I am hopeful that the committee will see fit to bring this measure before the House as soon as possible so that it may be disposed of before they adjourn.

MILITARY ORDER OF THE WORLD WAR,
PUERTO RICO CHAPTER,
San Juan, P. R., March 19, 1936.

HON. SANTIAGO IGLESIAS,

Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. IGLESIAS: I am pleased to transmit herewith a resolution approved by the Puerto Rico Chapter, Military Order of the World War.

Yours sincerely,

M. G. MORALES, Chapter Adjutant.
Resolution

Whereas, following a survey of the historical and architectural points of interest in the city of San Juan, Puerto Rico, by officials of the Government of the United States, it was recommended that this city be declared a public monument, and, as such, preserved and developed by the Department of the Interior of the United States under general appropriations made by the Congress for the national parks and monuments; and

Whereas Senate bill No. 2864 is pending consideration and passage in the Congress of the United States to materialize the plan establishing San Juan, Puerto Rico, as a national monument; and

Whereas the island of Puerto Rico is the only Territory under the jurisdiction of the United States where Christopher Columbus landed when he discovered the island in his second voyage to America in the year 1493; and

Whereas the city of San Juan has many historical and architectural points of interest which it is fitting to preserve as a memorial to an epic of the past and for the cultural and spiritual recreation of present and future generations; and

Whereas the national convention of the Military Order of the World War, held at Atlantic City on the 17th day of September, 1935, adopted a resolution in support of the plan, which resolution, unanimously passed, was presented by a delegate from the Puerto Rico chapter of the order; and

Whereas the Puerto Rico Chapter of the Military Order of the World War has knowledge of the fact that, although Senate bill No. 2864 has the support of many officials of the United States, it is, however, being objected to without sound or reasonable cause: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by a meeting of the Puerto Rico Chapter of the Military Order of the World War, held at San Juan, P. R., on January 9, 1936:

1. In conformity with the action of the national convention of the order to request that the proper officials of the Government of the United States favorably consider and recommend the passage of Senate bill No. 2864 establishing the city of San Juan, P. R., as a national monument.

2. That a copy of this resolution be sent by the chapter adjutant to the Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior of the United States; to the chairmen of the proper committees of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States; to the Honorable Blanton Winship, Governor of Puerto Rico; to the Honorable Santiago Iglesias, Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico; and to Col. George E. Ijams, national commander of the Military Order of the World War.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next after the reading of the Journal, the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, and the special order for the day I may be allowed to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next after the reading of the Journal, the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, and the special orders heretofore entered I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, is the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] prepared to tell us what legislation will be brought up and considered next week?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is expected that on Monday next we will take up a rule providing for the consideration of the bill pertaining to the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. MAPES. And after that?

Mr. BANKHEAD. After that we expect to take up the State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor Departments appropriation bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the majority leader if there will be a reduction in that appropriation bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I trust so.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

CANCELANON OF MAIL CONTRACTS

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution No. 238.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 238

Joint resolution to extend the time within which contracts may be modified or canceled under the provisions of section 5 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934

Resolved, etc., That section 5 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934, as amended, be amended by striking out "March 31, 1936" and inserting in lieu thereof "May 31, 1936": Provided, That the right of the United States to annul any fraudulent or illegal contract or to institute suit to recover sums paid thereon is in no manner affected by this joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] when this resolution was introduced and considered in the Senate?

Mr. BLAND. Today. It was reported by the Post Office Committee and brought up by Senator McKELLAR, considered by the Senate, and passed unanimously.

Mr. LEHLBACH. May I ask the gentleman further if he knows whether the Secretary of Commerce, any of his assistants, the Chief of the Shipping Board Bureau, the Bureau of Navigation of the Department of Commerce have ever seen this resolution, and whether they have expressed any opinion concerning it?

Mr. BLAND. The Secretary of Commerce had not seen it when I called him up. The Secretary of Commerce expressed himself as in favor of it after I brought it to his attention and said he thought it should pass.

Mr. LEHLBACH. What is the purpose of extending the President's control over these contracts for 60 days? The President has had these contracts under consideration for over 2 years and has made no move with respect either to their cancellation or modification. Consequently there cannot be anything very much wrong about these contracts.

Mr. BLAND. I am not discussing that question. The power of the President to cancel these contracts will expire on March 31. This resolution was prepared in the Post Office Department by Mr. Crowley. The Department insists it should be passed if we are to retain the power in the President which the President has now.

Mr. LEHLBACH. A similar resolution extending the President's control over ocean-mail contracts has been passed two or three times.

Mr. BLAND. It was extended first to October 1935, and then from October 1935 to March 1936.

Mr. LEHLBACH. If it is desirable to retain in the President control over these contracts, why cannot the usual course be followed and retain this control in the President until the next Congress meets instead of for 60 days? Has the gentleman any idea what is intended to happen within 60 days?

Mr. BLAND. I presume the Post Office Department had in mind the possibility of legislation. Inasmuch as the power will exist in the President to cancel at any time that he may see fit, I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, to extend it for a longer time. Of course, it would have to go back to the Senate if amended.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman accept an amendment extending the President's control over these contracts for 1 year?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. May I offer such an amendment?

Mr. BLAND. Of course, the power is in the President to cancel these contracts at any time. He could cancel these contracts tomorrow, a week from tomorrow, or 10 days from tomorrow. I think that is the only way we will get it through by unanimous consent.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the real purpose of this action? I have listened to all this discussion and I do not see the real purpose. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. MORAN] is particularly interested in this matter, but he is not present.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLAND. I hope the gentleman will withhold his objection.

Mr. MICHENER. These important matters are brought in here at 20 minutes to 6 and then they talk about "these very important matters." We will be back Monday.

Mr. RICH. There are 3 days remaining before the end of the month and the gentleman may bring it up in that time.

Mr. BLAND. If it is to be amended, it will have to go back to the Senate for concurrence or conference. The Post Office Department originally fixed this at March 17, and they suggested that I accept the amendment in order to get it through. Mr. Crowley has been one of those fighting the ocean-mail contracts matter. The Assistant Postmaster called me a few moments ago and told me he thought I had better accept the amendment and let it go to conference.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GREGORY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Members who spoke on the bill H. R. 11663 and all other Members of the House may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks thereon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

FLOOD CONTROL IN THE CONNECTICUT RIVER VALLEY—PRESENT AND FORMER FLOODS IN THE CONNECTICUT RIVER VALLEY

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain excerpts from the report of the Natural Resources Board and also from the Chief of Engineers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, the past 2 weeks witnessed the most destructive floods known in the history of some sections of the Northeast, causing death and destruction in Ohio, Maryland, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, New York, and New England.

Rising flood waters of the Connecticut River and tributaries inundated farms, villages, and large sections of towns and cities. Everywhere through this great farming and industrial valley the raging waters of this river and its tributaries wrought havoc, ruin, death, and terror, destroyed and damaged churches, homes, personal property, railroads, lighting systems, commercial and manufacturing establishments, and almost brought to a complete stop the business life of this region.

Floods occur every year along the Connecticut River, as they do along most other rivers in our country. Some years find greater floods than other years, but because their intensity and extent are unpredictable and because real prevention measures have not been planned and undertaken, warnings to inhabitants to leave low sections and exposed places, and hasty and last-minute attempts to build bulwarks are of little avail.

The total and exact amount of damage in the area of the Connecticut River Valley caused by the present flood will never be known. Newspaper reports assert that this whole valley suffered between $150,000,000 and $200,000,000 damage and that the larger cities like Hartford and Springfield may have been caused as much as $25,000,000 damage, while for smaller communities, like Middletown, the estimate is about $1,000,000 to $1,500,000.

There are no exact estimates of damage caused by floods in this region in previous years. The Weather Bureau of the United States Department of Agriculture reports that the record of flood losses in New England is far from complete. In the year 1900 it was estimated that the losses amounted to more than $1,000,000. In the year 1927 there were various estimates of the losses, ranging from $45,000,000 to somewhat more than $50,000,000. These two years are the only ones since 1899 for which estimates may be called fairly complete. From 1927 until the present floods, there have been no floods of consequence, and the damage from the annual spring and fall floods have been estimated as about $50,000 annually.

In an article in the Monthly Weather Review, December 1914, the writer mentions some of the floods of considerable magnitude in the Connecticut River. Great floods in New England occurred in April 1852, May 1854, April 1862, October 1869, April 1895, and March 1896, besides those of 1900 and 1927.

If during the past number of years a real plan of protection had been embarked upon, all the estimates are that its cost would never have approached the losses caused by the flood of this past week or of that which occurred in 1927.

The people of New England will rise to this occasion as they have to many other such emergencies. When the waters recede, they will go back to their once lovely homes, their former factories and places of business and rebuild. They will assist one another to repair and rehabilitate. But this is not sufficient. We must build to prevent such damage and destruction in the future.

A CONNECTICUT VALLEY AUTHORITY BILL WITH AN APPROPRIATION OF $50,000,000

More than 1 year ago, on January 29, 1935, I introduced a bill, H. R. 4979, for an appropriation of $50,000,000 for the development of this river and its tributaries, improvement of navigation, flood control by reforestation and construction of dikes, levees, large dams, and reservoirs which could be used also to generate cheap electricity to share the cost of the undertaking. The bill also granted permission, which is necessary under the Constitution, to the New England States to establish, if they so desire, their own authority and to carry out their own plans and program by making agreements or compacts with each other.

This bill proposed, thorough surveys and studies, the formulation of a comprehensive plan for the whole region, and the immediate initiation and construction of projects, which fitted in and coordinated with a complete scheme of flood control for the whole river and many of its tributaries.

The old method was to build dikes in certain places where it was believed the waters would overflow, but various investigations, studies, and the experiences with the Tennessee, Mississippi, and other rivers proved this was insufficient against extraordinary floods. In addition to large dikes and levees, it is recognized that a series of large reservoirs and high dams are necessary on the tributaries and at the headwaters and other parts of the main stream. When high floods are raging down the river, dikes and levees may not be sufficiently strong to stand the strain, unless in addition the floods are controlled and more evenly regulated by great storage reservoirs and dams. It is also believed that reforestation, especially of the hills, consumes much rainfall and regulates the flow of rivers and streams.

In maintaining a lessened flow during flood seasons by collecting the surplus waters in these great reservoirs floods are regulated, and with a well-planned system of dikes and levees in other places along the river front overflowing of adjoining sections of land is avoided. By maintaining a better regulated flow of water during dry seasons and low-water periods navigation is improved and assistance given to avoidance of pollution. Thus the project has sanitary value, which, of course, is difficult of exact estimation.

It therefore follows that real prevention and control of floods are not to be obtained by the old methods of piecemeal undertakings by a village, town, or city, or even by one State. It is a problem for cooperation of all the States in the whole region, and as the same problem affects the many numerous large rivers of this country, it is a national problem, each region being entitled to assistance and cooperation from the Federal Government.

It is based on the experiences and lessons of many years with the troublesome floods of many of our rivers, and already such coordinated undertakings have been constructed or are planned upon the Mississippi, Colorado, Tennessee, and some other rivers. The War Department engineers have arrived at this conclusion in their plans and proposals for protection along many rivers. The National Resources Board have also arrived at the same conclusion, and in their report of November 1934 they state as follows:

To recommend for any basin an inclusive water plan without an exhaustive study of adequate data bearing on all phases of the many problems involved would be most illogical, would invite and deserve severe criticism, would involve economic waste, and might preclude the formulation of a well-balanced plan later. Unfortunately, fundamental data, the consideration of which is a prerequisite to effective planning of an inclusive character, still are lacking in greater or less degree on both the surface and underground waters of most drainage areas throughout the country.

Representative problems of various basins or groups of basins are noted briefly in the following pages.

1. THE NORTH ATLANTIC BASINS

Further utilization of waters in the densely populated North Atlantic seaboard is dependent in large measure on the coordinated development of storage for river regulation. The wide range of administrative and technical problems that are involved in multiple uses of water in this region is illustrated best by the Connecticut and Delaware Basins.

(a) The Connecticut Basin: The lower reaches of the Connecticut River are crowded with manufacturing plants which, together with the accompanying urban areas, have utilized most of the available water power, have made heavy drafts on the stream waters for industrial purposes, and have polluted these waters to such an extent that the river is used for recreation but little and the operation of certain industries is inconvenienced seriously. The congested urban areas are subject to occasional damaging floods. Cooperative efforts to abate objectionable practices in the disposal of obnoxious waste have been initiated recently, but there remains an abundant opportunity to increase the output of prime power, reduce low-water pollution, and minimize or eliminate floods by provisions of additional storage facilities on the tributaries and headwaters. The chief factor standing in the way of this needed development has been the lack of an appropriate agency to make surveys and studies which would recognize all interests, and of an appropriate authority to estimate the costs of feasible works and allocate them among the four States, the scores of municipalities, and the hundreds of business enterprises that would benefit from regulation.

Storms of the intensity of that which caused the great New England flood of 1927, and with an average frequency of about 100 years, are possible throughout almost all of this area. Physiographic conditions are conducive to the development of strong flood flows in most New England and New Jersey drainages, and on the Hudson River above Albany. On the Susquehanna River ice jams have caused very high waters. Damages experienced in the relatively narrow valleys have amounted to as much as $10,000 per square mile of the drainage area of the river. On some New England streams, such as the Deerfield River, flood flows are absorbed in large measure by storage reservoirs for power or water supply. On other streams, such as the Connecticut River, municipalities have constructed levee systems for local protection. In general, however, flood protection has received little direct attention.

CRITICISMS—IGNORANT AND SELFISH

Nevertheless, in total disregard of past experiences and lessons, of the opinions of experts and authorities, and of the knowledge of damage caused by yearly floods, a few critics, as are usually found, immediately attacked my proposal. Those who criticize from lack of information can be easily disregarded. But there were another few, representing certain selfish interests, who insidiously attacked my suggestion by dragging across it the red herring of Federal interference. These people shoot their poisonous darts into all such progressive proposals. They raise objections to Federal assistance and are even powerful enough to prevent State cooperation, but the time has arrived when the people of New England will not permit obstruction by certain self-seeking, though powerful interests. Nor will they be fooled by the carping criticisms of these interests, motivated by selfishness and lack of patriotism for New England. The people now recognize these obstructionists who continually attempt to undermine all improvements intended to benefit human beings.

The catastrophe that has occurred within the past few weeks proves the error of these critics. The great damage and loss of life in this region from this month's flood is adequate testimony for the urgency of an immediate program of flood control as I proposed.

EFFORTS TO OBTAIN PROPER INFORMATION AND REPORTS AS A BASIS FOR CONSIDERING THE CONNECTICUT VALLEY AUTHORITY BILL

Immediately after the introduction of my bill I approached the Flood Committee and also the War Department concerning their studies of the Connecticut River. The following letters I received from them explain their assistance and cooperation in this subject:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., February 19, 1935.

HON. WILLIAM M. CITRON, M. C.,
The House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CITRON: Reference is made to your desire to obtain a report on the need for flood control on the Connecticut River.

I was very glad to take this matter up with the War Department and in reply received the following statement:

"This Department has completed a field survey of the Connecticut River in the combined interests of navigation, flood control, irrigation, and the development of hydroelectric power, under the provisions of House Document No. 308, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session. The report is now being prepared by the district engineer at Providence, R. I., and is expected in this office in the near future for review by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors as required by law prior to its submission to Congress with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers.

"I have referred your letter to the division engineer, North Atlantic division, for the preparation of a map and a summary of the data on flood control developed in this report which I shall be pleased to forward to you as soon as it is received."

You may be sure it has been a pleasure to have been of some service to you in the matter and I shall keep in close touch with the situation and advise you of any developments.

Yours very truly,

BYRON B. CANN,
Clerk, Committee on Flood Control.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, March 22, 1935.

HON. RILEY J. WILSON,
Chairman, Committee on Flood Control,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. WILSON: In your letter of February 14, 1935, you stated that Hon. WILLIAM M. CITRON, House of Representatives, was interested in obtaining data on the Connecticut River and its tributaries for the purpose of clearly presenting to the Committee on Flood Control the need and merit of such works as is mentioned in the bill, H. R. 4979.

A field survey of the Connecticut River, undertaken under the provisions of House Document No. 308, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, has been completed, but the report of the division engineer has not yet been received in this office for review by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors prior to its transmission to Congress, and the conclusions of this Department have therefore not as yet been formulated.

However, I take pleasure in enclosing herewith a résumé of the information contained in this report which I have had prepared by the district engineer at Providence, R. I.

Very truly yours,

G. B. PILLSBURY,
Brigadier General,
Acting Chief of Engineers.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, March 25, 1935.

HON. WILLIAM M. CITRON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CITRON: Complying with your recent verbal request, I take pleasure in enclosing herewith résumé of the report of the district engineer, Providence, R. I., on the survey of the Connecticut River, undertaken under the provisions of House Document No. 308, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, in the combined interests of navigation, flood control, and the development of hydroelectric power.

The report of the district engineer is expected in this office shortly for review by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors as required by law prior to its transmission to Congress with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers. I regret that under a long-established policy of this Department, I am unable to give you a copy of the report of the district engineer until after its transmission to Congress, as such reports are considered confidential until so transmitted.

Very truly yours,

G. B. PILLSBURY,
Brigadier General,
Acting Chief of Engineers.

MILLION DOLLAR AMENDMENT TO FLOOD-CONTROL BILL FOR CONNECTICUT RIVER IS INADEQUATE

Pending this flood-control and the water-power report to Congress by the Chief Engineer, which was based on studies and surveys made by the district engineer, the House passed a flood-control bill which is now pending in the Senate. To that bill I proposed the following amendment on August 22, 1935, which was adopted:

Amendment offered by Mr. CITRON: Page 53, after line 16, add the following paragraph:

"Connecticut River Basin flood control and protection on the Connecticut River by means of bank-protection works, channel enlargement, flood walls and dikes; survey and data in the office of the Chief of Engineers; cost, $1,000,000."

This sum is insufficient for real protection when we realize that every town along the Connecticut River suffered during the present flood; but it is interesting to note that there were many skeptics when this amendment was passed. These skeptics questioned the need of any money for flood control upon the Connecticut River.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 377—FOR STATE COMPACTS

On August 13, 1935, I introduced this resolution granting permission to the States to enter into compacts for planning and undertaking flood control. Some of the States have State planning commissions, and with some interest being shown at the time in State compacts, I introduced this bill to facilitate action by the States and to focus further attention upon flood prevention.

INTERSTATE ASSISTANCE WITH FEDERAL COOPERATION IS NECESSARY

All States involved must cooperate and assist in carrying out any formulated plan. Thorough remedial measures cannot be carried out by one State alone.

The Connecticut River is a navigable stream and the Constitution gives the Federal Government jurisdiction over it. When the State of Massachusetts several years ago threatened to divert waters from this river, Connecticut sought the assistance of the Federal Government and courts to prevent any menace to its navigability. This whole subject interests the Federal Government because any measures undertaken vitally affect navigation. Congress can grant the States permission to do certain things, but it cannot grant away the powers conferred upon it under the Constitution. Therefore whatever is done must have the permission of the Federal Government, who must reserve to itself its constitutional powers and certain control.

WAR DEPARTMENT PLANS

The States have the assistance of the Federal Government, which through the War Department engineers, has made intensive studies and surveys, formulated a partial plan, and can do a great deal of the construction work, when authorized by Congress. The engineers have already formulated a general plan for flood control and power development. Should the States undertake it alone or avail themselves of the assistance of the Federal Government? Whatever they plan and do must be authorized by the Federal Government. If it is their desire to share in the undertaking, they should not refuse material and financial assistance from the Federal Government. This general plan is based on surveys and studies authorized by congressional act in 1927. The War Department engineers do not favor proceeding with the general plan now, but favor immediate undertaking of a part, which they call the "initial program", and then only if local authorities for the States share the expense. Their main argument is that the benefits to navigation for which they are responsible is not represented in the total outlay and that there is no immediate market for power. This reasoning is not very cogent and is not based on fact.

I favor the undertaking of the complete plan, the Federal Government to take care of most of the cost. I recognize the necessity of the interested States collaborating immediately so as to decide which part of the program they will participate in. In the knowledge and experience gained from the present flood it may be necessary for the War Department

Engineers to make some alteration in their plans and conclusions and this is another reason for the need of immediate cooperation by the States.

If Congress decides at the present time to incorporate only the so-called "initial plan", I believe the million dollars already in the bill should remain to pay for the cost of levees and dikes in Connecticut and Massachusetts, and that the whole cost should be paid by the Federal Government. The "initial plan" will hardly assist the lower parts of the valley; it is a practical guaranty and assurance against floods to Vermont and to that region.

Ever since my coming to Congress I have continuously addressed myself to and corresponded with various Government officials and with public-spirited nongovernmental organizations urging this undertaking. I believe the people of New England, in and out of this valley, want immediate consideration by both the State and Federal authorities for this river and some of the other New England rivers.

I have taken the following from the United States Army Engineers' report, known as House Document 412, Seventy-fourth Congress, second session:

5. Power development: The Connecticut Basin has extensive water-power resources of which the most economical and easily developed have been improved. New or redeveloped projects must depend in general upon additional storage for their justification. A comprehensive plan for the ultimate development of power in the basin is presented. This plan includes 19 storage reservoirs with effective storage capacity of 770,300 acre-feet, constructed for the benefit of downstream power plants; and 22 power developments with a proposed installed capacity of 373,600 kilowatts, having an estimated average annual output of 1,276,000,000 kilowatt-hours. The district engineer states that the comprehensive plan as presented indicates the future hydroelectric potentialities of the Connecticut Basin, but that further developments must be on a step-by-step basis as additional power is required.

6. Flood control: Floods are comparatively frequent in the Connecticut Basin and cause serious damages, particularly the great but less-frequent fall floods that have their source on the upper and western tributaries. The most serious flood for which comprehensive data are available occurred in November 1927. This flood caused damages estimated at $15,500,000, the greater part being to railroad and highway facilities. No general flood-control measures have been taken, the only existing works consisting of dikes and bank protection on the lower main river. A fair degree of protection is afforded on certain tributaries by power and water supply storage reservoirs.

7. The only practicable method of obtaining flood protection is found to be by storage reservoirs, although along the lower river additional dikes and bank revetments may be desirable. A comprehensive plan includes 33 reservoirs with a total effective storage capacity of 931,000 acre-feet and estimated to cost $41,082,000 with annual charges at $2,875,000, operated in the combined interest of flood control and power development. The district engineer estimates that flood damages would be reduced on an average of $294,000 annually and that the storage would have an economic value to existing and potential power developments of $2,320,000. He finds that no present or prospective market exists for the large increase in power. An initial flood-control project is presented by the district engineer to provide 10 reservoirs as follows:

Tributary basin	Reservoir	Dam			Drainage area controlled (square miles)	Gross capacity (acre-feet) †	Estimated first cost (not including land and damages)	Estimated cost of land and damages
		Type	Maximum height	Length (feet)
Passumpsic	Lyndonville	Earth	90	984	70	10,800	$1,066,000	$151,000

Ottawaquechee	Bridgewater Corners	do.	125	1,210	101	48,000	1,459,000	455,000
Total					951	352,500	9,852,000	3,521,000
Total estimated first cost (not including land and damages)								9,852,000
Total								13,373,000

†Includes 268,300 acre-feet below spillway crest for power, and 84,200 acre-feet surcharge storage for flood control only.

The estimated annual charges are $670,000 if financed at low-interest rates. The district engineer estimates that the plan would reduce average annual flood damages by $174,500, and that the value to existing power plants would be approximately $335,000 annually; that the plan, by increasing stream flow, would improve sanitary conditions, and that it would reduce the annual charges for local flood-protection works in Massachusetts, $35,000. He considers the initial plan to be economically justified if financed at existing low-interest rates, and the creation of an interstate agency for its execution to be desirable.

8. The division engineer concurs in the views and recommendations of the district engineer as to the navigation improvements. He considers that the plans presented for flood control and power development afford an ultimate rational development; that the first cost and annual charges of the initial flood-control plan proposed by the district engineer apparently prevent its justification unless and until power developments can be combined with flood control, with power carrying about half the cost of the plan; and that under existing conditions realization of the initial flood-control plan will probably be delayed pending development of a demand for the added power made possible by the plan. He considers that joint action by the several States to create an agency with authority to adopt, finance, and execute a project for effective flood protection appears to be logical and desirable. He is of the opinion that there is insufficient Federal interest in such a project to justify participation therein by the United States.

9. The reports have been referred as required by law to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors and attention is invited to its report herewith. The Board finds that the project now authorized by Congress for improvement of the river below Hartford will adequately meet the present needs of navigation in that section of the river. It states that modification of the existing project for navigation between Hartford and Holyoke to provide for the construction of the dam and lock at Enfield Rapids by the United States instead of by local interests does not appear warranted at present, and that in its opinion no change should be made in the project as now authorized. It finds no justification for the extension of navigation above Holyoke.

10. The Board has carefully analyzed the plans proposed for the initial construction of 10 reservoirs on selected tributaries for the control of the sources of summer and fall floods. It finds that these reservoirs may be operated to reconcile the interests of flood control and power, with no material sacrifice of effectiveness, reserving sufficient storage so that the peak of a great fall flood would be so reduced as to be no longer destructive. The annual average benefits in reducing flood losses are estimated at $180,000, the value of water at existing power plants would probably not exceed $300,000, and the prospective value of the increased flow at four potential new power sites on the main stem of the river is estimated at $158,000, a total of $638,000. The estimated annual cost of the improvement, with interest at 4 percent, and amortization in 50 years, is estimated at $697,000. The Board points out that the economic justification of the project is not established by these figures. The project has, however, intangible indirect values in improving sanitary conditions, in reducing delays and inconvenience to navigation, and in generally increasing public convenience by the reduction in flood heights and increasing low-water flow, all of which render the project worthy of favorable consideration. The Board is of the opinion that the general benefits warrant a Federal expenditure of 50 percent of the first cost of the structures in this initial flood-control plan. It is of the opinion, however, that the creation of an interstate authority to construct the works and assess the benefits does not appear likely of realization, but that the formation within the States of conservancy districts with power to negotiate agreements for payment of stored water, and to raise funds by assessment of local benefits, would be much more readily accomplished.

It points out that the construction of the proposed reservoirs could be effected by the creation of two such districts in the State of Vermont, one embracing the White and adjacent basins, the other the Passumpsic Basin; and one district in New Hampshire embracing the Ammonoosuc Basin; or by a wider bi-State authority embracing the entire watershed within the States of Vermont and New Hampshire. The Board does not find that contracts with existing power interests for the use of stored water and for increasing low-water flow can be expected to meet a large part of the cost of the lands and structures under present conditions, but that a considerable expenditure by the districts would be required even with the Federal contribution outlined. If local interests are prepared to incur these expenditures, the Board considers that the Federal expenditure is warranted. It recommends a Federal project for the construction of storage reservoirs in the tributaries of the Connecticut River substantially in accordance with the initial flood-control plan presented by the district engineer, provided that local interests, through organized conservancy districts, agree to provide all rights-of-way, assume all damages, pay one-half the cost of construction, and agree to take over and operate the works after their completion, in accordance with regulations approved by the Secretary of War.

11. After due consideration of these reports, I concur in the views of the Board. The improvement authorized by Congress for the Connecticut River below Hartford will provide adequately for present needs of navigation. The approved project above Hartford is contingent upon the construction by local interests of a dam at Enfield Rapids. No justification is seen for modification of the project to provide for construction of this lock and dam by the United States. Floods in the Connecticut Basin do much damage. An initial flood-control plan to provide 10 reservoirs on selected tributaries would afford effective relief from the disastrous summer and fall floods. The direct benefits of the plan in reducing flood heights, together with the intangible indirect benefits to sanitation and in reducing delays and inconveniences to navigation warrant, in my opinion, the execution of the project by the Federal Government provided that local interests, through organized conservancy districts meet the conditions of local cooperation proposed by the Board.

I therefore report that a Federal project for the construction of storage reservoirs on headwater tributaries of the Connecticut River, substantially in accordance with the initial flood-control plan presented by the district engineer, is advisable in the interest of flood control, power development, and navigation, at a total estimated cost of $13,373,000, provided that local interests, through organized conservancy districts with adequate powers and resources, agree to provide all rights-of-way without cost to the United States, assume all damages, pay one-half the cost of construction, and take over and operate the works after completion in accordance with regulations approved by the Secretary of War. Since any reservoir or group of reservoirs included in the complete plan will afford generally proportionate benefits, the construction of any one of these reservoirs or group of reservoirs shall be undertaken when the conditions of local cooperation have been fulfilled with respect to such reservoir or group of reservoirs. The total estimated Federal expenditure required under the complete plan of improvement is $4,926,000.

E. M. MARKHAM,
Major General, Chief of Engineers.

WORLD WAR DEBTS

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, for those of us who have carried on the fight for a reasonable and sensible solution of the World War debts, two events have occurred this week that are deeply significant and should not be passed by without notice in this body.

A Paris dispatch stated that former Premier Edouard Herriot was basing his campaign on the necessity of paying the World War debts, while across the water 2 days later a London dispatch asserted that David Lloyd George, wartime Prime Minister, was charging in characteristic fashion that the failure to pay the war debts to the United States was just as heinous as the remilitarization of the Rhineland.

I am certainly glad to see this revival of interest in our sister Republic, France, the more so since that distinguished Government was most emphatic in its insistence that the money advanced to it during the World War was a loan and not a gift. As a matter of fact, our war ambassador had a conference with the French Premier in those war days and wired the Secretary of State on April 11, 1917, the following:

The Premier personally expressed the hope to me that no resolution would be introduced or debated in Congress tending to make a gift to the Government of France from the United States however much the sentiment of good will prompting it might be appreciated by the French people. In view of France's action in the Franklin agreements in the years 1782 and 1783 in the time of our own distress, I hope I may be permitted to suggest that it would appear to be a generous and gracious thing should such an arrangement prove feasible in making the French loan at this time to stipulate that no interest shall be charged or be payable on such a loan during the war and thereafter for a limited number of years.

An article in the Le Matin of June 28, 1926, has copies of cables between Ambassador Jusserand and the French Premier in the following translations:

APRIL 12, 1917.

DIPLOMATIE PARIS:

I have just had an interview with the Secretary of the Treasury regarding our financial needs. The amount of $133,000,000 a month drew no observation from him; the amount of $218,000,000, which would be reached by adding our expenses outside the United States, appeared high to him, but it is not impossible that we shall get it.

As one of our Allies has made some remarks on the necessity of equal treatment for all, under the pretext that the contrary would be humiliating, special favors for France are no longer spoken of, although it is possible that more will be heard of this later.

The rate of interest will be the same that the Government of the United States will be able to obtain, probably 3½ percent, with a guaranty that if subsequent loans are made at a higher rate the same interest will be paid to the holders of the first loan.

This interest, by the terms of the law, shall be paid by all the Allied countries concerned. As to the term for repayment, I mentioned (supposing this to be desirable) that of 15 years. Mr. McAnoo said that he had no objection to that.

JUSSERAND.

APRIL 17, 1917.

I shall do my best in the matter of repayment in 25 years, but I cannot refrain from pointing out how much easier things would have been made for me if, instead of speaking, as was done, in the imprecise terms, in your telegram no. 536, of a term "as long as possible", the department had told me 25 years, since it had a settled idea on this subject.

I believed that I had good reason to suppose that 15 years would be considered satisfactory.

I cannot too urgently recommend the utmost possible precision in all these practical and urgent affairs with which I am now occupied.

(Signed) JUSSERAND.

The World War Debt Commission, which was created by the act of February 9, 1922, "to review and convert obligations held by United States of America, and for other purposes", took as its fundamental premise "the capacity of the debtor nations to pay." It considered that each nation under obligation to us should be considered by itself and it, as a commission, should take into consideration three fundamental studies—foreign trade, the total wealth, and the total income. Those three principal factors should be indicative of the capacities to pay all the instrumentalities of each government; the total foreign trade which has a bearing on the capacity to effect payments abroad, the total wealth speaking for itself, and the total national income for the ultimate source of a country's capacity to pay. It was obviously interested in the stabilization of currency and any method that would tend to aid the respective ships of state to keep an even keel. It was, of course, anxious to have a prosperous Europe as a prosperous customer, and if it erred at all it erred on the side of charity. Systematic studies were made of various countries and their capacities to pay. If it made any further mistakes these were the failures to more thoroughly scrutinize the efforts of the great banking houses in this country in their paralleled attempts to float private loans. That Commission justified a settlement on the basis of 26 percent with Italy as against a 50-percent settlement with France and 84 percent with England.

The differences in settlement are understandable when one reviews the hearings and understands the psychology of the American Debt Commission. It honestly believed that these percentages would be most helpful not only in assisting the United States in securing a real share of the war debts but would be most helpful in the rehabilitation of the countries themselves.

It is significant also that the charges of Lloyd George bear out our previous contentions about the solemnity and sanctity of these debt agreements as treaty obligations and that if the compacts of nations are to be worth anything in the future there must be an understandable agreement that it is an essential purpose of the debtor nations that no nation can liberate itself from engagements of a treaty except with the other contracting parties' consent.

The statements of the wartime premier is a direct attack on the age-old doctrine of rebus sic stantibus. Under the guise of that vicious principle, there has been throughout the ages an implied and understood condition of all treaties that when material circumstances on which treaties have rested have altered so as to render performance impracticable and unduly onerous the party thus disadvantaged may repudiate the treaty. The capricious irresponsibility of this doctrine is seen in the admission that every sovereign state has the exclusive right to determine for itself when the stipulation of a treaty becomes impracticable of performance; thus each nation has a privilege of unlimited discretion in this respect; and when a nation, therefore, determines that it is to its advantage to shelve a treaty, there can be no appeal except to the arbitrament of war. This doctrine conventio omnis intelligentur rebus sic stantibus, as it is known in the Latin phrase, is an invitation not only to wanton, flagrant disregard of the sanctities of international covenants but it points out also to all nations the necessity for ample unnecessary military power and armaments to withstand or overawe objections in the case of repudiations. It fosters war.

The history of nations in the exploitation of this doctrine is not confined to continental powers but has been unfortunately used by this country. As a matter of fact many treaties of the United States have not only been violated by this method but by congressional action, for it is now settled constitutional doctrine that a prior treaty may be repealed by a later statute, and we have a number of instances in our own history which reflect no credit on our own attitude in this respect.

Lloyd George recognized the abuse of the doctrine and criticized the British House of Commons on its implied use of this theory in shelving the debts. The press dispatches also pointed out that the brilliant Welchman made a dramatic gesture in pointing directly at Prime Minister Baldwin, who had been instrumental in obtaining the British debt settlement in America. It is significant also that a spirited rejoinder to the attack came from Austin Chamberlain, former foreign secretary, whose remarks were greeted with pro-cabinet cheers and opposition jeers when he said:

His Majesty's Government never repudiated its obligations to the United States. No country, no person can be bound to fulfill the impossible.

Germany was not physically strong enough to maintain the demilitarization of the Rhineland zone, as we were physically unable to make payment to America.

Thus it is seen that the ever-present debt discussions are again the cause of parliamentary campaign tactics, but the excuse this time for repudiation is another vicious abuse of treaty obligations.

Once again we repeat the very charitable and understanding remarks of the President of the United States in his speech of June 1, 1934, on the World War debt, wherein he said—these debts are actual loans made under distinct understanding and with the intention that they would be repaid. Debt settlements made in each case take into consideration the capacity to pay of the individual debtor nations. The money loaned by the United States Government was in turn borrowed by the United States Government from the people of the United States, and our Government, in the absence of payment from foreign governments, is compelled to raise the shortage by general taxation of its own people in order to pay off the original Liberty bonds and the later refunding bonds. It is for these reasons that the American people have felt that their debtors were called upon to make a determined effort to discharge these obligations. The American people would not be disposed to place an impossible burden upon their debtors, but are nevertheless in a just position to ask that substantial sacrifices be made to meet these debts. We shall continue to expect the debtors on their part to show full understanding of the American attitude on this debt question.

The people of the debtor nations will also bear in mind the fact that the American people are certain to be swayed by the use which debtor countries make of their available resources, whether such resources would be applied for the purposes of recovery as well as for reasonable payment on the debt owed to the citizens of the United States or for purposes of unproductive nationalistic expenditure or like purposes. I can only repeat that I have made it clear to the debtor nations again and again that "the indebtedness to our Government has no relation whatsoever to reparations payments made or owed to them, and that each individual nation has full and free opportunity individually to discuss its problems with the United States. We are using every means to persuade each debtor nation as to the sacredness of the obligation and also to assure them of our willingness, if they should so request, to discuss frankly and fully the special circumstances relating to means and method of payment. Recognizing that the final power lies with the Congress, I shall keep the Congress informed from time to time and make such new recommendations as may later seem advisable."

The President has been most fair in his treatment, and it is to be hoped that the prodding of foreign nations by men whose efforts in the past have been so far fruitless will be the cause of a sensible and reasonable debt clearance.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the legislature of the State of Alabama, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Senate concurrent resolution memorializing the President and Congress of the United States to establish a national park on the site of Coosa, that ancient Indian city visited by De Soto's army in the year 1540, commemorating the oldest historical site in America

Whereas it is fully authenticated that De Soto's army, consisting of 600 soldiers and 2,000 burden bearers, encamped and was entertained at Coosa for 2 months in the year 1540—a longer stop, by far, than any other on his march of over 4,000 miles in continental America; and

Whereas the stock of food in that Indian city was sufficient, not only for sustenance of 2,600 visitors for 2 months, but to provide burdens for 500 additional bearers (2,500 in all) upon their departure—proof that the city was of great size, as compared with other known Indian settlements of any period; and

Whereas the archives in the national library at Seville in Spain contain numerous confirmatory documents, including letters written by De Soto's officers while encamped at Coosa, identifying beyond any doubt the historical accuracy of his reported visit; and

Whereas the site on east bank of Coosa River, between Tallaseehatchee Creek and Talladega Creek, in Talladega County, Ala., is clearly identified as the location of Coosa, in the opinion of practically all accepted authorities on aboriginal history; and

Whereas the relative antiquity of De Soto's visit to Coosa, in comparison with other proven occurrences or incidents in American history, is emphasized by the fact that the Spanish army encamped in that great city at a time antedating the founding of St. Augustine by 25 years; the settlement of Jamestown by 70 years, and the landing of the Pilgrims by 80 years, and the further amazing fact that we have yet three-quarters of a century to go before reaching a period as far on this side of the Revolutionary War as De Soto's visit to Coosa stands on the other side of it. Furthermore, its great size suggests that Coosa was an old city even at that remote date—possibly contemporaneous with the Mayan cities. Certainly the earliest placed, and extending furthest into the mists of antiquity, Coosa is, at once, the genesis and the ultima Thule of American history; and

Whereas there is an established American custom of commemorating events of national historical interest, by recognition in the form of parks on the site, of such magnitude as the historical or scenic value may justify; and

Whereas the site of Coosa is bounded on three sides by a magnificent river and two large creeks, fringed with virgin growth of timber, yet undisturbed, and encompassed at distances of 10 and 30 miles, respectively, with mountain ranges of such height as gives inspiring setting for the proposed park; and

Whereas the site is adjacent to two railroads and a trunk highway, and conveniently accessible for visitors from all parts of our country by rail or automobile: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved (by joint resolution of the Alabama Legislature), That the President of the United States, and the Congress, be and are hereby requested to take the necessary steps looking to acquisition of the area embracing the site of old Coosa, and develop same into a National Park of such size and dignity as will be in keeping with the historical importance of the events associated therewith.

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President and Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each of the Senators and Representatives from Alabama.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Indiana, which was ordered to lie on the table:

House Resolution 11

Whereas there is grave danger of another European war that may eventually become another world catastrophe; and

Whereas the recent warlike action of Germany's dictator in declaring the Locarno Pact dead has caused the clouds of war to gather low over the European horizon: Therefore SECTION 1. Be it resolved, That our President and our Congress take necessary steps and formulate plans to safeguard American neutrality; that legislation be adopted immediately that will insure American neutrality and keep America free from foreign entanglements.

SEC. 2. Be it further resolved, That a copy of this resolution, properly authenticated, be sent to the President of the United States and one to the Congress of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a telegram from the mayor of Johnstown, Pa., stating, "I deem it imperative that a joint committee of the Senate and the House visit our stricken city and view the ruins for themselves", which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the New York Commandery, the Naval and Military Order of the Spanish-American War, New York City, N. Y., favoring the enactment of the bill (S. 4011) to further reduce immigration, to authorize the exclusion of any alien whose entry into the United States is inimical to the public interest, to prohibit the separation of families through the entry of aliens leaving dependents abroad, and to provide for the prompt deportation of habitual criminals and all other undesirable aliens, and to provide for the registration of all aliens now in the United States or who shall hereafter be admitted, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the national convention of the German-American League (formerly Friends of the New Germany), at Buffalo, N. Y., protesting against the inculcation and spread of communism and its allied social systems in the United States, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LOANS TO REHABILITATE PROPERTY DAMAGED BY FLOODS

Mr. BULKLEY. I ask leave to introduce, on behalf of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and myself, a bill to amend the National Housing Act and to facilitate the insuring of loans made for the purpose of replacement and rehabilitation of property damaged by the floods.

In that connection I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a brief statement explaining the purpose of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred, and the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

Proposed amendment to title I of the National Housing Act for the purpose of providing credit for the restoration of property damaged by recent floods

The purpose of this bill is to stimulate lending institutions to make the loans necessary to repair the damage which has been caused by recent floods, by providing insurance through the Federal Housing Administration of loans so made. The provisions of this bill are as follows:

1. The general procedure under title I of the National Housing Act, as now set up by the Federal Housing Administration, is to be used to insure loans for these purposes. No new organization is to be created.

2. The insurance to be granted is 20 percent of the total aggregate amount of loans made by an insured institution for this purpose. This insurance is the same in amount as that in effect under title I of the National Housing Act up to April 1, 1936. It increases for this purpose the insurance granted under title I of the National Housing Act, as amended effective April 1, 1936, from 10 percent to 20 percent, which is the amount of insurance under the original act.

3. A provision is included in the bill permitting a lending institution to apply any unused insurance reserve obtained by it under its contract of insurance in effect up to April 1, 1936, to any losses which may be sustained as a result of loans made for the purposes of this bill. In other words, although any unused insurance reserve created prior to April 1, 1936, may not be used to pay losses sustained under the general provisions of title I as amended effective April 1, 1936, it may be used to pay losses sustained as a result of loans made under the specific provisions of this bill.

4. This bill provides for new construction, replacement, or repair of property destroyed or damaged by floods occurring subsequent to March 1, 1936. Replacement by new construction of industrial or institutional property may be done with the proceeds of loans not in excess of $50,000. Under title I of the National Housing Act, as in effect up to April 1, 1936, and as amended effective April 1, 1936, new construction was not eligible for financing if the proceeds of the loan exceeded $2,000. This bill is also designed to permit new construction of property destroyed or damaged by flood, whether or not the new construction is to take place upon the property upon which the original structures stood. In other words, it is desired to permit a property owner whose structure has been destroyed by flood, to rebuild on new property where the danger of damage from flood is not so imminent.

5. The replacement or repair of equipment and machinery which had been installed in property destroyed or damaged by the floods is also permissible.

6. Operations under this bill may continue until January 1, 1937, but may be terminated by the President at any time upon his determination that the emergency situation no longer exists.

7. The amendment to title I of the National Housing Act, effective April 1, 1936, reduces the maximum liability which the Administrator may assume from $200,000,000 to $100,000,000. The possible additional liability necessary to provide the insurance contemplated under this bill was not considered at the time the reduction was made in the amendment to title I of the National Housing Act. For this reason a provision is included in this bill authorizing the President to increase the amount of liability which the Administrator is permitted to incur if it should develop that the $100,000,000 is insufficient.

The bill (S. 4396) to amend the National Housing Act for flood-relief purposes, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

AMENDMENT TO MERCHANT MARINE BILL

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3500) to develop a strong American merchant marine, to promote the commerce of the United States, to aid national defense, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS—AMERICAN PAPER INDUSTRY, ETC.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, in view of the fact that manufacturers in the United States find themselves confronted with tariff reductions under the present system of trade agreements which threaten the extinction of their business, I wish to present a letter written by Mr. Warren B. Bullock, of the import committee of the American Paper Industry. I ask unanimous consent that this letter be published in the RECORD and be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD and referred as requested by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

(The letter appears in the RECORD at the conclusion of the remarks of Mr. DAVIS.)

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, under the present system of reciprocal-trade agreements the American manufacturer and his employees, who are vitally interested in continued employment, behold their business traded away and seem to be able to do nothing more to protest such action than to file a brief with the State Department.

Sugar is now our leading import. During the first 11 months of 1935 we imported 5,820,000,000 pounds of sugar, valued at $133,000,000, practically 70 percent coming from Cuba. Notwithstanding the increase of imports of sugar from abroad, our Government has adopted the program of producing less sugar at home. The records of the Department of Commerce show that during the year 1935 the importation of sugar from foreign countries has increased nearly 500,000,000 pounds over 1934.

Notwithstanding the fact that we knew we were going to have a surplus of rye in domestic production, we permitted foreign countries to ship in nearly 10,000,000 bushels of rye during the year 1935, which increased the surplus to 28,000,000 bushels. As a result rye is today selling on the primary market for less than 40 cents a bushel, whereas it should be bringing 75 or 80 cents a bushel. This represents a loss of over $7,000,000 to rye growers of the United States.

While farmers were being paid to curtail production of corn, wheat, and oats, we were importing these commodities from abroad. During the first 6 months of 1935 we imported into this country 10,000,000 bushels of oats and 12,000,000 bushels of wheat. In 1935 we paid the farmers of other countries over $9,000,000 for their corn to be placed in our domestic markets. During the first half of 1935 the United States imported 21,500,000 pounds of butter and there was an increase in the import of meat, wheat byproduct feeds, molasses, flaxseed, oil-cake meal, and wool.

If we are to have reciprocal-trade agreements, I should like to have them operate on the principle enunciated by President McKinley. In speaking of reciprocal relations with other countries he made this clear and convincing statement:

The end in view always to be the opening up of new markets for the products of our country by granting concessions to the products of other lands that we need and cannot produce ourselves, and which do not involve any loss of labor to our own people, but tend rather to increase their employment.

Mr. President, I have long believed that it would be much better for us to maintain the competitive American markets for our own products and thus suggest to foreign competitors that they increase the wages of their workmen who produce their competitive products to a parity with our own. If this were done, it would result in a world-wide improvement of living standards and an increase of purchasing power throughout the world.

The instability of foreign exchange adds yet another factor to this complex problem. Amidst the kaleidoscopic changes of the financial markets of the world attempts are now being made to win our domestic market and undermine American standards of living through the skillful devices of currency manipulation. We must not add to this financial insecurity by abandoning our tariff protections.

How can we hope to increase employment in this country by encouraging Americans to buy foreign competitive products at this time when even in normal times many of our own factories and mills operate not more than 7 months in each year? I maintain that tariff reductions should not be made with respect to any foreign country on articles in the production of which labor standards, as reflected in wages, living scales, and labor costs, are lower than those which obtain in the production of the comparable articles in the United States.

The case for the new trade policy of the United States is set forth by Dr. Henry F. Grady in the January 1936 issue of Foreign Affairs. Dr. Grady says:

We have already lowered many rates, which have been generalized to other countries. When we shall have gone the rounds of most of the important countries of the world, reducing in each case the duties on commodities of which it is the principal or important source, we shall have lowered our tariffs on a great many items where the case for lowering is justified. As a result of extending these reductions to virtually all countries, we will obtain, it would seem, what the proponents of unilateral tariff reduction desire; but we will do it more carefully and scientifically than is possible by legislative action. We will at the same time bring about a substantial downward revision of foreign-trade barriers. Eventually, therefore, our trade-agreements program, with the cooperation of other nations, will have accomplished something of very real importance toward the general reduction of world-trade barriers.

Here again we once more embark, with New World idealism, into the stormy waters of international politics, vaguely trusting to the cooperation of other nations. In this spirit we sent our millions of men and money abroad to "make the world safe for democracy." The same hope inspired us to lead the world in disarmament conferences, taking our pledges seriously and destroying our battleships, while the other signatories to the agreements quietly laughed at us and continued to build for the future. This same illusive hope of the cooperation of other nations led us to loan billions of dollars abroad, and the loans are still unpaid. It is true that there is some talk of payment now that investment of foreign dollars in this country is promising in view of our devalued dollar. And now we put ourselves out front in the abandonment of our tariff protection. Meanwhile we observe that as we lower our barriers our competitors raise theirs, taking advantage of the strange shift in our tariff policy. Such procedure will give but little promise of a solution of our problem of unemployment, which now should be the chief concern of us all.

The letter presented by Mr. Davis was referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

IMPORT COMMITTEE OF THE AMERICAN PAPER INDUSTRY,
New York City, February 15, 1936.

Reciprocal-trade agreements—Analysis of effects on American paper industry

This summary of the conditions developing from the consummation of various trade agreements with foreign nations under the so-called Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act, enacted as an amendment to the Tariff Act of 1930, is devoted solely to the results of agreements affecting the paper industry.

As a preliminary comment, however, attention may be called to several pertinent facts: The Trade Agreement Act deprives the American manufacturer of any recourse as to any commodity mentioned in any trade agreement, such as application to the Tariff Commission under section 336 of the Tariff Act for change of duty under the so-called flexible tariff provision of the act. While the President under the unamended act already had the power to make any change up to 50 percent in the rates of duty which were found to be unjustifiable, the Trade Agreement Act now denies any relief to the American manufacturer regardless of any change in conditions which may develop with regard to prices of foreign merchandise.

While it is true that American industry was given an opportunity to be heard before any reciprocal-trade agreement was negotiated, it is also true that no intimation was given at any time whether or not any specific commodity was under consideration for duty reduction. American industry was forced to present its case without knowing whether or not its products were likely to be affected. In every case, however, the American paper industry filed a statement on competition with foreign papers, when a trade agreement with a paper-producing nation was under consideration, taking every step permitted by law to make its needs known.

There is on the statute books an antidumping act, providing for the imposition of a special dumping duty on merchandise sold in this country at less than the fair value in the country of origin. The present administration has denied practically all the complaints which were under consideration when it came into power and those which have been filed since that time. Furthermore, under the reciprocal-trade agreement with the Netherlands, effective February 1, 1936, it is agreed that no antidumping order shall be issued without 30 days' prior notice to the Netherlands authorities, thus making the enforcement of an American statute to prevent dumping a matter for diplomatic negotiation. This provision automatically applies to any dumping procedure affecting any other country not held to be discriminating against the United States.

Trade agreement with Belgium, effective May 1, 1935: This agreement reduced the rate of duty on vegetable parchment from 3 cents per pound, plus 15 percent ad valorem, to 2 cents per pound and 10 percent. At the time of the open hearing prior to the negotiation of this agreement, the domestic industry filed a statement indicating that any reduction in the rate would be disastrous in its effects on the American paper industry. Ruling prices for this commodity were materially lower at that time than when this industry in 1929 presented to the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives its showing that the rate then existent of 3 cents per pound and 15 percent was not sufficient to equalize the costs of production in the United States and abroad. Despite this showing the duty was reduced in the Belgian agreement. Up to the date of this analysis the imports from foreign countries have not become large in tonnage, owing to the fact that the American mills immediately reduced their prices to approximately cost of production. There are four mills in the United States making this product, located at Bristol, Pa.; West Carrollton, Ohio; Kalamazoo, Mich.; and Los Angeles, Calif. The Ohio company canceled plans for increasing plant capacity and modernization; the other companies took similar though less radical steps. When the new low rates went into effect foreign producers already had a large share of the American market for the higher-priced special grades. The chief increase so far noted in imports of the usual grade sold in the American market has been in shipments from England, which has made no reciprocal agreement with this company, though automatically benefiting from the Belgian agreement. Belgian shipments have not materially increased owing to the American sales at cost. The Belgian product can now be delivered duty paid in this market at about 2 cents per pound less than the American cost price.

Trade agreement with Sweden, effective August 6, 1935: This agreement affects chiefly wrapping paper and unprocessed paperboard made in practically every American paper-making State. The situation as to wrapping paper has already become critical. Imports of kraft wrapping paper in 1934 totaled 4,000 tons, but under the reciprocal agreement reducing the rate from 30 percent ad valorem to 25 percent imports increased to 12,000 tons in 1935. Even at the old rate this paper was imported from Sweden at less than the American cost of production, due chiefly to sales at prices which caused a complaint of dumping by the domestic industry. Finland, which has as yet no trade agreement with this country, can sell, and is delivering, this paper at less than the price for the Swedish product. This reduction in duty was effected despite a decision by the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals that this paper was already being sold in this country at approximately 1 cent per pound less than the usual price in the country of origin. Furthermore, in the face of this court decision in May 1934, the Secretary of the Treasury, in September 1934, decided there was no dumping.

The situation as to machine-glazed sulphite wrapping paper bears a close resemblance to that involving kraft paper, particularly as the two grades are used for essentially the same purposes by the consumers. The imports of this grade in 1935, under the reciprocal-trade agreement, were six times the total for 1934, though the tonnage involved is smaller than in the case of kraft. Here again there was a dumping complaint, and here again the Secretary of the Treasury held there was no dumping. Here also the customs officials are collecting duty on a home-market value about 1 cent per pound more than the actual sale price, and yet deliveries duty paid are made at less than the American production cost.

The Swedish agreement "bound" unprocessed paperboard at the existing rate of 10 percent. Regardless of what may develop, the American producer is barred from seeking relief under the flexible provision of the tariff act. Other nations are equal beneficiaries of this decision, particularly in the case of Finland, where a certain type of pulpboard is being sold in Finland at a very low price, possibly less than cost of production, in order to establish a low basis for value for the exports of this commodity, which is chiefly an export product. The established legal dutiable value is less than the Finnish cost of production, but American producers have no recourse under the law, because of the reciprocal-trade agreement.

Trade agreement with the Netherlands, effective February 1, 1936: This agreement is a most notable example of the policy of the administration to reduce duty rates in the face of careful studies of competitive conditions in Holland and the United States. Two important items were affected by this agreement—bristol-board, chiefly produced in New England, and 9-point straw paper for the corrugated-box industry, largely a product of Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio.

In the case of bristol, because of the severe competition which had existed in some grades, the House Ways and Means Committee made a radical departure in the phraseology of the act of 1922, which provided a rate of duty of 3 cents per pound and 15 percent ad valorem for bristol made on a Fourdrinier machine. This bristol is made in various qualities on both cylinder and Fourdrinier machines, and the act of 1930 included cylinder bristol at the rate formerly fixed for the Fourdrinier machine product instead of the old rate of 10 percent as cardboard, under which it had been imported. Importers immediately protested to the United States Customs Court against the higher rate, and after 3 years in the courts a final decision was rendered by the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals holding cylinder bristol to be properly dutiable at 3 cents per pound and 15 percent. The trade agreement with the Netherlands, chief exporter of this product, reduced the rate of duty to 2 cents per pound and 10 percent on all low-priced bristols, this agreement being consummated after the court had decided on the duty rate for this commodity. Inasmuch as the new rate only became effective February 1, there is as yet no indication of the probable results on the American market.

The case of 9-point straw paper is another in which the reciprocal agreement has been the means of overturning a deliberate decision of Congress. Prior to the act of 1930 this commodity was dutiable at 10 percent as paperboard. The Tariff Act of 1930 changed the dividing line between paper and board from 9 points to 12 points, making this commodity automatically dutiable at 30 percent as paper not specially provided for. The reciprocal-trade agreement with the Netherlands reduced this rate 50 percent, to 15 percent ad valorem. Inasmuch as this reduction was effective February 1, there is as yet no indication of the probable results, though they promise to be serious. Representatives of Dutch producers, in advance of the announcement of the new rate, apparently advised of what was to transpire, offered the Dutch product at new low prices and began to take orders for delivery.

The reduction in this rate will have a wide effect not only upon the domestic manufacturers but upon the farmers whose interest the administration professes to have so much at heart. This commodity is used as an inner corrugated medium for the well-known corrugated box and shipping case. The straw paper competes with the chestnut product made in Tennessee and neighboring States from the dead chestnut sold to the mills by the small hill farmers in that region, with the pine product also chiefly made in the South, and with kraft paper made in the Southern States. The most direct sufferers, however, will be the grain farmers of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, who have found a profitable market among the paper mills for straw which otherwise would have been burned or disposed of at low prices for stable bedding, etc. Southern Michigan provides about 10 percent of the straw requirements of the American mills, with a portion also coming from western New York, Iowa, and Kansas. The straw-paper mills in the 3 years ending 1935 produced an average of 289,095 tons of this material. About 1½ tons of straw are required to make a ton of paper, so the straw consumption in those years averages 433,642 tons. About one-half ton of straw per acre is the usual product, so the new Netherlands agreement will have an adverse effect on the farmers selling straw from 867,284 acres. Straw paper from Holland is being offered at $37 per ton, duty paid, as compared with a domestic price of $46 to $47. In order to meet the competition the domestic producers will be forced to reduce the price paid for the domestic straw to nearly the entire difference of $10 per ton, the alternative being to discontinue production and purchase of any of the straw formerly consumed. The only ray of hope to the domestic industry is the fact that the Dutch mills, though nearly as numerous as the American, cannot supply the entire needs of the American market. The foreign product, however, will be imported in sufficient quantities to fix the American price of not only straw but chestnut, pine, and kraft paper.

Respectfully submitted.

WARREN B. BULLOCK, Manager.

OUR MUTUAL HERITAGE—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BARKLEY

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a very able and interesting address on the subject Our Mutual Heritage, delivered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] at the annual dinner of the Canadian Society of New York.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, members and guests of the Canadian Society of New York, I am deeply conscious of the high honor involved in an invitation to address your distinguished society.

The long list of men who have been your guests in the past includes some of the most celebrated citizens of the two nations. I am, therefore, highly complimented to have my humble name written on such a scroll, and I am particularly happy to be here with the honored Canadian statesman with whom I share this program tonight.

I am persuaded to believe that the American Republic has been enriched by the infusion of your blood into our family stream, as our civic life has been enhanced by your political and economic assimilation and your loyalty to the best standards of American and Canadian citizenship.

There is, as there ought to be, a peculiar affinity which exists between the United States and Canada. For the most part, our background is the same. With some variations, our racial and ancestral roots were nurtured and flourished in the same European soil. To our respective shores came the French, the English, the Irish, the Scotch, the German, and the sons and daughters of other peoples who have been fused into a virile and homogeneous race, breathing the fresh free air of a new world, advancing the frontiers of liberty in both Canada and the United States, setting an exalted example to the rest of the world.

In Canada the French settled largely in Quebec. In the United States they settled in South Carolina and Louisiana and throughout the Nation. Montreal, I believe, is the second largest French-speaking city in the world, being excelled in that respect by Paris only.

Yet French-Canadians of the Province of Quebec are as loyal to the standards and the traditions of the Dominion as are the descendants of the shires of England, the Highlands of Scotland, or the beauteous hills and lakes of the Emerald Isle.

In the United States a larger and more diverse migration transpired, and one which was in proportion more difficult of complete assimilation. But in both countries the love of liberty, the yearning for political freedom, the demand for popular participation in the functions of government, the right to worship God as conscience might dictate, have all contributed to the perpetuation in this Western Hemisphere of those ideals of the rights of man which were planted in the hearts of our forefathers of the British Isles nearly 10 centuries ago.

We rejoice, therefore, that in the midst of the welter of confusion and suspicion created by the jarring noises of conflicting dictatorships in other parts of the world, we in America, whether in Canada or the United States, and our kinsmen across the seas still carry the torch of liberty to light our paths and still unfurl the banner of democracy unabashed and unashamed.

It is a pitiful commentary on the enlightenment, if not the sincerity, of some of the so-called leaders of world opinion that within less than two decades of the close of the most devastating war that ever cursed humanity or fertilized the soil with its blood, we witness a world torn and wrenched between the ambitions of dictators and the prayers for peace and international accord from the burden bearers of almost every civilized nation in the world. Before the charred walls of destroyed cities are replaced by the parapets of a new existence, before the maimed and crippled victims of the last Great War are healed of their wounds, before the soul-stirring memories of death and disaster inflicted two decades ago are obliterated from our minds, we are disturbed by the constant fear that some apparently insignificant and isolated event in some remote corner of the world may precipitate another brutal era of human carnage. In spite of leagues of nations, in spite of Kellogg pacts, in spite of the renunciation of war as an instrument of national policy, to which practically the entire world pledged itself but recently, we are this day witnessing the encroachment of powerful and ambitious nations upon the rights of smaller and more helpless nations; and as a consequence of this situation every nation in the world is expending more money on armaments than they were spending immediately prior to the last war.

Trade barriers throughout the world, erected in an effort to create each nation into an airtight, watertight compartment wholly independent of all others, increase the friction, restrict the flow of trade in normal channels, increase unemployment, prolong the economic evils from which the whole world suffers, and postpone the fulfillment of the promise made in every great commercial nation to find an outlet for the surplus products of the people who toil that the nations may be clothed and fed.

It is, therefore, refreshing and reassuring to be a part of that contingent of humanity which inhabits North America and is free from the nightmare of fear of any neighbor or combination of neighbors anywhere in this hemisphere. It is a glorious thought to recall that for nearly a century and a quarter, these two nations, Canada and the United States, have lived beside each other along the most extensive international boundary in the world as friends without the mounting of a cannon or fortification, and that neither has suffered from this lack of fear or suspicion or hatred.

Canada and the United States have probably more interests and problems in common than any two countries in the world.

Our people are similar. Our language, inheritance, and our ideals, in the main, are alike.

In the exchange of the products of human toil and ingenuity each is the other's best customer.

From 40 to 50 percent of Canada's exports go to the United States, and from 60 to 70 percent of her imports come from the United States.

Americans have invested more than $4,000,000,000 in the financial and industrial institutions of Canada, and Canadians have invested more than $1,000,000,000 in similar institutions in the United States.

The joint use of innumerable waterways along our borders affects vast investments and millions of peoples in both countries.

The plan for the development of the St. Lawrence is but one of many projects undertaken by the two Governments for the advancement of the commercial, economic, and social well-being of the people of both nations.

Other problems include tariffs, immigration, boundaries, and the protection of the immeasurable resources of North America.

Decisions on these and countless other questions of mutual interest and concern will be made by those who are now the youths of Canada and the United States. Those of us who are now upon the scene, who are for a time clothed with some temporary official authority, may make our contribution to the atmosphere of accommodation which may promote the friendly adjustment of these problems; but we must inevitably commit their final solution to those who will bear the responsibilities of another generation or another century.

It is therefore indispensable that they should acquire a fuller and more accurate understanding of their neighbors on both sides of the boundary line in the course of their educational training.

A recent study, made by responsible educational authorities, as to whether either country is doing its full duty in educating its people in this field disclosed some surprising results.

The purpose of this study was to find what Canadian students and American students in the last year of their secondary schools know about the other country.

This test was made among 1,267 American and 1,168 Canadian students drawn from all sections of both countries, and from compositions of some 800 boys and girls in each of the above groups.

The tests included a request to put down the first thing that came into their minds when they thought of Canada or the United States, respectively.

The Canadian student's first impression of the United States was of great wealth, poor law enforcement, the prevalence of crime, large cities, an immense population, opportunities for sports and amusements, and less frequently the trade relations of the two countries.

The American students' first impression when thinking of Canada was of severe weather, the large number of French-speaking inhabitants, abundant natural resources, beautiful scenery, winter sports, the "control" of Great Britain, a source of bootleg liquor, and of police who "get their man."

American students were woefully ignorant of Canadian history and geography. Only 11 percent could give approximately the population within 25 percent of accuracy and only one in five knew that Ottawa is the capital of the Dominion. Most deplorable was their lack of information concerning Canada's Government.

In answering the question, "What kind of government does Canada have?" 33 percent said that "Canada is a possession of Great Britain", "Canada is ruled by Great Britain", "Canada is owned by Great Britain." Twenty-five percent of them made no attempt to answer the question, and almost 50 percent stated that Canada cannot decide her relations with the United States without the consent of the British Parliament.

Failure to recognize that Canada, though a part of the British Commonwealth of Nations, enjoys practically as much liberty and self-government as we in the United States, is unfortunate, as it is often the basis of the student's attitude toward Canada.

As an example of total ignorance on the subject, one student replied that "Canada is under British rule, which is nothing to speak of."

Another said, "I believe Canada should have its independence."

Another said, "Canada is not a country. It is just a Province of England."

The Rush-Bagot Treaty of 1817, which is the basis of the lack of fortifications along the American-Canadian border, was so unknown that only 3 percent of Americans and 20 percent of Canadians had ever heard of its existence. This may explain why many of those who commented on it at all thought it ought to be fortified.

There is equal ignorance in both countries concerning the International Joint Commission which has existed for 25 years and has dealt with numerous questions arising between the two countries.

The reactions of Canadian students toward the United States were equally astonishing and equally unfortunate.

These are typical expressions from Canadian students:

"The United States is a hotbed of hustling, flag-waving, gum-chewing men and women, whose dignity is conspicuous by its absence."

"The information by the average American about Canada is appalling. They seem to think that we bundle ourselves in furs, live in tepees, and crouch around the Arctic Circle."

"The crime in the States is astounding. Weapons are easy to obtain, and anybody out of a job joins a gang and becomes a gangster. The people have much too high an opinion of themselves and do too much talking. They are really just ignorant of the rest of the world and think the States is the one and only place to live in."

"By her literature, movies, etc., the United States is corrupting the world."

If this lack of understanding and knowledge concerning the affairs of each country, this indifference on the part of what should be bright and alert students, exists among those who are in the process of training for the heavy responsibilities of the future in private and public life, how much greater may we suppose it to be among the elder generation of men and women whose opportunities were infinitely below those who are now in our schools?

Undoubtedly some of these expressions concerning each country by the students of the other come perilously near to being true. But on the whole they are woefully and grossly inaccurate, and reveal an impelling necessity to give to the coming generation of citizens of both Canada and the United States a more thorough training in the problems of government arising between the two countries which must be adjusted in the light of sympathetic understanding and knowledge of our respective peoples.

It is a pathetic and humiliating fact that out of nearly 40 elementary histories which recently came under examination, only 6 mentioned the Canadian Confederation of 1867, an event which has affected the whole course of our relations with Canada and Great Britain, as well as those between Canada and Great Britain and the rest of the world.

With the advancement of knowledge, with the transmission of information through all the countless means now available to the world we look forward with confidence to the dawn of a day of fuller and happier intimacy of understanding and appreciation on the part of all the countries of this hemisphere, as well as of the world.

In the very nature of political organizations there must be boundary lines between nations. There can never be a real federation of the world in the sense that it can be brought under the domination of a single nation or a single ruler or a single political system.

Differences in race, in background, in geography, in mental and spiritual outlook, in methods of production and distribution, in the standards of life and the close cooperation between government and people make the existence of many nations throughout the world indispensable and desirable.

But while nations have a right to exist and to work out the destiny of their people in the light of justice and equal opportunity, insofar as they may enjoy and appreciate it, they have no moral right to exercise unjust or autocratic power in the strangling of others merely because of the power to do so.

Happily, we in these two great nations of North America, these two vast democracies which stretch from the North Pole almost to the Equator, constitute the most sublime example in all the history of the world of how two great peoples may live in close proximity and yet in peace and happy accord in all their relationships.

I said "these two great democracies." How else could I describe Canada and the United States? While you in Canada are a part of the far-flung empire upon which it is said the sun never sets, yet you are in every essential a self-governing democracy. Your ties with the mother country are sacred and form a proudfest connection with the ancestral home of most of us in the Old World, yet more and more you, along with the other British Commonwealths, are assuming the obligations and the responsibilities of national existence.

It is one of the glorious aspects of our heritage as children of a common ancestry that for nearly a thousand years we have seen that stream of national and international life bring to the children of men the refreshing waters of freedom, self-government, political autonomy, equality in the enjoyment of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

That is why we in the United States take a pride in the achievements of the people of Canada. We have made our contribution to those achievements, as Canadians have made theirs toward our achievements.

That is why, in the midst of a recent great bereavement which saddened the whole British Empire through the death of King George, we felt a sort of kinship in that grief, because we understand the instincts of loyalty and we understand the promptings of the universal heart.

We in our country do not believe in monarchy. We withdrew from it more than a century and a half ago, and by that withdrawal perhaps made an inestimable contribution to the liberties now enjoyed by all those within the British Empire.

But while we do not believe in monarchy or the institutions of royalty, we can see something touching and beautiful in the reverence of the British people to the Crown as an institution of unity. It connotes permanency. It typifies the union of the past with the present for the British people and all those who are within the sphere of their national and territorial association.

The old warfare between the Crown and the people has ceased, because the people won their liberties, their right to a voice in their government, and the Crown, while influential and respected, became more a symbol of loyalty than an agency of government. It was recently said by Sir Wilmot Lewis, British correspondent in Washington, that the King reigns but does not govern.

It was because of this, as well as the character and bearing of the late King George, that throughout the world there was on the occasion of his death a sadness produced by the respect and admiration in which he was held as a sovereign and as a man.

I rejoice with you tonight that your great Canadian Society is giving in our country an example of the loyalty which you feel and which we all feel to the highest standards of moral and intellectual conduct which has enriched America, Canada, the British Empire, and all the nations of the world.

AN AMERICAN FUTURE FOR AMERICAN YOUTH—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BENSON

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Senator BENSON, of Minnesota, before the meeting sponsored by the American Youth Congress in New York City, March 5, 1936. The address is entitled "An American Future for American Youth—An Insurance Policy Against National Decay."

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Of all the people who have been afflicted by the depression the greatest sufferers, perhaps, are our young folks. In a recent article in the Journal of National Education, Jay Elmer Morgan, editor, writes: "America today has largely closed its doors to youth. Take one profession after another—teaching, medicine, law, engineering, journalism—or take the present opportunities of business and industry—they are all closed to youth. Go into your communities and States and make a survey of the population between 16 and 25 years of age, and you will find hundreds of thousands—a total of 3,000,000 over the whole Nation—for whom there are no jobs, no schools. A study of graduates who have gone out during the past 5 years reveals a discouraging and disheartening lack of opportunity. The gates are closed. There is not even a foothold by which they may climb the path of life. They are referred to casually as the 'lost generation.'"

And how does this affect youth? Dr. Herbert D. Williams, director of the psychiatric clinic at Dobbs Ferry, gives the answer. Studies of boys and girls from 16 to 19 years of age show marked increase in crimes, a peak prison population, migration of boys from home to relieve financial stress of parents, increased number out of school because of poverty, lack of life philosophy, and break-down of old standards and innumerable associated evils. Those facts should be studied by fathers and mothers, particularly those who defend the present social order.

The Republican Party pays no attention to the problem but adopts the ostrich policy of hiding its head in the sand and denying the problem's existence. What do they care whether boys and girls of 18 or 20 are unemployed and wandering as vagrants throughout the land? The young people have no votes.

ADMINISTRATION EFFORTS COMMENDED

The Democrats are to be commended for having concerned themselves with this problem. One of President Roosevelt's first acts after he took office was to establish C. C. C. camps for boys on relief or from relief families. That administration measure met with almost universal and deserved approval. There was some apprehension among liberals that the camps might become centers for militarizing and regimenting our youth, but that did not occur. In fact, I believe that the experience of most young men at the camp had the opposite effect—it has taken away the glory and fascination from the uniform and the bugle. We know the number who have benefited by C. C. C. enrollment, and that number today reaches almost one million. We do not know, however, nor can we ever know, how greatly many of those people have benefited. The C. C. C. camps were not merely camps for the unemployed during a period of want. They were also builders of health, of morale, and of character.

But the C. C. C., while admirable in many ways, helped only a very small portion of the young people in need. It was restricted to boys, and, further, to boys from relief families. In order to give consideration to both boys and girls, the Federal Government instituted student aid.

ORIGINATED IN MINNESOTA

We from Minnesota know something about student aid. It originated in our State. In 1933 Governor Floyd B. Olson, concerned with the problem of unemployed youth, invited a committee of distinguished educators, churchmen, and youth leaders to meet with him and suggest ways and means by which unemployed youth could return to school. After considerable consultation and the formulating of many different plans, the Minnesota plan was drawn up whereby the State contributed 50 percent of the money from relief funds; the Federal Government matched that with another 50 percent; and colleges and universities waived or deferred tuition in cases of students who were in need, or otherwise unable to go to school, and whose scholastic ability was above average. The need for that type of youth relief and its success were evident, and the Federal Government adopted the program and instituted it on a nation-wide scale. That program has been in effect now for almost 2 years. During that time it had aided nearly half a million young men and women to return to or to continue in college.

Again, however, that program was a restricted one. It helped only graduates of high school and those of superior mental ability.

In May of last year, the Federal Government established a national youth administration as an integral part of its Federal relief. That not only provided that young men and women were to be aided in attending college, but there was to be aid for high-school students and, in addition, aid in the form of special and apprenticeship projects for young people who were neither in high school nor college. Many States have supplemented this aid of the Federal Government. In Minnesota, for instance, we give aid to high school and college students over and above that granted by the Federal Government.

But, broad as such plans are, they are not comprehensive enough, as they do not help all classes. Furthermore, in some cases they are not adapted to our present industrial society. For example, it is a fine thing for a boy to go to a C. C. C. camp and to learn something about the beauties of nature, to become strong and self-reliant, to build himself up physically and morally. But we no longer live in a civilization where there is any great need for log choppers and hand ditch diggers. We make material for our buildings now out of various elements, chemically. We dig ditches not with shovels but with dredges. The large scoops, at one bite, move more dirt than a half dozen men could move in a morning. There is, too, another disadvantage of all the measures so far designed to aid youth, and that is, they are essentially only relief measures. Temporary in nature, they may be cut off at any time, and, relying for their financial support on relief funds, they must, of necessity, be restricted to families on relief or on the verge of relief. The vast majority of young men and young women in this country, however, do not come from families who are on relief, although many of them may be in great need and living on a budget almost as low as the budget for relief. Those families cannot contribute anything beyond food and shelter to their children, and even a free educational program is too expensive for them.

BENEFITS TOO FEW

The sad aspect of the present youth administration's efforts to aid American youth is that so few are aided. In my home State, for instance, there were nearly six times as many applications for high-school and college aid as there were places to accommodate them. There were almost 14 times as many applications for high-school aid as there were high-school aid grants, although our State practically doubled the number granted by the Federal Government. It may be true that a few of the applications came from people who were ineligible and whose need and sincerity were questionable.

But the vast majority came from serious-minded young people, who, realizing the inability of their parents to finance their education or their own inability to find part-time work which would enable them to earn their way through school, appealed to the Federal Government for that training which would make them better citizens and ultimately more useful to their country.

With those facts in view, I was happy to introduce in the United States Senate a bill which would aid all classes of American youth, regardless of race, color, or creed, and regardless of whether their parents were on relief or living on subsistence wages just above the margin of relief. That bill would provide work and education for unemployed American youth.

I propose that the number to be aided in high schools and colleges be increased by the Federal Government and that the Federal Government require States to supplement the aid granted them and add to the number of youths who will be aided.

Important as education is, however, for youth, we must not forget the fact that not all education is acquired in classrooms. Much schooling is obtained on the job and through experiences of life. Many boys and girls at a certain age have exhausted the possibility of profiting by additional formal schooling. Other boys and girls, having their theoretical education, need an opportunity to get experience. I propose, as a part of my bill, that those young people have an opportunity to learn vocations and trades partly in vocational schools and partly through working at different jobs.

PROVIDE HELP, EDUCATION

As a means of furnishing them productive employment, I propose the establishment in practically every locality of a youth community center consisting of a playground, a building suitable for indoor meetings, and, perhaps, swimming pools, hiking paths, places where they can have outdoor barbecues, and other wholesome recreations. In some instances those centers might be built in connection with schools and school gymnasiums, in other instances as entirely separate units. I believe that the decision as to whether it is to be part of the school system or part of a separate community system should be left to the community. I believe that every community in America ought to organize committees, one-third of the membership to be composed of young people, to form youth community playgrounds and centers. The Federal Government should then finance the program, provided that the work, in a large measure at least, is done by the young people themselves. The older people of the community should act in a supervisory or advisory capacity.

That plan would give aid to many needy families, furnish work to at least half a million youths, and furnish wholesome recreation and amusement later to countless youths. Unlike many of the relief projects, it would be a permanent improvement. Every community would have acquired something for its young people which it does not have today. All of the young people in America would have centers for recreation, for study, for physical culture, and for mental development which are not available today.

Again, I believe that the Federal Government should aid States in trying to find opportunity for the young unemployed people to receive practical training on the job. Since 1930 the number of young people learning any trade or perfecting any mechanical skill has decreased tremendously. The professions are crowded, and there is a sufficient supply of those with clerical training, but there is a woeful lack of those skilled in the mechanical trades.

The result is that today, if all the factories were to open, we would find ourselves with a serious shortage of young skilled workers. In fact, the shortage would be so serious that we probably could not run all of our machines. In many trades there is not a single person capable of practicing that trade under 30 years of age.

We must remedy that situation. We must not bar youth from opportunity to learn the only type of work which may be available. The Federal Government should increase expenditures for vocational education, and it should urge the States to do likewise.

GUARD AGAINST MISUSE

At the same time, the Federal Government should be on its guard to see that nothing it does in its effort to aid youth in obtaining experience and practical training may be used by unscrupulous employers to beat down the wage standard of union workers. Under no circumstances should we be a party to any scheme which, under the guise of educating youth in a trade, might be used to break the wage standard of the older men engaged in that trade. The Secretary of Labor of the United States should maintain strict supervision of full or part-time apprentice employment for youth, and in that supervision, should cooperate closely with all local unions.

It is my firm belief that a bill such as I have introduced to allow youth to obtain more academic education and more vocational training, and last to construct community centers, would be of great benefit to this country.

When the youth of a nation loses its morale, its hope for the future, its zeal for the things which are to come, then national decay is ahead. That is the danger point, and youth today is losing its morale. We have too long forgotten youth. I feel the least we can do to make up for our neglect is to pass an act such as the American Youth Act, and to begin to plan for a national youth program.

RELIEF, WEST VIRGINIA, AND THE W. P. A.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered by me on the 19th instant, entitled "Relief, West Virginia, and the W. P. A."

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Yesterday President Roosevelt requested Congress to appropriate a billion and one-half dollars for relief. Such an appropriation should be administered by those who want efficiency and to benefit those for whom the program was intended. I feel that the United States Senate should make a thorough investigation of the entire relief problem. With millions and billions of dollars being spent, it is time for us to look thoroughly into the whole relief program. With 12,626,000 people out of employment the first month of this year, certainly we should make some definite step toward a permanent policy of handling those so unfortunate as to be without jobs.

The haphazard and loose spending of money cannot be excused over a long period of time. We all realize that when relief was started, that the first duty was to feed and clothe those that needed relief. After 2 years' time we must make a step toward a more definite policy.

I criticize the W. P. A. The President of the United States on the 28th day of April 1935, said:

"The most effective means of preventing such evils in this work-relief program will be the eternal vigilance of the American people themselves. I call upon my fellow citizens everywhere to cooperate with me in making this the most efficient and the cleanest example of public enterprise the world has ever seen. It is time to provide a smashing answer for those cynics who say that a democracy cannot be honest and efficient. If you will help, this can be done."

"I therefore hope you will watch the work in every corner of this Nation. Feel free to criticize. Tell me of instances where work can be done better or where improper practices prevail."

He continues:

"Neither you nor I want criticism conceived in a purely fault-finding or partisan spirit, but I am jealous of the right of every citizen to call to the attention of his or her Government examples of how the public money can be more effectively spent for the benefit of the American people."

I have charged, and I repeat tonight, that the W. P. A. in West Virginia is loaded with politics from top to bottom. May I cite a few instances?

A personnel director of one of the districts wrote:

"The time to correct mistakes is before they are made, if possible. Consequently, we do not want anyone on these jobs who is not right. The hundreds of applications going in should be taken around to the designated leaders in each county and sorted."

"Then the local leaders can't blame the personnel office if the right boys are not on. This, to my mind, is paramount if this organization is to accomplish what it has to do in the next year."

They had a set-up in the State, a system whereby some politician or group of politicians would pass upon those to be placed by the W. P. A. I submitted a list of these men to the United States Senate and placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a list of those employed and those who recommended the ones holding the positions. Anyone who knows politics in West Virginia can recognize the names of the sponsors and can realize the political set-up.

Projects were overloaded with supervisory forces in order that minor politicians could be given places. The original plan was to have the State administrator, F. W. McCullough, be the sponsored candidate for Governor, and my colleague was to have the entire benefit of the organization for renomination and reelection to the United States Senate. That has been the purpose and aim of the W. P. A. in West Virginia since Mr. McCullough was put in charge. Any defection from the plan by one employed was punished by demotion or dismissal. May I again cite an instance of how far the political set-up was made? The administrative assistant sent the following letter:

"I hand you herewith a list of doctors in Ohio County. Kindly separate the Democrats from the Republicans and list them in order of priority so we may notify our safety foremen and compensation men as to who is eligible to participate in case of injury."

After the lists were compiled they were forwarded back to the safety men with a notation:

"List of county doctors. Instructions. Democratic doctors are listed on the left-hand side and Republicans on the right."

It is getting to be a very serious condition when politics invade the treatment of those so unfortunate as to be injured while trying to earn enough money to buy food and clothing for themselves and families.

I requested an investigation by Harry Hopkins, Federal Administrator, and, after a very thorough whitewashing, he reported that the administration of the W. P. A. in West Virginia was lily white and pure. Such a report was a fraud, sham, and an insult to the intelligence of anyone who knows the conditions.

Harry Hopkins' investigators never attempted to find out the true situation in West Virginia. He brought in this report in order to avoid the responsibility for the failure to correct conditions that had been called to his attention many months before. I stated to the press that to send Harry Hopkins' own force to investigate the W. P. A. in West Virginia was like sending "Baby Face" Nelson to investigate Dillinger. If conditions in West Virginia meet the approval of "Cocky Harry", I feel very sorry for the other 47 States that are not so pure and have not been given a clean bill of health that the great spender has given my State.

Many were taken from private employment to be given larger salaries by the W. P. A. Instances of this have shown that some were increased as much as three times. This has been told to the Senate. In charge of the W. P. A. is a man who has been on the public pay roll, with the exception of a few years, for 22 years. A man who has never been elected to a public office and who was so little thought of in 1932 he polled but 10 percent of the total votes cast.

On a personnel list of 155 people, which was sent to me by the Administrator himself, there were but 4 distress cases on the whole list.

High Government officials, including the United States attorneys, a member of the National Bituminous Coal Board, and the collector of internal revenue for our State, are all cogs in the W. P. A. political machine. Immediately upon the beginning of the investigation a strong censorship was placed upon every bit of information. Employees were intimidated and threatened with loss of their jobs, their very means of livelihood, if they told anything that would endanger the smooth functioning of the political set-up. Since I made my charges on the floor of the Senate, many of my friends have lost their jobs. Many of those who did lose their jobs were not appointed by me, but because they expressed their feeling of friendship they had to be punished. It has been a reign of terror to silence any opposition, but the people of West Virginia will express themselves very clearly when they get the opportunity. Workers, employees, and members of families of the workers and the employees have been threatened with the loss of their jobs and reprisals if they do not go along. Certainly there is no place in America for such actions.

If these persons had been inefficient, it was the duty of the Administrator to see that they were released long ago; and if they were not inefficient, they certainly should not have been dismissed just because of my attack on the administration of the W. P. A.

The cost of this political set-up is borne by the taxpayers. How is the W. P. A. organized? At the top of the whole set-up is the National W. P. A., including between 250 and 300 employees who are paid to give out press statements saying how great Harry Hopkins is. There is a State W. P. A., next a district W. P. A., and then an area W. P. A., county W. P. A. officials, then project officers, before poor John Jones or Bill Smith, down at the bottom, gets any consideration. Projects have been started and shut down for lack of funds and without any definite knowledge as to the time or means of completion, which in turn will be reflected in the cost to the taxpayers of the different communities where the projects are undertaken. It was my thought that the Relief Act was to take care of those who needed assistance, and not as a means of reward for past political favors or in anticipation of future political advancement. Why should we spend all this money on high-priced officials and their expensive ways of doing business, when we have thousands of families who are eligible for W. P. A. employment but who have not been put to work because of lack of funds in the W. P. A. I wish I had the time tonight to explain to you part of the tremendous cost of the set-up in our State, but I cannot do it in the short time afforded me on the air.

I am gathering information on the W. P. A. throughout the United States, and I will be very thankful if any of the listeners will call to my attention the conditions affecting the W. P. A. in their locality. Mistakes are to be expected, but when found out they should be corrected, not blindly upheld, as has been the attitude of Harry Hopkins. The people want food, not Harry Hopkins' wisecracks.

On one project for which $90,000 was allocated, I found 64 bosses. So it is with many projects in West Virginia, overloaded with personnel in order that some could be rewarded. Many criticize the W. P. A. for partisan reasons. This cannot be charged against me, because I have been an ardent supporter of President Roosevelt. I feel that it is our duty as Democrats to clear up a miserable mess. To allow it to continue is to accept it. It is our responsibility and we could not nor should not try to dodge the acceptance of that responsibility. I attack it as one who has fought the Liberty League, the Tories, and the privileged class. If nothing is wrong with the W. P. A., why do those defending Hopkins fear an investigation? I ask for it as a friend of the administration. I ask for an investigation as one who believes that the money was appropriated to feed and clothe those unfortunate ones and not as a political vehicle for anyone to ride into office. We do not need any county bosses, State bosses, nor national bosses. The best politics the W. P. A. can play is to do a good job. I am not against relief, although I should like to see a definite, permanent policy for handling it. What I want is the distribution of the relief to be such that the unfortunate who must ask for relief will receive the money appropriated rather than the brass hats and the swivel-chair occupants drawing the money now. The W. P. A. in West Virginia smells to high heaven, and it is my desire to work to clean up the rottenness that causes the political odor.

There is only one way to identify the W. P. A. in West Virginia, and that is to say it is a horrible mess. With thousands begging for an opportunity to work, the big boys at the top sit back and take away money that should go to those at the bottom.

I charge the W. P. A. in West Virginia with being full of politics, with being extravagant and wasteful, and with a thorough censorship and spy system to prevent any complaints.

The only criticism that has been leveled against this attack of mine, except that from the ones on the draw, is that I should not criticize the administration of the act by members of my own party. I feel that it is the duty of all persons, irrespective of politics, to do everything in their power to make the relief act a workable, honest attempt to feed those who are in need.

FARM AND HOME HOUR OF NATIONAL BROADCASTING CO.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an analysis of the Farm and Home Hour of the National Broadcasting Co. for the year 1935.

There being no objection, the analysis was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM IN RE AN ANALYSIS OF THE FARM AND HOME HOUR OF THE NATIONAL BROADCASTING CO. FOR THE YEAR 1935

The following analysis of the use of the Farm and Home Hour of the National Broadcasting Co. shows that the bulk of its time was allowed for propaganda purposes to representatives of the Government, mostly the A. A. A. and the Department of Agriculture, and to their principal mouthpiece, the American Farm Bureau Federation. Making allowances for possible errors in published programs in press and for possible changes in programs here and there, the analysis still shows an amazing favoritism to Government officials seeking by means of radio propaganda to carry out the policy of regimentation.

An analysis of the N. B. C. Farm Hour broadcasts for the year 1935 shows a total of 312 addresses. Of this total, representatives of the Government, mostly of the A. A. A. and Department of Agriculture, were given 151 places on the program.

The Farm Bureau received 21 opportunities to pour their propaganda into the farm districts. The Farmers Union had speakers on the network 10 times; the Farmers National Holiday Association 3 times; the Grange twice; and the Farmers' Independence Council once. Business and trade groups were given 10 places on the program in the year, while miscellaneous speakers, including numerous politicians favorable to the New Deal, had a total of 104 places on the program.

OLD AND NEW NAVAL TREATIES COMPARED

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a tabulation prepared by and printed in the Christian Science Monitor, giving illustrations of the main points in the new London Naval Treaty and the former treaties in which Japan and Italy shared with Great Britain, the United States, and France. It is printed in parallel columns and is very instructive and useful.

There being no objection, the tabulation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Christian Science Monitor of Mar. 25, 1936]

OLD AND NEW NAVAL TREATIES COMPARED

The following tabulation gives an illustration of the main points in the new London Naval Treaty and the former treaties in which Japan and Italy shared with Great Britain, the United States, and France:

QUANTITATIVE LIMITATION

Old treaties	New treaty
5-5-3-1.75-1.75 ratio for five great naval powers.	No limit on the number of ships any nation may build. However, behind treaty is tacit understanding of certain restrictions. For example, United States accepted holiday in big cruisers on condition England does not expand cruiser fleet beyond 70. Also it is understood United States and England intend to maintain 5-5-3 ratio in battleships with Japan by building, if necessary.
Battleships fixed at 15 for United States and Great Britain and 9 for Japan and holiday placed on new construction until Dec. 31, 1936.
Cruiser tonnage limited:
United States, 323,500 tons.
Great Britain, 339,000 tons.
Japan, 208,850 tons.
This tonnage so divided as to give United States 18 large cruisers, England 15, and Japan 12. England permitted more small cruisers as compensation.
Destroyers limited to:
United States, 150,000 tons.
Great Britain, 150,000 tons.
Japan, 105,000 tons.
Submarines limited to:
United States, 52,700 tons.
Great Britain, 52,700 tons.
Japan, 52,700 tons.
Aircraft carriers limited to:
United States, 135,000 tons.
Great Britain, 135,000 tons.
Japan, 81,000 tons.
France, 60,000 tons.
Italy, 60,000 tons.

ADVANCE NOTICE AND EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION

Requirements for exchange of limited information 1 month after keel laid and again 1 month after completion of any ship.

Advance notification for entire building program required each year providing opportunity for bargaining at frequent intervals. Exchange full information at least 4 months before any keel is laid during construction and again after completion. Much more extensive and important than similar feature of old treaty.

QUALITATIVE LIMITATION

Old treaties	New treaty
Capital ships—35,000 tons and 16-inch guns.	Capital ships, two categories: "A" category: Top limit, 35,000 tons; bottom limit, 17,500. Guns, top limit, 14 inches, with escape clause to 16's if Japan fails to agree to 14's. Bottom limit, 10-inch.
"A" class cruisers—10,000 tons and 8-inch guns.	"B" category: Top limit, 8,000 tons, with guns to be not less than 10 inches.
"B" class cruisers—10,000 tons and 6-inch guns.	"Light surface vessels": Replaces "A" and "B" class cruisers and destroyer categories of old treaty.
Destroyers—1,850 tons and 5.1-inch guns.	"A" class: Anything carrying 8-inch guns up to 10,000 tons.
Submarines—2,000 tons and 5.1-inch guns, but three larger permitted each signatory.	"B" class: Ships from 3,000 to 8,000 tons, carrying not over 6.1-inch guns.
Aircraft carriers—27,000 tons.	"C" class: Ships under 3,000 tons, carrying not over 5.1-inch guns.
	Submarines: Limited to 2,000 tons.
	Aircraft carriers: Limited to 23,000 tons and 6.1-inch guns.
	Six-year building "holiday" in all cruiser-type ships carrying more than 6.1-inch guns or over 8,000 tons in size.
	"Nonconstruction zone" between bottom limit of battle-ships of 17,500 tons and top limit of cruisers of 10,000 tons. Due to "holiday" this means zone from 8,000 tons to 17,500 tons.

ESCAPE CLAUSES

Permitted construction above limits provided, but such clauses never employed.

Permits violation of limitations in event unforeseen developments, war, and excessive construction by other powers.

GENERAL FEATURES

Signed in Washington in 1921 and renewed and revised in London in 1931. Expires Dec. 31, 1936. Adhered to by United States, Great Britain, Japan, France, and Italy, except that only first three named subscribed to all features. France and Italy never accepted the limitations on cruisers, destroyers, and submarines.

Signed in London March 25, 1936. Takes effect Jan. 1, 1937. Expires Dec. 31, 1942. Signed by United States, Great Britain, and France. Open to adherence by Italy, Japan, and Russia. Italy expected to sign before end of year.

RAILROAD PASSENGER FARES

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Washington Daily News of Monday, March 30, 1936, commenting upon a statement by Daniel Willard, head of the B. & O. Railroad, in which he announces that he will not oppose but will put into effect the 2-cent fare on all the B. & O. system. This editorial commends him, and I think properly so.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Washington Daily News of Mar. 30, 1936]

TWO CENTS A MILE

Daniel Willard, head of the B. & O., announces that his road intends to establish the 2-cent fare in June regardless of what the other eastern railroads, who are protesting, do about it.

Interesting in this connection was a talk we had the other day with a railroad man from the West, where the lower rates have been in effect for some time and where real results have been shown. In substance, this is what he said:

"Investigations in our territory have shown that of all passenger business lost to the motors, on highway, and in the air, 90 percent has gone to the private automobile, only 7 percent to the bus, and 3 percent to the airplane. Hence our job has been to fix a rate that will successfully compete with our chief opponent—the private car. We think 2 cents a mile does it.

"To compete, we have to consider the actual out-of-pocket cost to the private car owner as the base. That means just gas and oil. The psychology of the private car owner won't figure anything beyond that. The fact that depreciation is working, that repairs must be made, that new tires must be bought, and that the car sometime will have to be junked just doesn't enter into the picture. The owner looks at it this way: 'I own the car and might as well use it unless I can go cheaper by train.' And cheaper means less than cost of gas and oil. Like it or not, we have to accept that as our competitive problem."

From the point of view of railroad operation it costs very little more to run a full passenger car than an empty. "The difference is infinitesimal", said this railroad man. "It can't even be figured in our accounting."

Trains have to run anyway. The crews have to be on them. The fixed-capital investment is there, and all that. Schedules are required under the Interstate Commerce Commission rules. So why not a rate that will fill the empties? That's the reasoning that prompted the western roads to their reductions, and it's what is prompting Willard to break away from his eastern associates who, for some cause or another, don't see the light.

Anyway, as it appears to us, it's the old story of Marcus Loew all over again—of his practically empty theater at $2 a head, and of the bright idea which made Loew millions—"more people have got a dime than have got a dollar."

He filled his theaters by acting on that, and the railroads may fill their trains by applying the same general economic philosophy.

STOCKYARDS AND MEAT PACKING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1424) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] to recommit the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CONNALLY obtained the floor.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President—

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Kansas if he desires to speak. I should like, however, to ask him some questions about his bill.

Mr. CAPPER. I simply wish to say that I hope the motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry will not be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did not know whether or not there was to be any further discussion of the motion. So he looked at both the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Texas and discovered that each one was looking at the other. So they may settle the matter, and let the debate proceed.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas is very pleased to look at the Senator from Kansas; if that were all I had to contemplate, I would have no difficulty; but it is his bill that I am objecting to, and not the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. President, I think this bill ought to be recommitted, and I will tell the Senate why. There is another bill pending before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, introduced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY], which is a much more comprehensive measure, and which really reaches the desired objective much more efficiently than does the bill of the Senator from Kansas.

The chief vice of the bill lies in the fact that it is designed, and its intention is, to narrow and limit the market for livestock. It seems to me there ought to be the widest possible freedom in the market for agricultural products; but the bill seeks to force all livestock, cattle, hogs, and similar products through a few central markets in order to give advantage to those particular markets and to the commission houses and other agencies that are interested in making money off of the sales, rather than giving to the farmer and stock raiser a decent price for his cattle and hogs.

My purpose in moving that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is that it may be sent back to the committee for reconsideration, and at the same time that the committee may give consideration to the Murphy bill, which has the approval of the Department of Agriculture and is not objectionable to the stock-raising interests of the country.

The National Cattle Raisers Association is opposed to the Capper bill, and the great Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association is likewise opposed to it. I have in my files a large sheaf of resolutions adopted by various livestock organizations throughout the country opposing the so-called Capper bill. It ought not to be considered now. In the committee it did not have sufficient consideration. I hope the Senate will send the bill back to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, so it may be properly considered, together with the Murphy bill, which relates to the same subject.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Did the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, of which I am not a member and therefore I do not know, have the Murphy bill before it when it voted to report the Capper bill?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Murphy bill was before the committee in the sense that it had been referred to the committee, but my information is that the Murphy bill was never taken up and never really considered by the committee. I am not a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, but that is my information.

Mr. BARKLEY. Are we to presume that with the subject before the committee in two different bills the committee totally ignored one of them and did not give any consideration to it as compared to the one which they finally reported?

Mr. CONNALLY. I cannot say what happened in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The Capper bill having been reported, and the Murphy bill not having been reported, it would seem to me that raises the presumption that the committee prefers the Capper bill and not the Murphy bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Frankly, I do not like the method of killing bills by recommitment. I do not know whether I shall vote for the bill upon its final passage, but it is my preference to have bills considered on their merits. I am wondering whether to recommit the bill to the committee which had both bills before it when it acted on the pending one might result in any further consideration of the Murphy bill, or whether it would not be better to try to substitute the Murphy bill on the floor of the Senate, if the Murphy bill is the better bill, and not recommit the Capper bill to the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. Has the Department of Agriculture considered the bill and rendered any report upon it?

Mr. CONNALLY. My understanding is that the Department of Agriculture has not considered the Capper bill; at least it does not favor it, but does favor the Murphy bill, which is a wholly different measure.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. MURPHY. With reference to the so-called Murphy bill, it differs radically from the bill introduced by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER]. The Murphy bill does not attempt to go into the subject of direct marketing. The bill I introduced in the last session of Congress was presented at the request of the Department of Agriculture to correct some defects in the Packers and Stockyards Act. The bill introduced by the Senator from Kansas seeks to reform the entire system of marketing livestock and proposes the posting of markets which are not now posted under the Stockyards Act. It would effect the posting of some 600 such stockyards which are not now posted.

My bill does not deal with the subject of direct marketing. That is the basic principle of the Capper bill. If the Capper bill shall be considered, I have prepared amendments embodying my bill which I shall offer to the Capper bill, but I should not like to occupy the position of seeking to block consideration of the Capper bill in favor of my bill, and I shall vote against a motion to refer back to committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. My inquiry is directed to the question of whether or not in the usual fashion the Capper bill was submitted to the Department of Agriculture and a report rendered upon it by that Department?

Mr. MURPHY. Answer to that question could better be made by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. CAPPER. I hold in my hand a report from the Secretary of Agriculture on the bill which I am now seeking to have considered by the Senate. The report covers six pages, and a part of it is favorable to the pending bill. The Department raises objections to two or three features, especially those having to do with the feeding of livestock, but the general trend of the report is favorable to the essential features of the pending proposed legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON. We may take it that the Department has rendered a report approving the bill and requesting its passage?

Mr. CAPPER. No; I do not claim it does that. I have the report here. It was filed a year ago and was thoroughly considered by the committee.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. CAREY. Is it not a fact that the Secretary of Agriculture submitted the bill of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY] to the committee, which bill was not considered, and the Department of Agriculture afterward made an adverse report on the bill of the Senator from Kansas? As I read the report, I considered it an adverse report.

Mr. CAPPER. It is not an adverse report at all. I know nothing about where the bill of the Senator from Iowa originated, but it has been before the committee for more than a year, and apparently the committee has not thought it necessary to give it consideration. It does not attempt to solve the direct buying problem. It covers an entirely different phase of livestock marketing.

The report of the committee, so far as the pending bill is concerned, is overwhelmingly in favor of my bill. Furthermore, every agricultural and livestock organization in the country with one or two exceptions has gone on record for the bill before the Senate. For the purpose of consideration here today I now call the attention of the Senate to the fact that I placed in the RECORD last Monday telegrams, petitions, and memorials from livestock and agricultural organizations all over the country appealing to the Congress to enact this measure. They fill more than four pages of the RECORD and represent more than a million producers who would be directly affected by the bill now before us.

I also have telegrams which came to me within the last 24 hours. One is from Edward E. Kennedy, secretary of the National Farmers Union, and reads as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 29, 1936.

HON. ARTHUR CAPPER,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Capper bill S. 1424, to amend Packer Stockyards Act, 1921, logical sequence original act. Central and other interstate public markets should be regulated alike. Our livestock producers' cooperative shipping associations and terminal market cooperatives respectfully petition for your support enactment this bill.

EDWARD E. KENNEDY,

Secretary, National Farmers Union.

Then I have an appeal from the American Farm Bureau Federation, which reads as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 28, 1936.

The motion to recommit the measure by Senator CAPPER, S. 1424, to amend the Packer and Stockyards Act so as to get more information about the marketing of livestock, should not prevail.

The American Farm Bureau Federation has supported the general type of legislation now contained in the Capper bill; representatives of the Farm Bureau have testified in recent years both before Senate and House Committees on this measure. This legislation is not a recent development but has been in the process of formulation on Capitol hill and among farm organizations for at least 7 years, during which time it has been considered in hearings and otherwise, both pro and con, elaborately. The Government and the livestock industry needs to have more information in regard to livestock marketing methods.

This pending bill does not specifically contain a solution of livestock marketing; it is mostly a measure to get information upon which future legislation may be formulated more intelligently.

Consequently it is hoped that the motion to recommit will be defeated and that the measure will be decided by a definite vote in the Senate strictly on its merits.

Very respectfully,

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
CHESTER H. GRAY,
Washington Representative.

This morning I received a telegram from Furneaux Bros., of Dallas, Tex., leading cattle feeders of that State, reading as follows:

DALLAS, TEX., March 30, 1936.

Senator CAPPER,

Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

We heartily endorse your bill, especially that part prohibiting the packers from the feeding and fattening business. Have wired Senator CONNALLY urging him to support your bill and giving him our reasons for endorsement.

FURNEAUX BROS.

I have put in the RECORD the endorsement of every farm organization in the country, including the National Grange, through its grand master, Mr. Taber, and its Washington representative, Mr. Brenckman.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator a question in my own time, is it not true that the Bureau of Economics of the Department of Agriculture devoted 2 years to a study of so-called direct marketing, at which this bill is aimed; and did not the Bureau report that direct marketing is not to the detriment of the cattle raiser, but is to his advantage?

Mr. CAPPER. I think there were some features of the report of the Bureau of Economics which were not favorable; but the report has been thoroughly discredited since it was made, and has no support or approval so far as the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is concerned.

Mr. CONNALLY. By whom was it discredited?

Mr. CAPPER. It was discredited by the livestock interests generally and by all the national farm organizations.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the National Livestock Association favor the Senator's bill?

Mr. CAPPER. It has at times favored certain features of it. It is not for the bill as a whole.

Mr. CONNALLY. No.

Mr. CAPPER. I have here, and I put into the RECORD last Monday, a telegram from the Kansas State Livestock Association, a part of the American National Livestock Association, appealing to the Senate to pass the bill; and that, I think, represents the sentiments of the great majority of the livestock producers of the country.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator from Kansas if it is not true that there are 600 points in the United States where there is now what is called a free market, a direct market, where anybody can go to buy and sell in the utmost freedom and real competition, and that under the Senator's bill they will have to have commission men and all the charges and regulations of the central stockyards at Chicago and Kansas City. Is not that true?

Mr. CAPPER. No; that is not correct. All the pending bill does is to place the private packer stockyards under the same supervision and control as are the public stockyards and the markets in which the farmers' cooperatives are participating. There is an overwhelming appeal from the producers of the country that there should be no discrimination as between farmer cooperatives and other producers marketing through public stockyards and the private stockyards. The private yards of the packers are rapidly securing control of the supply of these important markets and fixing the price paid the farmer.

In Kansas City, for instance, which is a very, very important livestock market, as soon as we passed the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921, the packers immediately started to set up their own private stockyards, in view of the fact that the Congress had adopted the principle of open public competitive markets. At that time and now there were and are about 2,000,000 head of hogs marketed annually through Kansas City. Three-fourths of that production has been gathered in by the private packer stockyards through the agents they send all over the country, while something like one-fourth is marketed in the public stockyards.

Mr. CONNALLY. What difference does it make whether livestock is marketed in the public stockyards or in a little stockyard out at El Paso, or Tucson, or Deming? If the stockraiser gets a good price for his stock, why does the Senator want to force it through Kansas City or Chicago?

Mr. CAPPER. The system devised by the packers puts the packers in control of the markets. It puts them not only in control of their own private stockyards, but in control of the public stockyards. Nobody knows what is going on or how they fix their prices. All the farmers ask now is that they have the same protection in marketing the livestock through the packer stockyards as they have in the public stockyards. Why should there be any objection to the right to inspect the books and records of the packer private stockyards?

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator another question. Today are not the 600 small stockyards or small selling points which the Senator wishes to put under the control of the Department of Agriculture, and thus add to the cost all the commission charges and items of that kind incident to the operation of the big stockyards in Chicago and Kansas City, absolutely free, and cannot the packers or anybody else go to those markets and buy and sell, and does not the man who pays the highest price get the cattle?

Mr. CAPPER. This measure applies—

Mr. CONNALLY. Is not that true?

Mr. CAPPER. No; that is not true.

Mr. CONNALLY. Well, what is true? What is the matter with those points?

Mr. CAPPER. This measure applies only to markets handling at least 35,000 head of livestock annually; and it applies only to markets engaged in interstate commerce. It does not in any way affect the greater number of the 600 small markets of which the Senator speaks. It simply asks that the packers accept the same governmental supervision that is given to public stockyards so that the farmer can know that his market is not being manipulated by the buyer.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator that we are not opposed to controlling the big packers in Chicago, Kansas City, East St. Louis, and Omaha. They are already being controlled. This bill, however, seeks in the case of every little shipping point, every junction of a railroad where 35,000 cattle are handled annually, to put them under all the regulations and requirements of the stockyards in Kansas City and Chicago and other points, with all the commission and all the stockyard charges and all the other things that will hamper freedom of sale, hamper competition, and make it harder for the cattle raiser and the farmer to sell their livestock than under the present system.

Mr. CAPPER. The bill does not in any way interfere with the legitimate marketing of livestock.

Mr. CONNALLY. What does it do?

Mr. CAPPER. It simply asks the packers to let the Government have some supervision over their markets, the same as it now has over the public markets, so that the interests of the farmer will be protected.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it not true that at most of these 600 points there is no factory at all, but simply a market where the packers send their agents and where other purchasers send their agents to buy the farmers' cattle?

Mr. CAPPER. Not more than 40 or 50 markets would be brought under this measure if it should become a law.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President—

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CAREY. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas if he does not know that under section 202 of the Packers and Stockyards Act the Secretary of Agriculture now can control the buying of livestock by packers, and that the same report which has been referred to, made by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, says that the Secretary can control their dealing in livestock?

Mr. CAPPER. The Secretary has now no power whatever to take control over the private stockyards. That leaves the producer at the mercy of the packer.

Mr. CAREY. The Secretary cannot control the stockyards, but he can control the buying there and see that the packers do not resort to any unfair practices.

I should like to read to the Senator from the report on the direct marketing of hogs. It says:

The jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to packers extends to the purchase of livestock for slaughter, whether at public markets or elsewhere, and to the sale and distribution of the products in interstate commerce.

Mr. CAPPER. I do not know what the Bureau of Agricultural Economics reported there; but the Secretary has not had regular control or supervision or regulation of the private stockyards and packers.

Mr. CAREY. If the Senator will read section 202 of the Packers and Stockyards Act, I think he will agree that the Secretary has.

Mr. CAPPER. A number of Attorneys General have given decisions that the Secretary of Agriculture had no control over the private stockyards of the packers.

Mr. CAREY. I do not claim that he has control over the stockyards; but he may see that the packers do not resort to any unfair practices.

Mr. CAPPER. All the bill attempts to do is to put such stockyards and packers under the supervision and regulation of the Department of Agriculture, the same as the public stockyards. As it is now, they have things their own way. The farmer cooperatives are all doing business through the public stockyards and are subject to supervision and regulation.

Now they are asking, and I think properly, why the packers should have special privileges under the laws of Congress and be relieved from any kind of supervision or regulation, while the farmers' cooperatives, marketing through public stockyards, are subject to supervision and regulation.

Mr. CAREY. Is it not a fact that the farmer saves money by shipping to these concentration points? He does not have commissions to pay. He does not have yardage to pay.

Mr. CAPPER. I do not think it is a fact. It may be a fact in a few instances, but, generally speaking, I do not believe the private stockyards save the producer any money. I have presented here appeals from every farmers' cooperative in the country, and from all the national farm organizations—the Farmers Union, the Farm Bureau, the Grange, the United States Livestock Association. All of them now are and have been for several years asking Congress to pass legislation which would put them on an equal basis with the private packer stockyards.

Mr. CAREY. I shall have something to say about the matter later.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President—

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know that I understand all about the bill, but probably that is my fault. I understand that it is contended that the large packers go out through the country and establish their own stockyards, buy up the stock from the farmers individually, by visiting the farm and agreeing on a price, bring the stock into their stockyards, and, in competition with the other stockyards, which are regulated, feed the stock with the purpose of later shipping it to their packing house. Is that true?

Mr. CAPPER. They are going out and buying livestock and putting it in their private yards.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would this bill prevent that?

Mr. CAPPER. There is nothing to prevent the farmer or the stockman selling his livestock to the packers. All they ask is that if the packing houses are doing a business of at least 35,000 head annually and are engaged in interstate commerce, the Federal Government be permitted to see their books and inspect the records to protect the producers against unfair practices.

Mr. BARKLEY. What is the present standard by which it is decided whether a stockyard shall be regulated or not? My recollection is that it depends on the square feet in the stockyard, rather than on the number of head of stock.

Mr. CAPPER. This bill provides 20,000 square feet of an enclosure.

Mr. BARKLEY. The bill also fixes the number per annum at 35,000.

Mr. CAPPER. Thirty-five thousand head per annum. There are many small concerns which are doing a local business, which would not come under the bill. It is the large concerns which would be affected by the measure, concerns owned principally by the big packers. I cited one located in Kansas City, which is an outstanding example, which is handling three-fourths of the hogs coming into the Kansas City market from all that territory, and without any supervision or control or regulation by the Federal Government.

Mr. BARKLEY. Why is it that they are not supervised or regulated? Is it simply because they are a private market, and buy for themselves, and there is no auction, there is no question of competition?

Mr. CAPPER. The Secretary of Agriculture holds that they are not subject to the provisions of the Packers and Stockyards Act, and we are trying to amend the law so that they will be.

Mr. BARKLEY. What is the attitude of the Secretary of Agriculture on this bill?

Mr. CAPPER. I think he is favorable to it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Has he communicated with the committee, or with anybody here, to indicate his attitude?

Mr. CAPPER. I have talked with him, and he has indicated to me that he is favorable to it. His report is not an unfavorable report. It was filed something like a year ago. There are some provisions of the bill which he is inclined to criticize, but, taking it all in all, I regard it as a favorable report.

Mr. ROBINSON and Mr. SHIPSTEAD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield first to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I was just about to ask, if it is to be determined what the attitude of the Secretary of Agriculture is, why we should not have read what he says about it?

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] just handed me a report from the Department of Agriculture in the form of a letter from the Secretary. I have never seen it, and inasmuch as the Senator from Wyoming is familiar with the subject matter, I suggest that he read it to the Senate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Arkansas, I can say that I saw in the hands of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY] just a few moments ago a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture recommending a totally different bill.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, let me remind the Senator from Wyoming that the Senator from Iowa has said that the other bill does not attempt to cover the provisions of the pending bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is the difficulty with the Senator's bill; it covers too much territory.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, reclaiming the floor for a moment only, I should like to know on what authority the Senator from Kansas bases his statement that the Secretary is in favor of the pending bill. This bill has never been reported on by the Department of Agriculture. There is nothing in the record as to the attitude of the Secretary of Agriculture; and, with all due respect to the Senator from Kansas, I challenge his statement.

While I am on the floor, let me cite what the Secretary of Agriculture does say about the bill. I hold in my hand a report from the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the Department of Agriculture. I understand that Bureau spent a couple of years getting the data and compiling this report. It is entitled "The direct marketing of hogs."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. What is the date of the report?

Mr. CONNALLY. It is dated in March 1935.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. CONNALLY. I should like to read from the report; then I will yield briefly.

Mr. President, the pending bill is aimed at what is called "direct marketing." The bill seeks to destroy direct marketing, which is that kind of marketing carried on at small points, not at Chicago and Kansas City, where the packers are regulated, but out at the small points throughout the country, where anybody can go and purchase, whether he is a packer, or whether he is just a cowman, or whether he is a feeder in Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, or the Dakotas, and wants to buy cattle in New Mexico or Arizona and feed them. The direct market is where anybody can go and buy cattle or hogs. This bill seeks to destroy that; it seeks to put that activity under the same system that is observed in the great livestock centers such as Chicago and Kansas City.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me refer to what the Bureau says about it. The Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the Department of Agriculture says:

Direct marketing has not lowered the general level of hog prices, nor has it operated to reduce returns to producers.

If direct marketing has not lowered the general prices of livestock, if it has benefited the returns to producers, why is there a desire to destroy it, in order to enrich some commission men, some chiselers in the centers who want to force the farmers' cattle and hogs to the central markets so that they can charge them for stockyard services, so that they can charge them commissions, so that they can get a "rake-off"?

Mr. President, is the farmer or the stock raiser more independent when he has his cattle on his own ranch or on his own farm, and does not have to sell them, or when he ships them to some central market, where everyone knows they are going to be sold at some price, and buyers are there trying to get them as cheaply as possible? If we permit the farmer to have a free market near his own ranch, near his own farm, if the buyers do not offer him a decent price, he can say, "I will not sell; I will keep the cattle at home." But when he is forced to take his stock half way across the country to some central market, he is bound to sell them, because he cannot bear the expense of shipping them back home.

I am in favor of leaving a free market for the stock raiser. Let the farmer and the stock raiser have at least one public market place, where anybody can go and purchase at the highest price the products of the farm and the ranch. Why force them into a central market in order to help some commission man? I make the charge here and now that this bill is sponsored by the livestock commission men of the United States.

Now I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, as I understand the bill, it does not interfere with any marketing at all. It provides, however, if I understand it correctly, that in a market where more than 35,000 head are marketed the operations shall be regulated, as they now are, in the public markets. I do not understand that the bill interferes with any open, free market which handles less than 35,000 head. It seems to me that there is not anything in the bill which would prohibit a packer from buying direct, even in a public market.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, if the Senator's understanding is correct, what good would the bill do; what would be the object of the measure?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I assume that there is supposed to be virtue in Government inspection and Government regulation of public markets where hogs and cattle are sold. Congress has already recognized that in connection with the large public markets. It is charged that packers evade that regulation by going out into the country and opening smaller markets of their own. If Congress was right in the first place, in regulating public markets, I do not see what objection there can be to extending that operation to localities or markets which handle a sufficient quantity of livestock to make them important markets. Those which handle less than 35,000 head could continue, as I understand, as they are proceeding now; there would be no interference with them. I find nothing in the bill which would indicate that a farmer would be compelled to sell through commission men.

Mr. CONNALLY. Why not extend it on down to the individual farmer? If it is such a great benefit, why stop at 35,000 head? Why not make the man who is selling 5,000 head come in under the regulation?

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. CAREY. I should like to state for the benefit of the Senator from Minnesota that this bill would require, where anyone bought cattle, hogs, or sheep, in any yard where 35,000 were sold, that he should be licensed. In other words, if a cattleman went there to buy cattle, under this measure, he would have to obtain a license before he could buy cattle there and sell to others.

Mr. CAPPER. I should like to have the Senator point out the provision in the bill which would impose such a requirement.

Mr. CAREY. I can show the Senator a provision which would require that any man who went to a market or stockyard to buy stock should be licensed.

Mr. CAPPER. He would have to be doing a business of 35,000 head annually.

Mr. CAREY. No; he would have to deal in a yard where 35,000 head were handled.

Mr. CAPPER. This bill does not attempt to control or regulate any concern which is not doing a business of at least 35,000 head annually, and it must be engaged in interstate commerce before it could be in anyway interfered with.

Mr. CAREY. As I read the bill, it defines a yard as one handling 35,000 head annually.

Mr. CAPPER. It attempts to regulate stockyards operated by the packers and now exempt from supervision and regulation.

Mr. CAREY. That is what the Senator is trying to do, but he is including yards which handle 35,000 head annually, and there are some 600 such yards in this country, and anyone who went to one of those yards, for instance, to buy a string of cattle could be put under the act.

Mr. CAPPER. The Senator is entirely mistaken; it would not have that effect. I should like to have the Senator point out the provision of the bill which would have that effect.

Mr. CAREY. I will find it for the Senator.

Mr. CAPPER. The Senator from Texas made a statement in regard to the commission men.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let the Senator from Kansas understand the Senator from Texas. I said the measure had the support of the commission men. I make no charge that there is any improper influence, but I do say that the bill is being supported by the commission men. Is not that true?

Mr. CAPPER. I do not think it is. The bill was brought to me by the Farmers Union. Its members in Kansas and nearby States are the largest cooperative handlers of livestock. They insist that the packers' private stockyards shall be on the same basis as they are, so far as supervision and regulation is concerned. It is said that 600 small packing houses will be affected by the bill. That is not correct. It would affect probably less than 50.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY], who is a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, says the bill will affect 600 points which are not now regulated, and that when they are regulated, the cattle sellers, the cattle producers, must bear all the expenses of such regulation by the Department of Agriculture, and, in addition, the commission agents will be there, with their trimmings and their chiseling, all of which come off the man who sells the old cow.

Mr. CAPPER. It is the farmer and stockman who is asking for the enactment of this proposed legislation. We had to make the fight here for 3 or 4 years to pass the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921.

Mr. CONNALLY. I voted for that act. I am not opposed to the regulation of the packers, but I am opposed to regulating every fellow who has two little yearlings which he wants to sell, and who must get the consent of the Secretary of Agriculture before he may sell them. That is what I am objecting to.

Mr. CAPPER. At the time the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921 was being considered, all the packers were here opposing it; and they have been here for several years fighting the pending proposed legislation. On the other hand, every farm group and every livestock group, except the American National Livestock Association, is in favor of the proposed legislation; and I will say that a large part of the membership of the American National Live Stock Association is in favor of it.

Mr. CONNALLY. On that point, I desire to reclaim the floor in order to answer the Senator from Kansas.

The Senator says all the farm groups are for the bill. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a memorandum prepared by the American National Livestock Association in opposition to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The memorandum is as follows:

MEMORANDUM ON CAPPER BILL (S. 1424)

Sponsored by principally commission men (both old-line and cooperative) and stockyards companies.

Some farm organizations have been dragged into it through their close relationship to cooperative commission companies.

Opposed by practically all livestock organizations in western part of the United States because it reduced competition in livestock buying and places unwelcome restraints upon marketing.

ADVERSE REPORTS

By Secretary, who has submitted amendments to the Packers and Stockyards Act (S. 3036; Senator MURPHY) which have had no consideration and which are based on 15 years' experience in administration of the act.

By Budget Bureau, because of sharp increase in expense of administration of the act, due to requiring posting and practically every railroad feeding point and concentration point in the United States.

By Bureau of Agricultural Economics. See comprehensive report on Direct Marketing, issued in March 1935, with special reference to chapter 7, Factors Affecting Hog Prices, page 115, and chapter 8, Competition for Hogs, page 139. This report completely refutes claim of commission men that direct marketing adversely affects hog prices.

Purpose of bill: To hamper direct marketing of livestock, particularly hogs, thus tending to shift business back to the central markets.

Effect of bill: To seriously hamper normal system of marketing which has for years been employed in entire western and southwestern country, where markets are few, small, and separated by long distances.

PRINCIPAL OBJECTIONABLE ITEMS IN BILL

New definition of stockyards: Section 302, page 5, present definition of stockyards is contained in item 1 of this section. Alternative suggestion, item 2, would require posting of any feeding point through which 35,000 head of livestock moved in commerce because all such movements are for the purpose of eventual sale; would tremendously increase cost of administering act.

Grading (sec. 304A): Page 7 requires that the Secretary shall prescribe grades of livestock in commerce. There is no popular demand and no necessity for such grading; it would be unwieldy and cause expensive shrinks and delays.

Purchases by packers for purpose other than immediate slaughter: The limitation proposed in paragraph (1), on page 2, would limit competition and prevent packers from buying large, unsorted strings of cattle, or in carloads that included one or more animals unsuitable for slaughter.

This item would also prevent packers from buying in markets where they do not operate packing houses and contracting with local packers for the slaughter thereof. This is a more or less common practice in many parts of the country.

Feeding of livestock: This same paragraph ((1) on p. 2) would prevent feeding operations by packers—

In western and southwestern country many packers feed large numbers of livestock, thereby providing a good market for surplus feed crops grown in that territory and supplying the market with a better quality of dressed meat than was formerly the case.

Registration of all dealers: There is a possibility that section 303 on page 6 might require the registration of all casual buyers who drop in at railroad feeding points and buy for their own account for feed-lot use. We have consulted officials of the Packers and Stockyards Administration about this point and they are unable to give us a definite answer as to just what would be required under this section.

F. E. MOLLIN,

Secretary, American National Live Stock Association.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 26, 1936.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is an association of livestock producers, not from a small section but from all over the United States.

I have a resolution adopted by the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers' Association which represents the States of Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and all the great southwestern territory. That association of livestock producers is against the bill. I ask unanimous consent to have the resolution printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolution 10, adopted by Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers' Association at Amarillo, Tex., March 12, 1936

MARKETING LEGISLATION

There is now pending in the United States Senate the Capper bill, S. 1424, the purpose of which is to hamper the free marketing of livestock at any point other than central markets. It is essential that the fullest possible competition be preserved, and that every avenue of marketing be left open for the use of producers and shippers.

We are strongly opposed to the Capper bill or any other bill which will restrict our freedom of marketing or in any way reduce competition in the purchase of our livestock.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let us see about the farm organizations. The Senator from Kansas says they are all for the bill.

I have in my hand a list of farm organizations. Among the organizations which have passed resolutions opposed to this measure are the American National Live Stock Association, the Border Stock Raisers' Protective Association, the California Cattlemen's Association, and the California Farm Bureau Federation. The Senator from Kansas says all the farm bureaus are for the bill. The California Farm Bureau Federation is not for it. Is it desired to destroy the stockyards of California in order to build up the stockyards of Kansas City and Chicago?

I will give the names of other organizations opposed to the bill: The Colorado Stock Growers and Feeders' Association are opposed to the bill; the Delta County (Colo.) Live Stock Association; the Iowa Cooperative Live Stock Shippers.

What about Iowa? The Iowa Cooperative Live Stock Shippers are against this bill. The Louisiana Cattlemen's Association; the Montana Stockgrowers' Association; the National Wool Growers' Association; the Nebraska Stockgrowers' Association; the Nevada State Farm Bureau. I should like to call the attention of the President pro tempore to the attitude of the Farm Bureau in Nevada. The New Mexico Cattle Growers' Association is opposed to the bill, as is also the Cattle and Horse Raisers' Association of Oregon. I hope that will be noted by the minority leader [Mr. McNARY]. The Western South Dakota Stock Growers' Association, the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers' Association, the Texas Sheep and Goat Raisers' Association, the Utah Cattle and Horse Growers' Association are all opposed to the bill.

I should like to have the Senator from Kansas note the next organization whose name I come to. The Senator from Kansas says all the farm organizations are for his bill. The Western Regional Conference of American Farm Bureau Federation, which is a conference of the Farm Bureau Federation throughout the Western States, is against this bill and has adopted resolutions opposing it. The Wyoming Stockgrowers' Association and the Wyoming Wool Growers' Association are opposed to it.

Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a list of organizations opposing the proposed legislation, and to have printed in the RECORD resolutions opposing the bill adopted by a great number of the organizations whose names I have mentioned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY FARM ORGANIZATIONS OPPOSING THE CAPPER BILL, S. 1424, OR ANY SIMILAR LEGISLATION WHICH WOULD RESTRICT THE DIRECT SELLING OF LIVESTOCK

Among the organizations which have passed resolutions opposing legislation of the Capper-Hope-Wearin type are the following:

American National Livestock Association.
Border Stock Raisers Protective Association (Texas).
California Cattlemen's Association.
California Farm Bureau Federation.
Statewide Agricultural Committee of the California State Chamber of Commerce.
California State Grange.
California Stock Growers and Feeders Association.
Delta County (Colorado) Livestock Association.
Iowa Cooperative Livestock Shippers.
Louisiana Cattlemen's Association.
Montana Stockgrowers Association.
National Wool Growers Association.
Nebraska Stockgrowers Association.
Nevada State Farm Bureau.
New Mexico Cattle Growers Association.

Cattle and Horse Raisers Association of Oregon.
Western South Dakota Stock Growers Association.
Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association.
Texas Sheep and Goat Raisers Association.
Utah Cattle and Horse Growers Association.
Western Regional Conference of American Farm Bureau Federation.
Western Slope Cattle Growers Association.
Wyoming Stock Growers Association.
Wyoming Wool Growers Association.

[American National Livestock Association annual convention, Phoenix, Ariz., Jan. 7-10, 1936]

STRONGEST OPPOSITION

Whereas the Capper-Hope-Wearin bills, submitted in Congress (one of which, the Capper measure, was reported out of committee), constitute an attempt on the part of livestock commission men, stockyards, and other interests to curtail the freedom of marketing of livestock by producers; and

Whereas it is the constitutional right of livestock producers to market their product in accordance with their best judgment; and

Whereas it is to the best interest of our industry to keep open every available channel of marketing: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we register our strongest opposition to these measures, and to any similar legislation which would curtail the free marketing of livestock.

[California Cattlemen's Association annual convention, San Francisco, Calif., Dec. 8, 1934]

INFRINGEMENT OF RIGHTS

Whereas under cover of suggesting legislation to regulate hog buying at concentrating points in the Corn Belt, stockyard interests are making a tremendous drive to pass the Capper-Hope-Wearin bills, the real purpose of which is to force all livestock to be marketed through the central markets; and

Whereas such a system of marketing is entirely unfitted to the needs of the entire range country, and the coercive and restrictive measures proposed are an infringement upon the rights of each individual stockman to sell his stock at home or at feeding points if he so elects: Therefore we urge our Representatives in Congress to firmly oppose any such legislation.

[California Farm Bureau Federation, annual convention, Santa Cruz, Calif., Nov. 18-21, 1935]

FAVOR NO RESTRICTION

Resolved, That we favor no restriction of the seller in disposing of his livestock by forcing him to sell through public stockyards.

[State-wide agricultural committee of the California State Chamber of Commerce, annual meeting, San Francisco, October 1934]

RESULTS WOULD BE HARMFUL

Whereas it has always been the practice in California to sell much livestock of all classes at home or f. o. b. shipping point; and

Whereas if any change were made in the present system of marketing livestock, the results would be extremely harmful, as the markets in this area are far removed from the source of supply, making it both economical and advantageous to deal with buyers from nearby packing plants and with feeder buyers at home: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we oppose any legislation which would interfere with the present right of our livestock producers to sell their livestock at home or at any point en route to market; and be it further

Resolved, That any legislation designed to control the marketing of hogs in the Corn Belt be so restricted and framed as not to disturb the system of marketing livestock now being widely employed in California.

[California State Grange, annual convention, Sacramento, Calif., November 1935]

PREVENT ITS PASSAGE

Whereas the livestock industry of the State needs every possible outlet for the sale of its sheep, cattle, and hogs; and

Whereas the Capper bill, S. 1424, prevents the marketing of livestock at country points and aims to force the marketing of livestock through public stockyards: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this State Grange is opposed to the Capper bill, S. 1424, and that our State and National Granges be urged to do everything possible to prevent its passage, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to our representatives in Congress and our President.

[Colorado Stock Growers and Feeders Association, annual convention, Steamboat Springs, Colo., June 24-25, 1935]

CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS

Whereas the Capper-Hope-Wearin bills now submitted in Congress constitute an attempt on the part of livestock commission men and public stockyards interests to curtail the freedom of marketing of livestock by producers and deprive them of their constitutional rights to market their product in accordance with their best judgment: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we register our strongest opposition to these bills, or to any similar legislation curtailing the free marketing of livestock.

[Iowa Cooperative Livestock Shippers' annual convention, Des Moines, Iowa, Dec. 11, 1935]

UTTERLY OPPOSED

We are utterly opposed to any legislation which will restrict the freedom of our local cooperative associations from selling the livestock of their members to that market which they deem will net them the most money, whether it be direct to an interior packer, concentration point, or consigned to a central stockyards market.

In the past our association has opposed the passage of the Capper-Hope-Wearin bills in Congress and similar bills that have been introduced in the Iowa Legislature. We wish to again go on record as opposing all such legislation.

[Louisiana Cattlemen's Association, general meeting, New Orleans, May 4, 1935]

WE VOICE OUR OPPOSITION

We voice our opposition to any marketing legislation along the lines of the Capper bills S. 542 and S. 1424 in the Senate and the Hope and Wearin bills, H. R. 2791, 3843, and 6089, in the House, which would seek to restrict the free movement of livestock from the producing areas in whatsoever manner is most advantageous to the producers thereof.

[Montana Stockgrowers' Association, annual convention, Great Falls, Mont., May 23-25, 1935]

STRONGEST OPPOSITION

Whereas the Capper-Hope-Wearin bills, now submitted in Congress, constitute an attempt on the part of livestock commission men and public stockyards interests to curtail the freedom of marketing livestock by producers:

Resolved by the Montana Stock Growers' Association, That we register our strongest opposition to these bills, or to any similar legislation curtailing the free marketing of livestock.

[National Woolgrowers' Association, annual convention, Phoenix, Ariz., Jan. 29-31, 1935]

OPPOSE SUCH BILLS

We believe it essential to the welfare of the wool grower that the widest possible variety and greatest number of market outlets for his lambs be made available, and we oppose such bills as the Capper and Hope bills now before the Congress of the United States, which would seriously handicap all methods of selling in the country by imposing severe restrictions on all markets other than the central public markets.

[Nebraska Stockgrowers Association, annual convention, Alliance, Nebr., June 13-15, 1935]

DO NOT APPROVE

While we, as an association, do not approve of direct buying or the feeding of meat-producing animals by packers, yet we do not approve of the Capper-Hope-Wearin bills or any similar bills that would hamper the sale of livestock on the ranch or at intermediate points enroute to market.

[Nevada State Farm Bureau, annual meeting, Reno, Nev., Jan. 21-23, 1935]

STRENUOUSLY OPPOSE

Whereas it has been and is the practice in Nevada for producers to sell much livestock on the ranch or f. o. b. shipping point; and Whereas this method of selling is entirely satisfactory to Nevada livestock producers; and

Whereas such livestock may now be sold at home or at the union stockyards (terminal markets), the producer having the right to sell at either place; and

Whereas at the last session of Congress the Capper-Hope-Wearin bills were designed to compel livestock producers to sell all their livestock at union stockyards, and similar bills may be or have been introduced at the present session of Congress: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we strenuously oppose any legislation which is designed to prevent livestock producers from selling at home or to prevent packers or other buyers from buying livestock direct; and be it further

Resolved, That we oppose any restrictions on the practice of direct selling of livestock, and that we oppose any legislation which would compel Nevada livestock producers to sell in union stockyards.

[New Mexico Cattle Growers Association, annual convention, Roswell, N. Mex., Mar. 25, 1935]

STRONGEST OPPOSITION

Whereas the Capper-Hope-Wearin bills now submitted in Congress constitute an attempt on the part of livestock commission men and public stockyards interests to curtail the freedom of marketing of livestock by producers and deprive them of their constitutional rights to market their product in accordance with their best judgment: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we register our strongest opposition to these bills, or to any similar legislation curtailing the free marketing of livestock.

[Cattle and Horse Raisers Association of Oregon, annual convention, Enterprise, Oreg., May 31 and June 1, 1935]

OPPOSE LEGAL RESTRICTIONS

We oppose in principle any limitation on the marketing of livestock by legal restrictions, and ask that bills of the type of the Capper-Hope-Wearin bills be opposed by the association.

[Western South Dakota Stock Growers Association, convention, Belle Fourche, S. Dak., June 10-11, 1935]

DO NOT APPROVE DRASTIC LEGISLATION

While we, as an association, do not approve of direct buying or the feeding of meat-producing animals by packers, yet we do not approve of drastic legislation, such as the Capper-Hope-Wearin bill, that would hamper the sale of livestock on the ranch or at intermediate points en route to the markets.

[Texas Sheep and Goat Raisers Association, annual convention, San Antonio, Tex., Dec. 5-6, 1935]

STRONGLY OPPOSED

We are strongly opposed to Capper bill S. 1424, or any similar bill which would tend to restrict the producer in disposing of his livestock by selling in the country; that is, f. o. b. shipping points, or any legislation which would tend to force producers to sell their livestock through central markets or stockyards.

[Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers' Association, annual convention, San Antonio, Mar. 20-23, 1934]

VIGOROUSLY OPPOSE

Whereas Senate bill 3064 and H. R. 8099, and other pending bills on direct marketing, purport to remedy a certain situation affecting the marketing of hogs, but actually go beyond that and would seriously restrict the present methods of marketing cattle; and

Whereas western ranchmen have for years marketed cattle direct to packers in Texas, California, and elsewhere, profitably, and are opposed to any restrictions being placed on this system of marketing: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers' Association in convention assembled on March 22, 1934, vigorously oppose the passage of the above-mentioned pending legislation, and request Congressmen and Senators to use their best efforts to prevent its enactment.

[Utah Cattle and Horse Growers' Association, annual convention, Salt Lake City, Apr. 6, 1935]

REITERATE OUR OPPOSITION

Whereas there are still pending in Congress various bills introduced by Senator CAPPER and Congressmen HOPE and WEARIN, which have for their objective the control of livestock marketing: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we reiterate our opposition to any such bills that will in any way restrict the marketing of our cattle, either on the public markets or otherwise.

[Western Regional Conference of American Farm Bureau Federation, Reno, Nev., August 1934]

UNALTERABLY OPPOSED

Whereas it has always been the practice in the livestock areas of the intermountain and Pacific Coast States to sell much of the livestock, both fat and feeder stock, at home or f. o. b. shipping point; and

Whereas it would be disastrous if any change was arbitrarily made in the present marketing system, as the markets in this area are relatively small and in many cases far removed from the sources of supply, making it both economical and advantageous to deal with buyers from nearby packing plants, or with feeder buyers and others; and

Whereas amendments proposed to the Packers and Stockyards Act for the purpose of controlling the marketing of hogs in the Corn Belt are so broad and inclusive in their scope that they would impose severe restrictions upon the present system of marketing all classes of livestock in the West: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we are unalterably opposed to any legislation that would interfere with the present right of our producers to sell their livestock, or of the packer or feeder buyers to buy them, at home or at any point en route to market where advantageous sales can be negotiated; be it further

Resolved, That we urge the American Farm Bureau Federation, prior to the convening of the next Congress, to call a conference of all livestock-producing interests from the different sections of the country to consider whether amendments to the Packers and Stockyards Act to supervise and regulate the handling of hogs at concentration points in the Corn Belt can be so drawn as not to impose a burden on other sections of the country.

[Western Slope Cattle Growers Association, annual meeting, Rifle, Colo., June 29, 1935]

DO NOT HAVE ENDORSEMENT

Whereas there are now pending in Congress several bills which impose restrictions on the free marketing of livestock; and

Whereas these bills do not have the endorsement of the packers and stockyards administration: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we oppose the passage of the Capper-Hope-Wearin bills, or any other legislation that would prevent full freedom of opportunity in the marketing of our livestock.

[Wyoming Stock Growers Association, annual convention, Cody, June 19, 1935]

FIRM OPPOSITION

Our association is opposed in principle to the method of country buying practiced on an increasing scale by the larger packers. However, we express our firm opposition to drastic legislation such as the Capper-Hope-Wearin bills, which would seek to restrict the freedom of opportunity to livestock producers to sell their livestock as they see fit. In the interest of harmony between the livestock producers and the central markets, which have so much in common, we urge that the above-mentioned bills should be withdrawn.

[Wyoming Wool Growers Association, annual convention, Casper, Sept. 18-19, 1935]

RESTRICT AVAILABLE OUTLETS

Whereas legislation similar to the Capper-Hope-Wearin bills introduced in the last session of Congress will be reintroduced during the next session of Congress; and

Whereas such legislation will severely restrict wool growers in selling on the ranges fat or feeder lambs to packers, speculators, or feeder buyers and will likewise restrict purchases by packers, speculators, or feeders on the ranges or at intermediate points on the way to market: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we oppose all such proposed legislation which will restrict the available market outlets, increase the cost of marketing, and prevent producers from disposing of their livestock in whatever manner they may decide that will net them the greatest return.

[Border Stock Raisers Protective Association, annual meeting, LaPryor, Tex., Mar. 6, 1935]

OPPOSING ALL LEGISLATION

Opposing all legislation that will curtail free marketing of livestock and opposing legislation such as Capper-Hope-Wearin bills.

[Delta County Livestock Association, annual meeting, Delta, Colo., Dec. 29, 1934]

REGISTER OUR FIRM OPPOSITION

We believe that every avenue of marketing should be kept open for the selective use of livestock shippers.

Therefore we register our firm opposition to the Capper bill introduced in the last Senate, and the Hope and Wearin bills introduced in the last House, or any similar bills, which, under the guise of regulating direct marketing, actually seek to prohibit it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I hope the bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It has never been reported on by the Department of Agriculture. The Department of Agriculture is not for the bill, but it is for the Murphy bill, which is before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. Let us proceed in order. Let the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry consider both bills at the same time, and then report back to the Senate whichever measure it may approve and desire, and then let the Senate act in an intelligent fashion, rather than to take a bite at this bill and then perhaps later on have to consider the Murphy bill.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senate to four pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 23, 1936, beginning on page 4176, in which there is on record, officially, the support of this bill by farm organizations and livestock organizations from one end of the country to the other.

Here is a telegram from the National Livestock Marketing Association, Charles A. Ewing, president, headquarters at Chicago, representing 25 member cooperative livestock marketing associations:

In regard to amendments to Packers and Stockyards Act as provided in S. 1424. The National Livestock Marketing Association, representing 25 member cooperative livestock marketing associations operating upon 23 public livestock markets, who have handled an average of over 111,000 carloads of livestock annually during the past 4 years for approximately 300,000 livestock-producer members and patrons, is vitally interested in above bill and strongly urges its passage.

In the RECORD of March 23, 1936, are four pages of letters, telegrams, memorials, and petitions from all over the country from producers, stockmen, and farmers who favor this proposed legislation, and they have been fighting for it here for the past 10 years. During that time the opposition has been almost entirely from the packers. They are still opposing it.

Here is a resolution adopted by the United States Livestock Association at their annual meeting on February 27, 1936, at Omaha:

We urge the passage by Congress of the Capper-Hope-Wearin amendments to the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921 in the form now presented by Capper bill, S. 1424, pending on the calendar of the United States Senate. The provisions of the legislation restricting the activity of packers in feeding and finishing livestock for slaughter, applying reasonable supervisory rules and regulations of the Department of Agriculture to private as well as public stockyards, and the access given to the Secretary of Agriculture to packers' books and records to the same extent as he now has access to the books and records of other agencies engaged in livestock distribution are particularly commended.

That provision of the Capper-Hope-Wearin bills favoring the regulation of country buying and prohibiting the feeding of livestock by packers met with unanimous approval.

Another is from the Central Cooperative Association of St. Paul, Minn., which is one of the largest cooperative livestock marketing associations in the country.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAPPER. I yield.

Mr. CAREY. I should like to ask the Senator regarding the United States Livestock Association. By whom was it organized, and how is it supported?

Mr. CAPPER. All I know about it is that its president is Mr. Hildebrand, of Nebraska. I think the Senator from Nebraska knows him quite well.

Mr. CAREY. Does the Senator know what his salary is?

Mr. CAPPER. So far as I know, he receives no salary.

Mr. CAREY. Is the Senator aware that the commission men and the stockyard interests support that organization; that they contribute 2½ cents a car toward its support?

Mr. CAPPER. I do not think any such situation as that exists.

Mr. CAREY. I happen to know that it does. I happen to know that this association was organized by the Kansas City stockyards, and that every effort has been made to get the livestock producers into the association. They charge the producers no fees. They send the producers cards and tell them to keep the cards as an evidence of membership. The producers do not even have to acknowledge that they have joined the association, but the association claims the recipients of the cards as members of the association. It is a stockyards-supported organization.

Mr. CAPPER. All I know about it is that every cooperative engaged in marketing livestock in the farm belt is fighting for this proposed legislation, and appeared before the committee through representatives, or sent telegrams or letters or petitions, and the expressions of support were stronger than I have ever heard made by groups of producers on any other measure which has been before Congress.

Mr. CAREY. I can quite well understand why certain producers believe in the bill, because they have been made to believe that these concentration points are lowering the price of hogs. It has been proven by the report of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics that that is not true. I say to the Senator, however, that the principal proponents of this bill are the United States Livestock Association, represented by their attorney. They are responsible for it, and they are supported by the commission men who wish to have livestock brought into the yards where they operate.

IMPEACHMENT OF HALSTED L. RITTER

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, under the special order of the Senate the Senate is now in session sitting as a Court of Impeachment for the trial of articles of impeachment against Halsted L. Ritter, judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida.

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives—Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS, of Texas; Hon. RANDOLPH

PERKINS, of New Jersey; and Hon. SAM HOBBS, of Alabama—accompanied by the Sergeant of Arms of the House of Representatives (Kenneth Romney), were announced by the secretary to the majority and conducted to the seats assigned them.

The respondent, Halsted L. Ritter, and his counsel, Frank P. Walsh, Esq., of New York City, N. Y., and Carl T. Hoffman, Esq., of Miami, Fla., entered the Chamber and took the seats assigned them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will make proclamation.

The Deputy Sergeant at Arms (J. Mark Trice) made the usual proclamation.

Mr. ASHURST. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk (John C. Crockett) called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	King	Pittman
Ashurst	Couzens	La Follette	Pope
Austin	Davis	Lewis	Radcliffe
Bachman	Donahay	Logan	Robinson
Black	Duffy	Loneragan	Schwellenbach
Bone	Fletcher	Long	Sheppard
Borah	Frazier	McGill	Shipstead
Bulkley	George	McKellar	Smith
Bulow	Gibson	McNary	Steiwer
Burke	Glass	Maloney	Thomas, Utah
Byrd	Guffey	Minton	Townsend
Byrnes	Hale	Moore	Vandenberg
Capper	Harrison	Murphy	Walsh
Caraway	Hatch	Murray	Wheeler
Carey	Hayden	Norris	White
Clark	Johnson	O'Mahoney
Connally	Keyes	Overton

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The Chair will inquire if any Senators are present who have not heretofore been sworn. If there are, the Chair will administer to them the oath as members of the Court.

Mr. METCALF, Mr. BARKLEY, Mr. BROWN, Mr. TRUMAN, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. RUSSELL, and Mr. VAN NUYS rose, and the oath was administered to them by the Vice President.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the last session of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment be considered as read and approved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it is appropriate now for the Court to hear from the managers on the part of the House and from the counsel for the respondent as to the pleadings.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, the managers on the part of the House have been authorized by the House to file certain amendments to the articles of impeachment heretofore exhibited to the Senate. I understand that those amendments have not as yet been transmitted to the Senate. Counsel for the respondent have not had opportunity to see them. I suggest, if I may, Mr. President, that the Court recess until tomorrow, at such time as the Court may determine, in order to give opportunity for the managers and counsel for the respondent to have conferences with regard to the pleadings and procedure. I believe it would probably expedite the matter if that course should be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The managers on the part of the House have suggested that the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, take a recess until, say, 1 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. That will be satisfactory to the managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To 1 o'clock tomorrow, with a view to the managers on the part of the House and counsel for the respondent having conferences with reference to amendments to the articles of impeachment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, pursuant to the suggestion made by the managers upon the part of the House, I move that the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, take a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, at 1 o'clock p. m. to us.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is perfectly satisfactory

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, March 31, 1936, at 1 o'clock p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, informed the Senate that the House had agreed to a resolution (H. Res. 472), as follows:

Resolved, That a message be sent to the Senate by the Clerk of the House informing the Senate that the House of Representatives has adopted an amendment to the articles of impeachment heretofore exhibited against Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, and that the same will be presented to the Senate by the managers on the part of the House.

And also that the managers have authority to file with the Secretary of the Senate, on the part of the House, any subsequent pleadings they shall deem necessary.

STOCKYARDS AND MEAT PACKING

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate is now in legislative session.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1424) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] to recommit the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] had the floor at the time when the Senate resolved itself into a Court for the purpose of considering the articles of impeachment.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Kansas had the floor, and I should like to ask him if he has concluded his remarks?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas had the floor, and the Chair so announced, immediately after the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, took a recess. The Senator from Kansas did not happen to be in the Chamber at the moment. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CAREY. I yield to the Senator from Kansas, if he desires to finish his remarks.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I prefer to take the floor when the Senator from Wyoming shall have concluded.

Mr. CAREY. Very well.

Mr. President, first, I wish to thank the Senator from Kansas for not insisting upon action being taken on the pending bill during my absence. I was called to Wyoming last week, and the Senator from Kansas very kindly consented to wait until my return. I also wish to say that I am very reluctant to oppose any bill that my friend the Senator from Kansas may have introduced, and I realize that in introducing this bill he is of the opinion that this proposed legislation will be of benefit to the livestock industry. However, I cannot agree with him that the bill will be of benefit to the livestock industry, for, in my opinion, rather, it will do more harm than good by doing away with direct marketing and forcing producers to patronize central markets. So I hope the motion of the Senator from Texas to recommit the bill will be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CAREY. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand, this measure is now before us on a motion to recommit?

Mr. CAREY. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas to recommit the bill.

Mr. BORAH. What concerns me is that we are really investigating the merits of this bill on a motion to recommit. If the view expressed by the Senator from Texas that the bill will destroy a free market, or an open market, be correct, I should, of course, be opposed to it; but should we dispose of that question on a motion to recommit? Is not the Senator from Kansas entitled to have his bill passed upon by the Senate upon its merits instead of on a motion to recommit? The bill has been reported by the committee; the committee has passed upon it; it is here for consideration. Now the bill is really being killed—for that is what the motion to recommit means, if adopted—without an opportunity to present the matter upon its merits.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I do not feel that the motion to recommit can be considered intelligently unless the merits of the bill are debated. I have grown up in the livestock business. I am interested personally in anything that will help that industry. If I believed this bill would be helpful, I should favor it, but I feel that this measure, by destroying to a large extent free marketing, would be most harmful.

We have in the United States a large number of central markets where livestock can be shipped and where it is sold by commission men. I have many friends among the commission men. The livestock commission business has been generally honest, and anyone who ships to these central markets, consigning his livestock to a reputable firm, can be assured that he will be fairly dealt with and will receive all the market will stand for his livestock. I have no fight with the commission men, and believe that central markets are most necessary.

However, I happen to know that this bill originated in the Kansas City stockyards and not with livestock producers. The main purpose of the bill is to prevent the operation of concentration yards where the packers have been accustomed to buy hogs. It is an effort upon the part of those doing business in the central markets to compel livestock to be shipped to those markets so they may get the benefit of the commission charges as well as other charges which are made in such yards.

A short time ago, in discussion with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] I called attention to the United States Livestock Association. I reiterate that the association was organized not by livestock producers but by a group of commission men. That organization is responsible for this bill. It was written by their attorney. In order to make it appear that the organization represents the producers, various producers over the country are being constantly solicited to join. No dues are charged for joining, every effort being made to get the names of as large a number of livestock men as possible on the roll of membership.

A livestock man is at the head of the association. I have been advised that he is being paid a salary for acting as such. Certain directors or governors are appointed, and once a year are called together for a meeting and their expenses in attending the meeting are paid. The commission men contribute 2½ cents per car to support the organization. None of the livestock men who are invited to become members pay any membership fees. In fact, they do not even have to acknowledge that they have become members. A membership card is sent out, reading as follows:

THE UNITED STATES LIVESTOCK ASSOCIATION

The undersigned holds a nonassessable membership in the United States Livestock Association and is entitled to vote in accordance with the constitution and bylaws, and has pledged himself to assist the association in serving the best interests of the livestock industry.

The new member is told to keep that card to show that he is a member of the association, and he is not expected to acknowledge it. That is the way the large membership of the United States Livestock Association has been built up. As I have said, it is an association of commission men and stockyards interests and not of the producers, though many producers have joined, not knowing the purpose of the association.

The main purpose of the Capper bill is to do away with the concentration points where large packers are accustomed to buy hogs, but, to accomplish this, many small packers who must feed livestock would be destroyed.

At these concentration yards the packers pay the Chicago price or the price of some other market for the classes of hogs purchased, the price being based on the market price for that day. It is contended by many commission men and others that this lowers the price in the central markets, due to the fact that there is no competition in the central markets on account of limiting the purchasing of some of the packers.

At the request of various farm organizations a very thorough study was made by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics as to the effect of direct buying, and their report conclusively shows that the price of livestock is not fixed by any one particular market but by the demand throughout the country. Further, the buying at outside yards has not lowered prices.

No producer is compelled to ship to concentration points, but there is some advantage for the producer in doing so. He may not have a carload of hogs; he may have only a truck load. What he ships may belong in several different classes and can be sorted at the yards and put into their proper classifications. Every farmer who ships to these yards saves the cost of commission, yardage, and other charges which he would have to pay at the central markets. The central market is available to him. If he feels that a fair price is not being paid by the packers at concentration points, he has the privilege of going to other markets. He is not compelled to sell at the concentration points.

Each year there has been a constant increase in the number of livestock that are sold at home. Frequently, dealers come out into the ranch country and buy cattle, sheep, or hogs. Feeders buy direct from producers. In many places throughout the country railroad yards handle more than 35,000 head of livestock, which under the terms of this bill would come under control of the packers and stockyards administration.

Therefore, if the bill should become a law it would mean that many of those places where the ranchman is delivering his livestock or where the eastern feeder has been coming to receive his livestock, would be put under the Department of Agriculture, and it would necessarily mean a greatly added expense.

In my discussion with the Senator from Kansas a little while ago I called attention to the fact that any man who deals in livestock in these markets, any farmer or ranchman who might buy livestock, under this bill could be obliged to take out a license from the Secretary of Agriculture or be guilty of violating the law. The Senator from Kansas asked me what part of the bill contains that provision. I invite his attention to section 303, on page 6 of the bill, which reads as follows:

SEC. 303. After the expiration of 30 days after the Secretary has given public notice that any stockyard is within the definition of section 302, by posting copies of such notice in the stockyard, no person shall carry on the business of a market agency or dealer at such stockyard unless he has registered with the Secretary, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, his name and address, the character of the business in which he is engaged, and the kinds of stockyard services, if any, which he furnishes at such stockyard.

I interpret that to mean that if the Secretary of Agriculture so desires he may compel anyone who might purchase livestock at any of these yards to take out a license in order to buy or sell livestock.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAREY. Certainly.

Mr. FRAZIER. I should like to ask the Senator if he means that anyone, in order to sell at one of the concentration points, must take out a license under the terms of the bill?

Mr. CAREY. I think anyone who buys could be compelled to do so. I do not say that he must do so; that would be for the Secretary of Agriculture to decide. I think the buyers who buy at these yards could be compelled to take out a license. For example, if I went to a stockyard where I was accustomed to buy cattle I would have to be licensed or could not buy without violating the law.

Mr. FRAZIER. To buy stock to feed?

Mr. CAREY. Stock for any purpose.

Mr. FRAZIER. I do not interpret the provision as does the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, there is another provision of this bill which would cause considerable loss to the livestock producers, in that it prohibits the packers from buying livestock for any other purpose than for slaughter. There are many places in the country, particularly in California, where the packers are accustomed to go out and buy cattle and other livestock in the country. Frequently a producer will have, among the cattle he is selling, a few cattle that are not suitable for slaughter. Under the terms of this bill, the packer could neither feed any cattle not fit for slaughter nor could he resell them. That would mean that the livestock producer who had been accustomed to selling his livestock at home to the packer would have a few head on his hands which he probably could not dispose of unless he could find another buyer.

Another provision of the bill is that the packers may not engage in feeding livestock. I can understand why there is objection to the large packers engaging in feeding operations. Many persons claim that this livestock, coming in competition with other livestock, tends to depress the market, the packer killing his own livestock rather than buying on the market. I have discussed this matter with some of the larger packers, and I do not believe that any of them would engage in the business of feeding livestock if they could be assured of a suitable supply the year around.

In addition to the big packers, there are scattered throughout the United States a large number of small packers. Many of these packers are in sections of the country where farmers are not accustomed to feeding livestock and where the packers cannot get enough livestock to supply their plants during certain periods of the year. If this bill should be enacted, most of those packing establishments would have to go out of business, for the reason that they could not afford to go to a central market, buy fat livestock, and ship them to their plants.

We have two such plants in my State. With one of those plants I do a great deal of business. It is operated by men in whom I have the greatest confidence. In fact, their reputation is such that many of us send our livestock to them without any agreement as to price, knowing that they will give us the fair price for our livestock. I have not a full list of these small packing plants, but I have a partial list of the plants that must feed livestock in order to continue in operation:

The Tovrea Packing Co., at Phoenix, Ariz.
 The Peyton Packing Co., at El Paso, Tex.
 The Frey Packing Co., at Seattle, Wash.
 The Carstens Packing Co., at Tacoma, I believe, and Spokane.
 The Dixon Packing Co., at Dixon, Calif.
 The Moffatt Packing Co., at San Francisco, Calif.
 The Grayson-Owen Packing Co., at Emeryville, Calif.
 The Kern Valley Packing Co., at Bakersfield, Calif.

In fact, there are 765 concerns engaged in the business of packing and slaughtering livestock in California, and one-third of which are feeding livestock.

The Casper Packing Co., at Casper, Wyo.
 The Bell Packing Co., at Cheyenne, Wyo.
 The American Packing Co., at Ogden, Utah.
 The Hormel Packing Co., at Austin, Minn.
 The Hansen Packing Co., at Butte, Mont.

Every one of these is a small packing plant. All must engage in the business of feeding livestock in order to keep their plants in operation.

I find that Armour & Co. have to feed cattle to have a supply for 1 month of the year at Denver; that they cannot get an adequate supply for their plant there. They have to feed sufficient livestock for 3 months' supply for their plant at Spokane.

The Cudahy Packing Co. have to feed for their plants at San Diego, Los Angeles, and Salt Lake City.

Swift & Co., in order to operate at Fort Worth and Portland, have to engage in feeding operations.

As stated before, this is only a partial list of the various packing plants that would be affected and would be put out of business if this bill should become a law.

There is another provision in the bill whereby packers could not have other packers slaughter hogs for them. Having hogs slaughtered by other packers reduces the cost of finished product, as it is much cheaper to ship the finished product from these plants than to ship live hogs to some other point and then ship the finished product to their customers.

If anyone will read the Packers and Stockyards Act, section 202, I think he will agree with me that under that act the buying by packers can now be regulated by the Secretary of Agriculture. It is true that the Secretary may not go into the packers' yards and make them public yards, establish commission firms, charge yardage, and all that, the same as in public yards; but the Secretary of Agriculture has all the authority necessary to prevent the packers from dealing unfairly with the producers.

Much has been said about the various associations both for and against this bill. I can understand why some of these organizations that are maintaining cooperative commission firms on the market might be favorable to this bill, as it would mean increased business for those commission firms. I also believe that certain of them do not understand just what the bill would do to the livestock industry should it become a law.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] states that there is a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture in favor of this bill. I beg to take issue with him on that point, for, as I read the letter, I think it is anything but favorable. At the conclusion of my remarks I shall ask to have this letter from the Secretary printed in the RECORD in full. I desire at this time to quote from portions of it.

I am informed that in April of last year the Secretary of Agriculture addressed a letter to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry suggesting certain amendments to the Packers and Stockyards Act. A copy of a proposed bill was enclosed, which bill was introduced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY]. I believe that I have been correctly informed that the bill of the Secretary was not considered by the committee, but I find that on June 6, 1935, a letter was addressed by the Secretary to the committee on the bill of the Senator from Kansas. I quote from parts of this letter:

Subdivision (1) would prohibit a packer from acquiring livestock for any purpose other than slaughtering and processing in a packing plant owned by the packer. The Department has never made an intensive study of the economic effect of packer feeding on the various interests in the livestock industry, consequently it is not in position to make definite recommendations as to the proper action to be taken with respect to legislation dealing with the elimination or regulation of this practice. It is our understanding, however, that the purchase of livestock for fattening is done to some extent by the large national packing companies and by some of the smaller packers who are located in areas where it is difficult to obtain a dependable supply of certain grades of livestock suitable for slaughter. Packers located in the Southwest and in the Pacific Coast States have followed this practice for many years. Many of these packers are located some distance from public livestock methods and usually obtain their livestock supplies over a relatively wide area by direct purchase from producers. Since relatively little intensive feeding of cattle and lambs is done by stockmen or farmers in their territory, these packers claim that they have found it necessary to feed livestock in order to insure themselves of a dependable supply of the better grades of animals for their trade requirements. In buying livestock from a producer, these packers often purchase all animals offered even though some may be unsuitable for immediate slaughter. Those not suitable for immediate slaughter are either fed out in the packers' own feed lots or they are assembled and reshipped to public markets where they can be sold to those desiring them. In this way livestock producers, especially those in areas having few public markets, have been provided with an economic service which apparently has been beneficial to them. In addition, there is reason to believe that the practice on the part of some packers in certain areas, of buying all livestock offered and of feeding livestock to insure a steady supply of slaughter animals, makes for greater price stability in those areas than might otherwise prevail.

The Secretary says considerably more on that subject, but I shall not take the time to read it; but I ask to have the entire letter and the enclosure inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter and enclosure will be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of the Senator's remarks.

Mr. CAREY. He also says:

The bill would add a new section, known as 204, providing for the suspension of the registration of a packing plant operated by a packer who fails to obey an order of the Secretary or who is found guilty of a violation of the act.

Inasmuch as registrations of market agencies and dealers are suspended for violations, it would seem reasonable on first thought that similar action should be taken with respect to a packer who violates the act. On the other hand, the suspension of the operation of a packing plant could easily result in an infliction of punishment or hardship on innocent parties, such as the employees of the plant, the operators of public markets adjacent to it, and livestock producers who are dependent upon the plant for an outlet for their stock. For this reason it is believed that this provision should receive very careful consideration before it is enacted into law. Likewise, the possibilities of subdivision (b) of section 308, which provides for the suspension of the operations of public stockyards for violations of the act should also be carefully considered in view of the possible injury that may be done to the general public making use of such facilities.

There is no question in my mind that if any stockyard or packing plant were closed down those who do business with the stockyards and with the packing plants, as well as their employees, would be seriously damaged. He says further:

The new section 206 would also authorize fines of not less than $500 nor more than $10,000 for any packer, officer, or employee, who violates any provision of the act. In view of the proposed provision for suspension of registrations, this might constitute something in the nature of a double penalty for a single violation.

Under the provisions of the bill a packer or a stockyard company could not only have the plant closed down, but could also be punished again by being fined for a violation of the act.

The Secretary says further:

A new section known as 304-A would be added to the act which would authorize the Secretary to prescribe regulations relating to the weighing, fill, dock, or grades of livestock, provided, however, that the Secretary would have no power to employ any person to perform these functions.

In other words, we are going to insist on the grading of livestock at these markets, with no one to see that the grading is carried out. He says further:

With respect to the establishment of rules and regulations relating to the grading of livestock, it is believed that this could be handled best through separate legislation rather than through incorporation in regulatory statutes such as the Packers and Stockyards Act. As the committee is no doubt aware, the Department is now grading many agricultural products under the provisions of specific legislation. Experience has shown that all matters relating to grading are more satisfactorily handled in this manner than by including the authority in general regulatory statutes.

Then he calls attention to the fact that there would be a double penalty to the stockyard owner by suspending him, and also making him subject to a fine, to which I referred before.

I will skip to the last point of the letter from Secretary Wallace, which I quote:

Upon reference of this matter to the Budget Bureau, as required by Budget Circular 49, the Department was advised by the Assistant Director thereof under date of June 1, 1935, that, insofar as this proposed legislation would extend the scope of the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921, the additional expenditures for administration and enforcement which would thereby be involved would not be in accord with the financial program of the President.

Mr. President, I ask that this letter be inserted in the RECORD at the close of my remarks, together with the enclosure, which is a bill recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture for amending the Packers and Stockyards Act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I have tried to show in a brief way the effect this bill would have on the livestock industry. I feel certain that if it shall be enacted into law it will do away with free and open marketing, and will cause the producer to pay commission charges and other charges which at present he is not obliged to pay.

As I have before stated, the pending bill originated in the stockyards. The purpose of the bill is to bring business to the stockyards, and so far as helping the livestock producer is concerned, it would do more harm to him than good, through preventing him from selling as he pleases and where he pleases.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAREY. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I should like to ask the Senator whether, in his opinion, all the big packers are not opposed to the pending bill?

Mr. CAREY. I think so, yes; and I think all the small packers are as well.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator has stated that the bill originated in the stockyards. I cannot quite understand how he reconciles the two statements.

Mr. CAREY. I should have said that it is sponsored by the owners of the stockyards and the commission men.

I will not take more of the time of the Senate, but I hope that the motion of the Senator from Texas to recommit the bill will prevail. I feel that the bill introduced by the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY] is much better than the pending bill, and it has the approval of the Department of Agriculture.

The letter and enclosure presented by Mr. CAREY are as follows:

JUNE 6, 1935.

Hon. E. D. SMITH,

Chairman, Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry,

United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SMITH: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your request for a report on Senator CAPPER's bill, S. 1424, "a bill to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921", and the following comments are offered respecting its various provisions:

The bill proposes to strike subdivision (g) of section 202 in the existing act and to add to that section new subdivisions (g), (h), (i), and (j).

Subdivision (g) would forbid a packer from owning or operating any place where stockyard services as defined in the act are furnished other than receiving pens at his packing plant or a stockyard posted under the act. It is understood, of course, that certain packers are forbidden by the consent decree from owning stockyards; and, although we see no particular objection to this provision, we feel that, with the existing regulation over public stockyards, the ownership of them by packers is not as serious a question as it was prior to such regulation.

Subdivision (h) would require a packer to register and to maintain a bond to secure the performance of his financial obligations as a buyer of livestock. We see no objection to requiring packers to register the same as market agencies and dealers do, and we are in favor of the bond requirement for packers.

Subdivision (i) would prohibit a packer from acquiring livestock for any purpose other than slaughtering and processing in a packing plant owned by the packer. The Department has never made an intensive study of the economic effect of packer feeding on the various interests in the livestock industry, consequently it is not in position to make definite recommendations as to the proper action to be taken with respect to legislation dealing with the elimination or regulation of this practice. It is our understanding, however, that the purchase of livestock for fattening is done to some extent by the large national packing companies and by some of the smaller packers who are located in areas where it is difficult to obtain a dependable supply of certain grades of livestock suitable for slaughter. Packers located in the Southwest and in the Pacific coast States have followed this practice for many years. Many of these packers are located some distance from public livestock markets and usually obtain their livestock supplies over a relatively wide area by direct purchase from producers. Since relatively little intensive feeding of cattle and lambs is done by stockmen or farmers in their territory, these packers claim that they have found it necessary to feed livestock in order to insure themselves of a dependable supply of the better grades of animals for their trade requirements. In buying livestock from a producer these packers often purchase all animals offered even though some may be unsuitable for immediate slaughter. Those not suitable for immediate slaughter are either fed out in the packers own feed lots or they are assembled and reshipped to public markets where they can be sold to those desiring them. In this way livestock producers, especially those in areas having few public markets, have been provided with an economic service which apparently has been beneficial to them. In addition, there is reason to believe that the practice on the part of some packers in certain areas of buying all livestock offered and of feeding livestock to insure a steady supply of slaughter animals makes for greater price stability in those areas than might otherwise prevail.

Opposition on the part of certain producers to packers engaging in feeding livestock has developed largely during the last 18 months and appears to be directed mostly to the feeding operations of some of the large national packers rather than to those of the smaller packers. Resolutions against the practice were adopted at meetings of some of the livestock-producer organizations held last year. In response to these resolutions one of the large national packing companies issued a statement last spring outlining its position with reference thereto. This statement was to the effect that feeding operations were carried on only to insure the company an adequate supply of those grades of beef and lamb demanded by its trade and which at times were unavailable at the local markets where some of its plants were located. The statement carried the intimation that the company would be willing to discontinue the practice of feeding whenever it could be assured of adequate supplies of the grades of slaughter animals needed by certain of its plants for local trade demands.

It is difficult to determine, short of a comprehensive and detailed study, the extent to which packers find it necessary to feed livestock for slaughter in order to secure a dependable supply of slaughter animals of the different grades. The large national packers, for the most part, have their principal plants located at or near public market centers, and can obtain their principal supply at these markets and from a wide producing area. Many of the smaller packers, on the other hand, are not located at public market centers, but must depend to a large extent upon supplies purchased from producers in surrounding territory. It is possible, therefore, that the prohibition upon feeding of livestock by packers might be a distinct disadvantage to producers in the territory adjacent to these packing plants by restricting their market outlet for unfinished cattle and lambs.

Subdivision (j) makes it unlawful to conspire to do the things forbidden in the preceding subdivisions, and we have no special comment to offer on this.

The bill would amend subdivision (a) of section 203 by substituting the word "may" for the word "shall" in the third line, thus leaving to the sound discretion of the Secretary the decision as to whether he will institute a complaint against a packer instead of making it apparently mandatory to do so. We feel that this is a desirable change.

The bill would add a new section, known as 204, providing for the suspension of the registration of a packing plant operated by a packer who fails to obey an order of the Secretary or who is found guilty of a violation of the act. Inasmuch as registrations of market agencies and dealers are suspended for violations, it would seem reasonable on first thought that similar action should be taken with respect to a packer who violates the act. On the other hand, the suspension of the operation of a packing plant could easily result in an infliction of punishment or hardship on innocent parties, such as the employees of the plant, the operators of public markets adjacent to it, and livestock producers who are dependent upon the plant for an outlet for their stock. For this reason it is believed that this provision should receive very careful consideration before it is enacted into law. Likewise, the possibilities of subdivision (b) of section 308, which provides for the suspension of the operations of public stockyards for violations of the act, should also be carefully considered, in view of the possible injury that may be done to the general public making use of such facilities.

The bill would add a new section, known as 206, to the act providing for writs of mandamus to compel a packer to comply with the provisions of the act or any order of the Secretary. We see no objection to this provision.

The new section 206 would also authorize fines of not less than $500 nor more than $10,000 for any packer or officer or employee who violates any provision of the act. In view of the proposed provision for suspension of registrations, this might constitute something in the nature of a double penalty for a single violation.

The bill would amend section 302 (a) of the act by defining a new type of stockyards. Such yards would be any place where live cattle, sheep, swine, or goats are received incident to or in connection with the sale to packers and where the total number of animals received in the preceding calendar year was more than 35,000 head. It is our understanding that there are quite a number of yards which would fall within this description, and this, of course, would considerably enlarge our supervisory activities and require a substantial increase in the appropriations to enforce the act.

The bill would amend section 303 of the act substantially by writing in the bond requirement, and this, of course, we consider very desirable.

A new section known as 304-A would be added to the act, which would authorize the Secretary to prescribe regulations relating to the weighing, fill, dock, or grades of livestock, provided, however, that the Secretary would have no power to employ any person to perform these functions. With respect to the establishment of rules and regulations relating to the grading of livestock, it is believed that this could be handled best through separate legislation rather than through incorporation in regulatory statutes such as the Packers and Stockyards Act. As the committee is no doubt aware, the Department is now grading many agricultural products under the provisions of specific legislation. Experience has shown that all matters relating to grading are more satisfactorily handled in this manner than by including the authority in general regulatory statutes.

The bill would amend subdivision (a) of section 308 of the act so as to provide for reparation against packers as well as stockyard owners, market agencies, and dealers, and also by providing that reparation may be awarded for violations of the new section 304-A and the new section 317, provided for in the bill. We see no particular objections to this proposal.

The bill proposes to add a new section, known as 317, to the act. Subdivision (a) would provide for suspension of insolvent market agencies and dealers, and we, of course, think that it would be desirable to make this a part of the organic act.

Subdivision (b) would provide for suspension of stockyard owners and of the operation of stockyards. As in the case of packers, there seems to be no good reason why stockyard owners should not be suspended if market agencies and dealers are, but with regard to the actual physical suspension of the operations of a public stockyard, this, as we have previously stated, is a matter which needs to be given thoughtful consideration, in view of the possible adverse effect on the public interest. This subdivision also provides for the suspension of officers, agents, or employees of any stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer who may violate certain provisions of the act, and with this we are in accord, as we think that it would be very helpful in our administration of the law.

The bill provides for a new section known as 318.

Subdivision (a) authorizes a fine and imprisonment for anyone who carries on business or engages in employment after being suspended, and this, of course, we consider necessary to enforce the law successfully.

Subdivision (b) provides that the operation of a stockyard or a market agency or a dealer business which has been suspended by the Secretary may be enjoined by a court, and we have no special comment to offer regarding this.

The bill would amend section 401 of the act.

Subdivision (a), in addition to the present requirements, would give the Secretary the right of access to all accounts, records, and other papers relating to the business of packers, stockyard owners, market agencies, and dealers, and we think that this is desirable.

Subdivision (b) would give duly authorized employees of the Secretary at all reasonable times access to and the right to copy any books, accounts, or papers relating to the business of these agencies, and we think that this also is a desirable feature of the act.

Subdivision (c) gives district courts jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus commanding packers, stockyards owners, market agencies, and dealers to comply with requirements of section 401, and this, of course, seems necessary to the successful enforcement of the provisions of that section.

The remaining sections of the proposed bill on page 12 are general in nature and seem to require no special comment on our part.

Upon reference of this matter to the Budget Bureau, as required by Budget Circular 49, the Department was advised by the Assistant Director thereof, under date of June 1, 1935, that, insofar as this proposed legislation would extend the scope of the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921, the additional expenditures for administration and enforcement which would thereby be involved would not be in accord with the financial program of the President.

Sincerely,

H. A. WALLACE, Secretary.

APRIL 30, 1935.

HON. ELLISON D. SMITH,

Chairman, Committee on Agriculture and Forestry,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: I have the honor to submit for your consideration, and to recommend the enactment of, the enclosed draft of a bill proposing several amendments to the Packers and Stockyards Act for the purpose of facilitating its administration and including as permanent legislation several items that are carried in the annual appropriation act.

The first amendment would require packers to maintain bonds to secure the performance of their financial obligations as purchasers of livestock. The big packers are, of course, financially responsible but experience has shown that the financial condition of many of the smaller packers is none too strong, and there have been cases where producers of livestock have suffered losses due to the inability of these packers to pay for livestock purchased. The failure of the packer to comply with this provision would be made a criminal offense. No provision is made for suspension of packers for failure to give a bond as in the case of market agencies or dealers. It would not seem to be advisable to suspend the packers for failure to give a bond. This amendment also proposes to make it a criminal offense for the packers to violate the act. At present the act requires a cease-and-desist order before court action can be taken.

The amendment proposed in section 2 of the draft would remove any question as to the authority of the Department to join two or more packers in one proceeding. It would also leave it to the discretion of the Secretary to determine whether he should institute a proceeding of his own on account of an unfair practice. This is thought desirable in view of the amendment proposed by the addition of subdivision (i) to section 1, penalizing violations of the act by the packers.

Section 3 of the bill would authorize the filing of claims for reparation by persons claiming losses on account of violations of the act by packers. The act authorizes the filing of such claims against stockyard owners, market agencies, and dealers, but does not authorize such claims against the packers.

The amendment proposed by section 4 of the bill would make the filing of a bond a condition of registration for market agencies and dealers so that they would be subject to the civil penalty of $500, plus $25 a day for each day the offense is continued if the bond is not filed. In addition to this provision section 317 (a), which would be added by section 9 of the bill, would incorporate the authority to suspend market agencies and dealers for failure to give a bond which is now carried in the annual appropriation act.

Section 5 of the bill would include in the act as permanent legislation the item now carried in the annual appropriation act authorizing the Secretary to provide for brand inspection.

The amendment proposed by section 6 of the bill would enable the suspension of any new schedule involving higher rates until the hearing to determine the reasonableness of such rates is completed, except that such suspension could not continue for a period of more than 180 days. At the end of that time, if the hearing is not concluded, the new schedule would go into effect. This limitation seems advisable to deter unnecessary prolongation of the hearing.

The amendment proposed by section 7 of the bill would extend from 90 days to 9 months the time within which claims for reparation may be filed. This would make the time the same in the Packers and Stockyards Act as in the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act. It very often happens that persons having claims fail to file them within the 90-day period, often due to negotiations looking to settlement or to failure to ascertain definitely that they have been injured. This amendment would also correct a defect in the present act by making the processes of the court extend outside the boundaries of its district. The present act authorizes the filing of suit on a reparation order either in the district where the plaintiff resides or the district where the defendant is engaged in business. The provision for filing suit in the district where the plaintiff resides is of no value at present, because in a case under the Interstate Commerce Act (Graustein v. Rutland Co., 256 Fed. 409) the Court held that it would not get jurisdiction of the defendant because it was not a resident of the district, and no provision was made by the act for process beyond the district. The language proposed for addition is substantially identical with that included in section 7 (b) of the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act when it was amended.

Section 8 of the bill would provide for temporary cease-and-desist orders pending the completion of a hearing, but for a period not to exceed 6 months, where necessary to prevent injury to private property or to protect the public interest. This would be of great value, for instance, in boycott cases, where the boycotters might destroy the business of the party whom they are boycotting before the hearing could be completed and a cease-and-desist order issued.

The next section of the bill, no. 9, would add several new sections to the act. The first of these, section 317 (a), would incorporate in the act as permanent legislation the provision for suspension in case of insolvency or failure to give a bond which is now carried in the annual appropriation act.

Section 317 (b) would authorize the suspension of any market agency or dealer or any officer, agent, or employee for a violation (a) of section 306 (f) of the act relating to carrying on business without having filed a schedule of rates and charges, charging a rate different from that scheduled, rebating or furnishing any service except as scheduled; (b) of section 307 requiring establishment of reasonable regulations and practices relating to stockyard services and declaring unlawful unreasonable regulations and practices; (c) of section 312 making it unlawful to engage in any unfair, unjustly discriminatory, or deceptive practice or device. A violation of any order of the Secretary would also be cause for suspension. Further provision is made for suspending the conduct or operation of the business of a market agency or dealer committing any such violation. This section does not authorize the suspension of a stockyard owner for violation of the act, the suspension provision being applicable only to employees of the stockyard owner. It would seem to be inadvisable to suspend the yard since this would cause damage and inconvenience to its patrons.

The next section, 317 (c), would provide a penalty of a fine of not less than $500 and imprisonment for not more than 1 year for the stockyard owners for violating the act.

Section 318 (a) would provide a penalty of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year for carrying on the business of a market agency or dealer, or officer, agent, or employee of the stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer during any period of suspension.

Section 318 (b) would authorize an injunction against carrying on the business of a market agency or dealer during any period of suspension.

Section 319 would put the burden of justifying any increase in rates or charges upon the stockyard owner or market agency filing the new schedule. This follows the requirement of the Interstate Commerce Act in this respect. It would be very helpful in cases involving new rates and schedules. It would not impose any hardship since the person offering the new schedule is in a better position to justify it than the Department is to prove its unreasonableness.

Section 320 is based upon a similar provision in the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act. It is designed to prevent the continuation in business under some other name or with some other firm or corporation of persons who have been suspended for violation of the act where the offense occurred within 2 years prior to the proceeding. Temporary suspension is also provided for.

Section 321 would authorize an order to prevent any stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer from employing any person who has been suspended.

Section 10 would amend section 401 of the act for the purpose of clarifying its provision with reference to the keeping of records and their inspection by the Department. It would remove troublesome questions that have arisen with reference to the Department's right of access to records and hence would facilitate the administration and enforcement of the act.

Sincerely yours,

H. A. WALLACE, Secretary.

A bill to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921

Be it enacted, etc., That section 202 of the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, is hereby amended by adding thereto the following new subdivisions:

"(h) Operate any packing plant at which livestock is slaughtered in commerce unless he has registered with the Secretary, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, his name and address, the name and location of the plant, and the class of livestock slaughtered or to be slaughtered or processed therein, and unless he has filed a reasonable bond, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, to secure the performance of his financial obligations as a purchaser of livestock.

"(i) Any packer, or any officer, director, agent, or employee of a packer who violates any provisions of this section shall on conviction be fined not less than $500 nor more than $10,000, or imprisoned for not less than 6 months nor more than 5 years, or both. Each day during which such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense. This shall not in any way abridge or alter but is in addition to existing remedies."

Sec. 2. In section 203 of said act the word "packer" and related text shall be construed to denote the plural as well as the singular, and the word "shall" where it first occurs shall be construed as "may."

Sec. 3. The following new section is added to title II of said act:

"Sec. 206. Any person complaining of anything done or omitted to be done by any packer or packers in violation of the provisions of this title may at any time within 9 months after the cause of action accrues file a complaint with the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall thereupon proceed in accordance with the provisions of section 309, of said act, which are hereby made applicable to any such complaint, proceeding, and order and to any suit upon any such order."

Sec. 4. The following language is added to the first sentence of section 303 of said act: "and unless he has filed a reasonable bond, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, to secure the performance of his financial obligations as a market agency or dealer."

Sec. 5. The following language is added to section 305 of said act: "Whenever necessary the Secretary may authorize the charging and collection from owners of a reasonable fee for the inspection of brands appearing upon livestock, subject to the provisions of said act, for the purpose of determining the ownership of such livestock: Provided, That such fee shall not be imposed except upon written request made to the Secretary by the Board of Livestock Commissioners or duly organized livestock associations of the States from which such livestock has originated or been shipped to market."

Sec. 6. In 306 (e) strike out the last sentence and insert in lieu thereof: "If any such hearing involving a higher rate or charge cannot be completed within such period of suspension the Secretary may from time to time continue the suspension for further periods of 30 days until the hearing is concluded, except that the total period of suspension may not exceed 180 days, and if the hearing is not concluded within said period the proposed change in the rate, charge, regulation, or practice shall go into effect at the end of such period."

Sec. 7. Section 309 of said act is amended by striking out the words "90 days" in subdivision (a) and inserting in lieu thereof the words "9 months" and by adding to subdivision (f) the following sentence: "The orders, writs, and processes of the district courts may in such cases run, be served, and be returnable anywhere in the United States."

Sec. 8. Amend 312 (b) by adding thereto the following:

"When it appears to the Secretary that such action is necessary to prevent injury to private property or to protect the public interests he may, pending the conclusion of such proceeding, issue a temporary cease-and-desist order which shall not continue in effect for a longer period than 6 months. The provisions of this act respecting final cease-and-desist orders shall be applicable to such temporary orders."

Sec. 9. The following new sections are added to title III of said act:

"Sec. 317. (a) Whenever the Secretary, after notice and opportunity for hearing, finds that any market agency or dealer is unable to meet his financial obligations as a market agency or dealer as they become due in the ordinary course of his business, or has failed to file a reasonable bond as required by the regulations, he may by order suspend such market agency or dealer from carrying on business as such until such time as it is shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary that such market agency or dealer has satisfied past and is able to meet future obligations and has filed such bond.

"(b) Whenever the Secretary, after notice and opportunity for hearing, finds that any market agency, or dealer, or any officer, agent, or employee of any stockyard owner, market agency or dealer has violated or caused to be violated any of the provisions of subdivision (f) of section 306, or section 307, or section 312, or order, rule or regulation of the Secretary thereunder, he may by order suspend such market agency, dealer, officer, agent, or employee from carrying on or engaging in business or employment as a market agency or dealer, or officer, agent, or employee of a stockyard owner, market agency or dealer on any stockyard subject to the provisions of this act, and the Secretary may likewise suspend the conduct or operation of the business of such market agency or dealer committing such violation for a specified period not to exceed 2 years.

"(c) Any stockyard owner who violates any of the provisions of section 307 or section 312, or order, rule or regulation of the Secretary thereunder, shall on conviction be fined not less than $500 nor more than $1,000, or imprisoned for not more than 1 year or both. Each day during which such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense.

"Sec. 318. (a) Whoever shall carry on or engage in business or employment as a market agency or dealer or officer, agent, or employee of a stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer after his registration has been canceled, or during any period of suspension provided for by section 317 or by section 320, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

"(b) The conduct or operation of the business of any market agency or dealer after his registration has been canceled, or during any period of suspension provided for by section 317 or by section 320, shall be unlawful and may be enjoined by any court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the United States, the Secretary, or any party in interest.

"Sec. 319. Hereafter in any proceeding under this act inquiring into the reasonableness of any change in any rate or charge or any regulation or practice affecting such rate or charge or any new rate or charge or a new regulation or practice affecting any rate or charge for stockyard services, the burden of proof as to the reasonableness thereof shall be upon the stockyard owner or market agency against which the proceeding is directed.

"Sec. 320. The Secretary, after due notice and opportunity for a hearing, may by order cancel the registration of a market agency or dealer if he finds (a) that such market agency or dealer, or any director, officer, agent, or employee thereof was within 2 years prior to such notice responsible in whole or in part for any violation of this act, for which an order of suspension or to cease and desist may be or has been issued, or (b) that such market, agency, or dealer has knowingly employed in any responsible position any person made the subject of any order under section 321 hereof, or who was responsibly connected with any market, agency, or dealer whose registration was canceled within 2 years prior to the date of such notice, or (c) that such market agency or dealer has conducted, or is conducting, the business of any market agency or dealer against whom an order of suspension is in effect. Pending the hearing, such registration may by order be suspended for a period not to exceed 60 days. Any such cancellation shall be effective for a period of 1 year and shall be applicable on all stockyards subject to the act.

"Sec. 321. Whenever the Secretary, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, shall find that any director, officer, agent, or employee of any stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer was responsible in whole or in part for any violation of this act, he may issue an order directing all stockyard owners, market agencies, and dealers subject to this act to refrain from employing or having any dealings with such officer, agent, or employee for a reasonable specified period not to exceed 2 years."

Sec. 10. Amend section 401 of said act to read:

"Every packer, stockyard owner, market agency, and dealer shall keep such accounts, records, and memoranda as fully and correctly disclose all transactions involved in his business, including the true ownership of such business by stockholding or otherwise. The Secretary is authorized to require annual reports from every packer, stockyard owner, market agency, and dealer, subject to the provisions of this act in such form or forms and relating to such matters and things connected with his business as the Secretary may prescribe. For the purposes of this act the Secretary, or his duly authorized agent or agents, shall at all times during the regular hours of business have access to all accounts, records, and memoranda, including all documents, papers, and correspondence, on the date that this act becomes a law or thereafter existing and kept, or required to be kept, by packers, stockyard owners, market agencies, and dealers subject to this act. The Secretary may prescribe the manner and form in which such accounts, records, and memoranda shall be kept and the matters and things connected with the business of such person which such accounts, records, and memoranda shall disclose. Thereafter, any such person who shall willfully refuse to submit to the Secretary, or to any of his authorized agents, for the purpose of inspection of any accounts, records, and memoranda, including all documents, papers, and correspondence, in his possession or within his control; or who fails to keep accounts, records, and memoranda in the manner and form prescribed or approved by the Secretary, shall be deemed guilty of an offense against the United States, and shall upon conviction in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 3 years, or both."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 4212) to amend section 2 of the National Housing Act, relating to the insurance of loans and advances for improvements upon real property, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, Mr. REILLY, Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina, Mr. HOLLISTER, and Mr. WOLCOTT were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

STOCKYARDS AND MEAT PACKING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1424) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of Senators who have not made up their minds on the bill, in order to present views which I think are unbiased and unprejudiced and have been arrived at after a great deal of study over the question involved in the proposed legislation.

First, let me refer to the claim that the bill has not been considered by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry; perhaps I should rather say "the subject", because the bills have not always been the same, though the principle involved has been the same. It has been considered by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry for a number of years, with unlimited hearings, at which everybody had an opportunity to be heard without limit, whether for or against the proposed legislation.

The move for the enactment of this legislation commenced under a prior administration. The first hearings were had, I think, when I had the honor to be chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. Perhaps that accounts for the fact that I heard all the testimony, because the hearings were held by the full committee, and I considered it my duty to be there all the time. As I remember now, the hearings ran day after day for weeks and weeks. I had no idea whether I was for or against the proposed legislation when the hearings started. I reached my conclusion as a juror reaches his conclusion when he hears the evidence in a case. Later on, the subject matter was again taken up, I think at the last session of Congress, and considerable time was again devoted to hearings on the subject. So, whatever views Senators may hold of the justice of the proposed legislation, I beg them not to be carried away by the claim that this subject matter has not been considered by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Whatever we do, it seems to me we ought not to agree to the pending motion, which is to refer the bill back to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. That would mean its death just as certainly as though a dagger were stuck through its heart. Even if the Senate should pass the bill now, it is doubtful whether it would get through the House in time to be enacted into law at this session of Congress. Sending the bill back to the committee would make its enactment at this session absolutely impossible.

So far as I am concerned, if the Senate should recommit the bill to the committee, I should feel that the Senate was opposed to the proposed legislation, and that it would be useless to try to resurrect the bill.

So many Senators who have discussed the bill—in fact, nearly all of them—have gone somewhat into the details of the bill that I think I ought to refer briefly to that phase.

Let me say that the question has two sides. I do not say that there is not any argument in favor of the view which I think is wrong. A great many men who have studied the question carefully and honestly have reached different conclusions on this subject. It has been the subject of agitation for a great many years, especially in the part of the country which produces a great many hogs, and men are honestly divided in their opinions. After I had heard the testimony I became a thorough convert to the proposed legislation. I believed then, and I believe now, that this legislation is necessary if we are to take a long view—and I think the proper view—of our great agricultural markets, which are established by law.

Scattered over the country we have these public livestock markets. It may be that their existence is all wrong. It may be that sometime somebody will devise a better plan. It may be that they all ought to be thrown aside and overthrown. I do not believe that, however, and I do not think the Senate believes that. We have spent millions of dollars to build up these market places. We are spending hundreds of thousands of dollars every year to keep them going, on the theory that public markets are necessary where the purchaser and the seller of our livestock products may come together in an open market with free competition, where the stock is sold to the highest bidder without any opportunity on the part of anybody to interfere with the market in any way.

We have had various investigations, running over the past several years, in an effort to try to prevent anyone from manipulating these markets. I do not think the markets are perfect yet by any means; but, so far as I know, no one has come out in the open and said we must overthrow them. We are in danger of doing that, I think, unless we enact some legislation of the kind now before us.

Several other things are involved; but the real issue in the question, which is fundamental, is what is known as direct buying. That is, buying stock at some other place than legally established market places. Very little, if anything, has been said in this discussion, so far as I have heard, to the effect that where direct buying takes place the thing that is harmful is that the price is fixed by the price that day upon this or that public market. In order to give the producer a fair and honest market, it ought to be a place where there is free competition between the buyers. When a packer goes out and buys a carload of hogs direct, they are shipped direct to him. They do not go through the yards. They are not sold on the yards; but the price the packer pays is fixed by the price brought by the hogs which other people shipped and sold on the market.

In other words, a packer buys a carload of hogs; it may be from the individual owner or from a purchaser in some little town. The packer agrees that he will pay the price fixed by the sale, we will say, at South Omaha on that day. The hogs are shipped that day direct to the packer. The price he pays is determined by the market. As I see the matter, Senators—and no one has ever been able to explain this away—if the purchaser who has to buy his hogs at the market in the yards is taken away from the market, it depresses that market. Whenever those who must compete and buy the hogs shipped through the market do not appear on the market, the price goes down.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In the case of a market where the private buying—which constitutes, say, two-thirds or as much as half of the volume of hogs or cattle—might be withdrawn from that community, it would have the effect of lessening competition in the market place.

Mr. NORRIS. Absolutely. I do not see how we can escape that conclusion. If I should be asked how much it would decrease the price of hogs that day, I must confess that I could not tell. I do not know. I do not know any way to determine that, but it must have a depressing effect; and if all hogs were bought outside of the market, and no price were fixed at the public market place, the price would gradually taper down until it would disappear.

Mr. MINTON. Is it or is it not true that the packers accumulate large quantities of livestock in their own private yards—for instance, I believe one of the yards is known as the Mistletoe yard at Kansas City—and at the proper moment bring them into the public yards and break the market and thereby control the price of livestock?

Mr. NORRIS. That could be very easily done; I do not know whether that is the practice as a rule; but I know about the Mistletoe yards. The Mistletoe yards are privately owned by Armour & Co., I am told by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], and there is a great deal of testimony offered about what really happened there. The Armour Co., owning the Mistletoe yards, would go out and buy stock of different people in various localities and have the cattle shipped to the Mistletoe yards. They took them from the Mistletoe yards, slaughtered them, and used them in their own business; but the price that was fixed which they had to pay at the Mistletoe yards was the price on the public stockyard where they were not in competition to any great extent, and even in no competition whatever, in fixing the price. It would be to their interest when they had livestock coming into the Mistletoe yards to stay off the market and keep out of competition in order to keep the price down on the public market so that they might get the stock that was shipped to Mistletoe yards at a less price.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. As I understand the Senator, his contention is that when purchasers go out to a farm or ranch and buy livestock and agree to pay the same price when they arrive in the central market as the central market pays, that is a detriment to the seller, on the theory that there is less competition. Would not the price be lower on the central market if all the stock were marketed there than if some of it was not marketed there?

Mr. NORRIS. If buyers were kept away, that would be so. If stock were shipped to the public market, and buyers stayed away, then there would be no competition in buying, that is true; but the model situation, the fair situation, is to have the buyer and the seller on the same market. That seems to me to be perfectly plain.

Mr. CONNALLY. Suppose a buyer should come to my ranch to buy a carload of cattle or hogs; under this bill what does the Senator think would happen? Would that sale be prevented?

Mr. NORRIS. No. If I had the money, and I went to the Senator's farm and bought all the hogs he had at an agreed price, and I paid him, such a transaction would not be affected by this bill. Congress could not enact any legislation that would affect such a transaction as that.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then, what would be the effect of the bill? What is proposed to be done by the bill?

Mr. NORRIS. The bill would regulate stockyards where 35,000 or more head of stock are handled a year in interstate operations. There is nothing in the bill, Senators, that would prevent one farmer from buying stock from another, or a packer going out and buying hogs of any producer. Such an act would be unconstitutional if we tried to enforce it. If the buyer pays the farmer the price, as many sales can be made and as large sales as they please, if they agree on the price. This bill does not operate against any transaction of that kind.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. May I interrupt the Senator from Nebraska to call his attention to a thought upon which, I think, both of us will have to dwell? This bill would take the situations described by the Senator from Kansas and also by the Senator from Nebraska and promptly place them under Federal supervision and control under the theory either of an amendment of the Stockyards Act or by an original law.

I will not disguise to Senators that I am anxious to preserve the rights of those of my constituency at Chicago who are designated as stockyards owners and those who are in the business. I will not withhold from the Senate that my information, to a great degree, on the whole subject comes from those particular constituents; but I now submit to the able Senator from Nebraska, a former judge of a court and a recognized able lawyer—how can this tribunal, the Congress, in view of the decision of the Supreme Court in what is known as the A. A. A. case and the decision preceding it in what is called the N. R. A. case, give power to the Federal Government to take control of the matter of dealing, at the gateway of the stockyards within a State and wholly between individuals, in property called livestock, bought by an individual purchaser? How can we turn such transactions into a subject of Federal control? How can this honorable branch of our legislature attempt to control such transactions as a Federal matter when they are purely within the State and are in nowise interstate? I ask the able Senator would not such an act on the part of Congress come clearly within the decisions that have been rendered and would it not be held to be wholly without its power?

I ask the Senator if he has had time, and, if not, will he have time, to examine the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case known as the Atchison Railway Co. against the Santa Fe Railroad, and so forth, and so forth, touching stockyards and the limitations under the act granting certain power to the Secretary of Agriculture, the case to be found in Two Hundred and Fifth United States Reports? May I say that I can state all there is, unless I misconstrue the opinion. An attempt was made to add an extra charge upon the transportation of cattle on their way to the yards, or afterward, by a little road called the Junction Road, I think, within the community. The owners of the cattle protested, as they should have, against such extra charge, and the Court held that it was not within the law to impose the extra charge, and that the act which gives control of the subject to the Secretary of Agriculture is a general act, and that the limitation of the act was because of their being a public stockyards. I ask my able friend, can we do anything else than create public stockyards within the purview of the act now existing? If we attempt to pass the measure which is suggested by the Senator from Kansas, and supported by the able Senator from Nebraska, do we not violate the very opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States lately rendered as to transactions purely individual within a State and in nowise interstate in character?

Mr. NORRIS. Is that all the question?

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senator for allowing me to interrupt him.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not familiar with the case to which the Senator refers; I have not read it. I may be entirely mistaken, but up to now I was not aware that anyone was opposing this proposed legislation on the ground that it was unconstitutional. I would not pretend to answer the Senator's question without an examination of the case to which he refers, even if my answer would have any particular weight. However, if the question of constitutionality is raised, I think it can be fully met, although it cannot be met on the spur of the moment, because I had no idea that anyone was going to raise the question of constitutionality; but I myself see no reason why this bill is not constitutional. It is an amendment to a law already on the statute books.

Before leaving the question the Senator from Illinois has asked, I think I ought to say that the Stockyards Act has been before the Supreme Court and has been sustained by that tribunal. I cannot cite the Senator now to the case.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. I have not the citation of the particular case, but at least one case which went before the Supreme Court is a case which came up from East St. Louis, involving the National Stockyards of East St. Louis in about 1931.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to go on with some other features of this proposed legislation.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I was very much interested in the subject the Senator was discussing before the interruption as to the constitutionality of the proposed act. As I understood the Senator from Nebraska, he was arguing that the development of direct buying tends to depress the price in the public stockyards and that, in turn, tends to depress the price in the field or on the range. Is that correct?

Mr. NORRIS. I think so; yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Was any evidence to that effect produced before the committee at the hearing?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes. No one, as I said a while ago, can tell just how much it affects the price, but those two facts put together convince me that there cannot be any other result. If we have a public market place and nobody buys in that public market place, or if only a few people buy, it is wrong to have the price at the market place fix the price that should be paid in a transaction that has nothing to do with the public market place.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Has the attention of the Senator been directed to a certain paragraph from the report of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I have read that paragraph.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The particular paragraph to which I refer?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I have read everything in the report.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am referring to a paragraph on page 17.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know on what page it is, but I have read it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Will the Senator let me put it in the RECORD?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator need not put it in my argument; he may put it into his own. I do not agree with that paragraph.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course, if the Senator does not yield for that purpose, I cannot put the paragraph in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well. I will put it in.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thought it was apropos to the argument.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; it is.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. This is what the Bureau says:

But there is a marked difference in the character of competition at public markets and at interior buying points. At public markets the competition is for a supply of hogs that is physically present, largely out of the control of the producers, and under the necessity of early sale.

That, it seems to me, indicates immediately that the producer is at a disadvantage when he goes to the public stockyards, because he no longer has his own property wholly within his control.

The report proceeds:

At interior buying points it is a competition to draw hogs, that are still under the control of the producer, to different points. Competition at public markets is more apparent than at interior points, since relatively large numbers of buyers and sellers in personal contact are readily observable at the former, while at the latter the chief evidences of competition are the posted prices and the telephone or personal requests being received for bids on hogs. But to the producer at home, with hogs for sale, the latter competition is more useful, since he is in a stronger position opposite the buyer with his hogs still at home than he would be if they were at a public market and had to be sold.

That is just one of many items.

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield while the Senator reads the balance.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I do not intend to read it all. That is merely one of the items which led to the conclusion by the Bureau that direct marketing has not lowered the general level of hog prices nor has it operated to reduce returns to producers.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should now like to be recognized again. I realize I have lost the floor twice by yielding to questions, but I invite the attention of Senators to the fact that that seems to have been the custom, especially this afternoon. I hope no one will invoke the technicalities of the rule to take me off the floor, which, I admit, could be done, because I have spoken already twice on the subject when I had intended to speak only once. If I may get back to where I was when I was interrupted and continue the chain of my thought, I shall endeavor to do so.

As I said at the beginning, the argument is not all on one side, but when it develops from the evidence, as it has in this case, that direct buying takes away from the public market competition, which has a tendency always to increase the price, I care not what someone else says, who may be right when I may be fooled, I cannot avoid reaching the conclusion that that practice does depress the price. If I say two and two equal four and somebody else says they equal five, he may be persistent in his view, but still I believe two and two equal four. When we take competition away from a public market, no matter how great the man may be who says that does not affect the price, I cannot believe it. I may have perfect respect for his judgment, but I am not able to understand how we can reduce competition at a public market without depressing the price at the public market.

That settles the fundamental question so far as I am concerned. I may not be logical. I may not know how to reason, but I cannot avoid reaching that conclusion. When I am asked how much the absence of Armour & Co. or Swift & Co. from the public market depressed the market today, I cannot tell. I do not know. No one can tell, so far as I know.

I admit that the man who ships direct sometimes gets a temporary advantage. The public markets have to be supported. If I ship to the public markets there are certain rules and regulations which must be complied with and certain charges which must be paid to maintain the public market. If I ship direct I avoid that expense. I can see how a whole system may get an advantage for the time being out of direct shipping, but a continuance of it strikes down the cornerstone of the fundamental structure which would afford a price sufficient to compensate the stockman for his labors. In other words, he is undermining the business—unconsciously, of course. I do not mean he is malicious. I do not mean he has no right to do it. I am not complaining. However, if he keeps on doing that, eventually he will have stricken down his public market and the farmer who produces stock will suffer.

It is very much like the cooperative organizations in certain communities. If we could get all the producers of certain articles together and have them operate collectively, which could be done at one time before we had some of the regulations we now have, the result would be the same. Farmers would form milk associations or butter associations or other kinds of associations to take the products of the members and ship them collectively—hogs, cattle, horses, anything the farmers produced. In the case of creamery organizations, as I remember very well, the private parties interested would come into a community and pay a larger price temporarily than the cooperative organization could afford to pay. Thus the cooperatives would be broken down. Perhaps money was lost in paying the higher prices, but it was only temporary and was done to drive the cooperative out of business. Then the prices were raised and the losses recouped. It seems to me this is a very similar situation.

Those who are opposed to the proposed legislation have argued that commission men are in favor of the bill. I think that is correct. The commission men are in favor of it, so far as I know. I think that is quite natural. When stock is shipped direct it is not sold on the public market, and the commission men have nothing to do with it. They do not get a commission. It is not dishonorable to be a commission man. It is a perfectly honorable calling. No one has to employ a commission man if he does not want to do so. Operating a packing house is a perfectly honorable occupation; but, as a matter of fact, should we defeat this bill because the commission men are for it? If I were a commission man I would be in favor of it.

The fact that the big packers are opposed to the bill does not necessarily argue for the defeat of the bill. Why are they against it? The commission men are for it because they get business through it. When stock is shipped to a commission man he makes some money out of it. Why are the packers opposed to the bill? One of the sections of the bill provides for an examination of the books of the packers, to which they are very much opposed; but an examination must be had if we are ever to have such regulations as we ought to have. The packers have a right to be opposed to the bill. I concede that. However, so far as the packers and the commission men are concerned, if it is to be argued against the bill that the commission men are supporting it, then it ought to be argued in favor of the bill that the packers are fighting it.

Suppose farmers or cooperative organizations ship independently and sell outside of the stockyards; they save the yardage fee; they save the commission which would otherwise have to be paid to the commission man. They save perhaps some other charges which are necessarily made for the support and maintenance of a public stockyard. That money would come out of their pockets. Temporarily the farmer who ships and sells directly avoids that expense, but while he is avoiding it I think that just as surely as the sun rises in the east he is killing the goose that lays the golden egg.

What do the farmers' organizations say about the bill? Going back to the hearings, to which I listened for over a month, I remember that every one of the standard, well-known farm organizations was in favor of the bill. Some of the individuals who were there opposed it. One man told the truth when he said:

I myself, individually, ship a carload of hogs and sell it to Armour & Co. It does not go through the stockyards. I get the price that was paid at the stockyards that day, but here was a certain commission and there was a yardage fee which I avoided, and accordingly I made that much more money.

If everybody did like that man the stockyards market would go to pieces overnight. The pending bill is to prevent as nearly as it can be done the packers from following that kind of practice. It cannot be completely prevented, but this is an honest effort to prevent it so far as may be done.

It would not make any difference to me—it might make a difference, but I could not help it—if I were a juror in a case, and after I had heard the evidence and came to a conclusion, somebody said, "The Secretary of Agriculture does not agree with you about this." I might regret the disagreement; I might think perhaps I was wrong; but I should have to follow my judgment which brought me to the conclusion, after hearing the evidence, that if we do not do something of this kind, our great markets are going to be destroyed. They are less valuable now, although I cannot tell just how much, than they were a year ago, because this direct buying is sapping the foundation stones of the industry. Therefore, it seems to me we ought to pass the bill.

Under the circumstances, I have no hesitancy in feeling that such legislation is necessary; and, no matter what is done, I believe the time will come when the farmers will realize that if these market places are destroyed the farmer himself will be the greatest sufferer.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, most of the discussion which has taken place up to date upon this measure has gone to the merits of legislation on the subject, and not to the merits of the pending bill.

The distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who has just taken his seat, has declared that in his opinion some such legislation is necessary. He may be quite right about it; in fact, I am ready to believe that he is right, because he usually is right; but the question before the Senate is not whether or not some such legislation should be enacted but whether or not this particular bill should be recommended.

Glancing over the bill as it has been reported by the committee, one will quickly realize why the Department of Agriculture has not rendered a favorable report upon it. It seems to me that even a casual reading reveals numerous reasons not only for the attitude of the Secretary but also why the bill requires further committee study.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not read the Secretary's report, and I have never talked with him about it; but I have been told, upon authority which I think is correct, that the Secretary of Agriculture, after further study, is really in favor of this proposed legislation. It would not affect me, if I should not reach the same conclusion he does, except with regret, because I have great respect for him; but I have read the Bureau of Economics' report on the bill, and I do not agree with them at all, although I must confess that they may be right about the matter and I may be wrong.

Does the Senator from Wyoming know whether the Secretary is really in favor of this bill or is opposed to it?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I know that the Secretary sent a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, recommending another bill, the one which was introduced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY]. My colleague [Mr. CAREY] a few moments ago read from what purported to be a letter of the Secretary of Agriculture, criticizing at least some features of the pending bill.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President—

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. CAREY. I may say that I called up the Secretary's office—I did not talk to him, but I talked to one of his assistants—and asked if he had made a favorable report on this bill. I was advised that he had not done so. I requested a copy of the report which had been made, of which I read portions earlier in the day. The Department sent me, with the report which the Secretary made, also a copy of his letter to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, in which he submitted the bill introduced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY]. My impression was that the Secretary favored that bill, and that he was not favorable to the bill now before the Senate; and I think anyone reading that report in its entirety—I have a copy of it here—will agree with me that it is not a favorable report on the pending bill, although the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] thinks it is.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Kansas did not include it in the report of the committee, nor in any of his remarks, thus indicating that he does not regard it an argument for his measure.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have here a copy of a letter dated June 6, 1935. I am under the impression that that letter does not refer to the present bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No; it refers to the bill introduced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY].

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If there is a report by the Secretary of Agriculture on this bill, it seems to me, we ought to have it printed in full.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think the Senator is quite right. My understanding is that my colleague the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] introduced that report in the RECORD this morning.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. All of it?

Mr. CAREY. All of it. I can furnish the Senator from Minnesota with a complete copy of the letter.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Why not have it printed?

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me, I think the Senator from Wyoming has already asked that it be printed, and it is to be printed in full in the RECORD, and will be before us in the morning.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is all I desire.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Is not that correct?

Mr. CAREY. Yes; I quoted from portions of the report.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether it is not a fact that the report of the Bureau of Economics, which we have here, is directed at a bill that was before us a year ago?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Oh, no; I think not.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It is not, as I understand, a report on the bill before us.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The report of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics is a study on the direct marketing of hogs, and it has nothing to do with any specific legislation, as I understand; but, as I was saying, that is not the question before the Senate at this time.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is my understanding. It is not a question of direct selling at all, as I understand the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No; the merits of legislation on the subject is not before the Senate at the present time. The motion is to recommit this bill; and I desire to refer to one or two phases of the measure as reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which satisfy me that the bill ought to be recommitted.

For example, section 7 provides for the addition of a new section to the Packers and Stockyards Act. I think every Senator ought to read this new section, because it is very illuminating. It will be found on page 7, beginning in line 11:

SEC. 304-A. The Secretary shall prescribe—

Observe, that is mandatory.

The Secretary shall prescribe, after hearing, reasonable rules and regulations relating to the weighing, fill, dock, or grades of livestock in commerce, and it shall be the duty of every packer, stockyard owner, market agency, and dealer to comply with such rules and regulations so prescribed by the Secretary: Provided, however, That nothing in this section contained shall authorize or empower the Secretary to employ or designate any person or persons to weigh, fill, dock, or grade livestock.

In other words, we are asked by the committee to put ourselves in the position of commanding the Secretary of Agriculture to draft rules and regulations for grading livestock, and then we tell him, "You shall not employ any person for the purposes of weighing and grading stock", thus apparently weakening the power of the Secretary to enforce the rules he is directed to make.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President—

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CAPPER. Do I understand that the Senator from Wyoming would have these stockyards operated by Federal employees?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Not at all.

Mr. CAPPER. That is what this section is intended to guard against.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It goes very much further than that. It seems to me the purpose of this section should be clarified, but there are other sections of the bill to which I should like to call the attention of the Senate.

The first section of the bill amends section 202 of the Packers and Stockyards Act by adding a provision making it unlawful for any packer to—Operate any packing plant at which any livestock is slaughtered in commerce unless he has registered with the Secretary, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe.

When we speak of "packers", it should be borne in mind that we are not referring alone to big packers; we are referring to all packers. This bill, if it should be enacted, would apply to the little packer as well as to the big. So we must bear that fact in mind.

Having thus required registration as a prerequisite to engaging in business, the measure, then, in subparagraph (j), proposed to be added to section 204 of the original act, grants to the Secretary this additional authority:

(j) The Secretary may revoke, or suspend for such period as he may determine, the registration of any packing plant or plants operated by any packer who fails to obey any order made by the Secretary under the provisions of this title or who, upon complaint after hearing as herein provided, is found by the Secretary guilty of the violation of any provisions of this title.

In the first place, therefore, it is proposed that a packer may not operate unless he is registered. In the second place, it is proposed that the Secretary may revoke or suspend the registration for violation of any rule or regulation imposed by the Secretary. Now, let us observe section 9 of the bill, which undertakes to add a new section, 318 (a), to the present law. This new provision reads as follows:

Whoever shall operate a stockyard which has been suspended or whoever shall carry on or engage in business or employment as a market agency or dealer, or officer, agent, or employee of a stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer, during any period of suspension provided for by section 317 shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both.

In other words, by this bill it is proposed that we make it unlawful for any packer, big or little, to operate without registration, that we empower the Secretary to revoke any registration for the violation of a regulation which he himself imposes, and then that we make it a criminal offense for any packer, or any person, to operate after such revocation or suspension.

The importance of that will be realized when we turn to the language of the Packers and Stockyards Act as it now stands. Section 205 of the act provides that "any packer, or any officer, director, agent, or employee of a packer who fails to obey any orders of the Secretary issued under the provisions of section 203" shall be guilty of an offense "after the expiration of the time allowed for filing a petition for review in the circuit court of appeals or after the expiration of the time allowed for applying for a writ of certiorari."

Section 204 provides that an order made by the Secretary under this act becomes "final and conclusive unless within 30 days after service the packer appeals to the courts in the manner specified in the act."

In other words, under the law as it now stands, if the Secretary issues an order it does not become effective until 30 days have elapsed and the packer has had an opportunity to take his case into court. Under the bill which has been brought forth by the committee that protection of the courts has been completely withdrawn, and it is made possible for a person to be punished as for a criminal offense for violating a mere order of the Secretary which he has not had the opportunity to test in the courts.

The bill contains another interesting provision absolutely new to legislation so far as I know. I should like to draw the attention of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary to this section of the bill. I know that he will be very much interested in the provision. The Packers and Stockyards Act will contain a new section, to be known as section 206a, if this bill should become a law, reading as follows:

Upon application of the Attorney General of the United States, at the request of the Secretary, the district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus commanding any packer to comply with the provisions of this act or any order of the Secretary made in pursuance thereof.

In other words, we are asked to authorize the issuance of a writ of mandamus to compel obedience to an order of the Secretary, and to do that in the same bill which takes away from the packer—and let us bear in mind that it may be a little packer as well as a big one—the right to have his cause tested in the courts. Surely this is a rather extraordinary extension of the judicial power to punish for contempt, and I can see no reason why it should be granted.

Let me also call attention to the language on page 2 of the bill, lines 13 to 19, which makes it unlawful for any packer, little as well as big, to—

Purchase or acquire, directly or indirectly, cattle, sheep, or swine for the purpose or with the intent of feeding and fattening such livestock in order to render it suitable for slaughter, or for any purpose other than the slaughter and processing thereof in a packing plant or plants owned, operated, or controlled, directly or indirectly, by such packer.

I seriously doubt the power of Congress to make such a provision, even if there were no question as to its wisdom.

These are but a few of the aspects of this bill which, it strikes me, indicate that the measure should again have the attention of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Let me call attention to the fact that section 203 (a) of the law as it now stands provides:

Whenever the Secretary has reason to believe that any packer has violated or is violating any provisions of this title he shall cause a complaint in writing to be served.

The bill reported by the committee strikes out the word "shall" and substitutes the word "may." I should like to have the Senator from Kansas tell me, if he will, why we should make it a matter of discretion with the Secretary of Agriculture whether or not he should make a complaint when he has reason to believe that the law has been violated or that any packer is violating it. It seems to me that that is a liberalization of the law which is not at all necessary.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I fail to follow the reasoning of the Senator from Wyoming. At first he seems to be complaining that this bill would take away the right of the packers to appeal to the courts. Then he criticizes the provision which makes it discretionary rather than mandatory with the Secretary of Agriculture to proceed against the packers.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There is no controversy as to that. I take the position that if the Secretary of Agriculture has any reason to believe that the law has been violated or is being violated, he should file a complaint, and he should not have discretion to withhold filing the complaint.

Most of the matters to which I have alluded are not contained in the bill recommended last year by the Department of Agriculture and is produced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY]. The bill is not open to any of these criticisms with respect to the power of the Secretary to make regulations and to punish criminally for their violation.

It has been stated here, and I think rightly, that the mere fact that any commission man is for the bill is no argument against it. No one can deny the right of any citizen to make himself heard with respect to any matter of legislation. The criticism is directed against the effort of the commission men to masquerade as livestock producers. They come before us pretending that they are one thing, whereas as a matter of fact they are another. I am referring now to the United States Livestock Association, letters and telegrams from which were put into the Record by the distinguished Senator from Kansas. I have in my hand a circular letter which was issued by the United States Livestock Association, signed by Glenn T. Stebbins, executive secretary of that body, and sent to producers of livestock throughout the west. One paragraph of that letter is particularly illuminating. It reads:

DEAR SIR: Your name has been submitted for membership in the United States Livestock Association, and the recommendation has been officially approved by the committee.

You will find enclosed your membership card, which needs only your signature. If agreeable, you may sign it and keep it for your identification as a member. Unless we hear from you to the contrary we shall assume that you have accepted.

Mr. President, that is a very easy matter in which to obtain a large membership. The organizers of the United States Livestock Association took the lists of livestock shippers and producers, sent out cards of membership, and said to the stockmen, "Unless you refuse to join, we regard you as members." It is that body, pretending to be an organization of livestock producers, which comes to us asking for the enactment of the pending bill.

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS, ACCORDING TO HEARST

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I am reluctant to address the Senate again at this time; but I suppose this is about as good a time as any, while we are discussing a stockyards bill, to bring up the subject I propose to discuss.

Last Saturday the New York American, on its editorial page, carried an array of photographs which are very interesting.

The first one is a picture of the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK]—a picture that looks like one of a callow youth who might just have won the high-school oratorical contest in Alabama.

The next picture Senators would never recognize as a photograph of that great leader and gladiator in parliamentary contests, the distinguished leader of the majority [Mr. ROBINSON]. It looks like someone who had just escaped his keeper.

Then there is the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the chairman of the great Committee on Finance of the Senate. This picture of him looks like somebody just scared out of a brush heap.

Then there is the picture of the distinguished Representative from Texas who has the honor to be chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House, Hon. SAM RAYBURN. The picture of Mr. RAYBURN looks as though he might be a cattle rustler from the early days in Texas.

The next photograph is one of myself. I have never taken a prize in any beauty contest, and I am not at all sensitive about my appearance; but I submit that this particular picture looks as if it might have been sent abroad by Mr. Edgar Hoover in search of one of his permanent boarders who had escaped from Alcatraz.

The next picture is of the distinguished Speaker of the House of Representatives. It looks like the picture of a justice of the peace from Hoopole Township, Posey County, Ind.

And so, Senators, these extraordinary photographs have been used and are being used by Mr. Hearst in his newspapers to illuminate and illustrate an editorial which accompanies the photographs. The title of this editorial is:

A subservient Congress invites dictatorship in America!

In that editorial we find these words:

When the history of these insane years is written the historian will duly note how men like Speaker BYRNS in the House, and Senators, utterly recreant to their trust, like HARRISON, ROBINSON, and sundry others, have led the Gadarene swine down the slope of constitutional surrender into the abyss.

So we are all characterized by this great publisher of newspapers all over the country as "Gadarene swine." The Scripture does not enlighten us much as to this breed of swine; but I venture the assertion that they are a better breed of swine than Mr. Hearst and his pusillanimous pen-pusher who wrote that editorial.

I call this editorial to the attention of the Senate for the purpose of showing Senators how Mr. Hearst construes his constitutional right of freedom of the press—that freedom of the press is license to call JOE ROBINSON and PAT HARRISON and HUGO BLACK "Gadarene swine", and to include the rest of the Senators in the group. I call Senators who have served long years here with these distinguished colleagues to witness whether their splendid records as Senators and public servants deserve such characterization as that.

Freedom of the press, in this gentleman's estimation, gives him license to characterize JOHN J. McSWAIN, of the House of Representatives, as a traitor to his country, though Mr. McSWAIN twice offered his life in defense of his country. Freedom of the press, in Mr. Hearst's estimation, is license to traduce and villify this man whose public and private life is the soul of honor. Freedom of the press is license to Mr. Hearst to villify and pursue this fine public servant to the distress and anguish of his good family. Yes, freedom of the press to him is license to go into Mexico and to buy spurious documents, which he knew were spurious, and which challenged the honor and integrity of four as pure and noble gentlemen as ever served in the United States Senate.

Oh, I know Mr. Hearst deleted from those articles the names of these Senators before he published the article; but, as I understand, upon the advice of counsel he knew that when a senatorial investigation would come, and when the names would come out there he might broadcast them to the land as privileged communications. He must have known, when he looked at these spurious documents and saw the name of the distinguished senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who now enters the Chamber, the name of WILLIAM E. BORAH, and the name of ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, that the documents could not have been anything but spurious, for they charged these men with dishonor. But this man spewed these documents forth, and spilled them to the country through the medium of his press as facts; and when confronted with them by the investigating committee he admitted that he knew they were spurious.

So Mr. Hearst's construction of freedom of the press entitles him to attack the members of the Lobby Committee—yes, of the United States Senate—and call them whatever it pleases his fancy to call them, to characterize their actions in any fashion he sees fit.

Mr. President, I have been honored by the Senate with a place upon the Lobby Committee. If I have dishonored the Senate by my service upon that committee, I wish the Senate to tell me so—not Hearst. If I have been recreant to my trust and my duty as a member of the committee, I wish the Senate to tell me so—not Hearst. So far as my judgment will enlighten me, my colleagues and I have been following in the footsteps of distinguished Members of the United States Senate who have heretofore served on committees of investigation of the Senate. We have been following in the footsteps of Tom Walsh, of Montana; James Reed, of Missouri; Thad Caraway, of Arkansas; Duncan Fletcher, of Florida.

So, my colleagues, if we have been straying from the path in which you would have us go, we have not been conscious of it, because we have been following in the footsteps of these illustrious predecessors of ours. Therefore, if we have been wrong, we ask the Senate to correct us—not Mr. Hearst.

Mr. President, the dictatorship we have to fear in this country today is not a dictatorship by the great humanitarian and friend of the people who occupies the White House at this time.

We need not fear a dictatorship by a subservient Congress; we need not fear a dictatorship at the hands of the courts. The dictatorship we have to fear in this country today is the dictatorship of a purse-proud, insolent, arrogant, bulldozing newspaper publisher by the name of William Randolph Hearst. That is the kind of dictatorship we need fear in this country today; and, so far as I am concerned, the issue is joined there.

LOANS AND ADVANCES UNDER NATIONAL HOUSING ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BULKLEY submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4212) to amend section 2 of the National Housing Act relating to the insurance of loans and advances for improvements upon real property, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the text of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"That section 2 of title I of the National Housing Act, as amended, is amended, effective April 1, 1936, to read as follows:

"Sec. 2. (a) The Administrator is authorized and empowered, upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, to insure banks, trust companies, personal finance companies, mortgage companies, building-and-loan associations, installment lending companies, and other such financial institutions, which the Administrator finds to be qualified by experience of facilities and approves as eligible for credit insurance, against losses which they may sustain as a result of loans and advances of credit, and purchases of obligations representing loans and advances of credit, made by them on and after April 1, 1936, and prior to April 1, 1937, or such earlier date as the President may fix by proclamation upon his determination that there no longer exists any necessity for such insurance in order to make ample credit available, for the purpose of financing alterations, repairs, and additions upon improved real property, and the purchase and installation of equipment and machinery upon such real property, by the owners thereof or by lessees of such real property under a lease expiring not less than six months after the maturity of the loan or advance of credit. In no case shall the insurance granted by the Administrator under this section to any such financial institution on the loans, advances of credit, and purchases made by such financial institution for such purposes on and after April 1, 1936, exceed 10 per centum of the total amount of such loans, advances of credit, and purchases. The total liability incurred by the Administrator for all insurance heretofore and hereafter granted under this section shall not exceed in the aggregate $100,000,000.

"(b) No insurance shall be granted under this section to any such financial institution with respect to any obligation representing any such loan, advance of credit, or purchase by it (1) unless the obligation bears such interest, has such maturity, and contains such other terms, conditions, and restrictions as the Administrator shall prescribe in order to make credit available for the purposes of this title, and (2) unless the amount of such loan, advance of credit, or purchase is not in excess of $2,000, except that in the case of any such loan, advance of credit, or purchase made for the purpose of such financing with respect to real property already improved by apartment or multiple-family houses, hotels, office, business, or other commercial buildings, hospitals, orphanages, colleges, schools, churches, or manufacturing or industrial plants, or improved by some other structure which is to be converted into a structure of any of the types herein enumerated, such insurance may be granted if the amount of the loan, advance of credit, or purchase is not in excess of $50,000: Provided, That after April 1, 1936, no insurance shall be granted under this section to any such financial institution with respect to any obligation representing any such loan, advance of credit or purchase by it in the amount of $2,000 or less for the purpose of financing the purchase and installation of equipment and machinery upon improved real property.

"(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Administrator shall have the power, under regulations to be prescribed by him and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, to assign or sell at public or private sale, or otherwise dispose of, any evidence of debt, contract, claim, property, or security assigned to or held by him in connection with the payment of insurance heretofore or hereafter granted under this section, and to collect or compromise all obligations assigned to or held by him and all legal or equitable rights accruing to him in connection with the payment of such insurance until such time as such obligations may be referred to the Attorney General for suit or collection.

"(d) The Administrator is authorized and empowered, under such regulations as he may prescribe, to transfer to any such approved financial institution any insurance in connection with any loans and advances of credit which may be sold to it by another approved financial institution."

"Sec. 2. Section 3 of title I of the National Housing Act, as amended, is hereby repealed."

And the House agree to the same.

The House recedes from its amendment to the title of the bill.

FREDERICK STEIWER,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH,
M. K. REILLY,
FRANK HANCOCK,
JOHN B. HOLLISTER,
JESSE P. WOLCOTT,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BULKLEY. I ask for the immediate consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, this is the bill to extend for another year the operation of title I of the Housing Act. The operation under that title will expire on April 1 unless action shall be taken; and for that reason we are anxious to have action on the bill this afternoon.

The differences between the two Houses were of a minor technical character; and as the conference report is unanimous, I shall not take the time of the Senate to explain it any further, unless some Senator wishes to hear a further explanation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, has the conference report been agreed to in the House?

Mr. BULKLEY. It has not; but we have been asked to take it up here first.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the recess of the Senate the Vice President may sign Senate enrolled bill 4212.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

STOCKYARDS AND MEAT PACKING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1424) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] to recommit the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I sincerely hope that the motion of the Senator from Texas will not prevail. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has spent days and weeks and months and years in the consideration of the bill that is now pending before the Senate. I have here [exhibiting] more than a thousand printed pages of testimony taken by that committee before the bill was reported. The bill, in fact, has been reported twice by the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry—2 years ago and a year ago—and the report in both instances was unanimous. It is just a question whether we want to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act so that all livestock will come under the provisions of the act which was passed in 1921.

Before I close I wish to submit a telegram which I have just received from Fort Worth, Tex., signed by M. Fowler,

S. L. Fowler, Fred McFarland, Loon Farmer, Jake Dearing, Rolla Rinsley, R. E. Farmer, and Morris Farmer, all of whom are well-known stock feeders in the State of Texas. The telegram reads as follows:

Being regular feeders of cattle, finishing several thousands yearly, I strongly favor passage of Senate bill 1424, prohibiting feeding livestock by packers. Past experience shows such operations extremely detrimental to feeders' interest.

BENEFIT PAYMENTS TO AGRICULTURAL PRODUCERS

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I beg the indulgence of the Senate for just a moment while I say an additional word regarding my pending resolution calling upon the Department of Agriculture for a report of all benefit payments under Triple A in excess of $10,000. The resolution is before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I wish the committee and the Senate to have certain additional information in connection therewith.

The distinguished Secretary of Agriculture has made a statement to the press in opposition to the resolution, precisely as his Department opposed a similar resolution in the House of Representatives. He recites the same objections here that were previously asserted there; and I am bound to say, with great respect, that I consider the objections to be captious and disingenuous. They do not meet the issue; they avoid it. Some better reasons should be presented for maintaining secrecy respecting this gigantic distribution of a billion dollars of public money, or the cloak of secrecy should be drawn aside.

The Secretary presents only two reasons for protesting the Senate resolution. I quote the first from a Washington dispatch in the Baltimore Sun of March 26:

Secretary Wallace said the A. A. A.'s primary objection to the request for a report on all farmers getting $10,000 or more was the actual job of assembling the data. Like Chester C. Davis, A. A. A. Administrator, he estimated the task would require the undivided attention of the entire Comptroller's division for about 6 weeks.

Such an assignment, the Secretary said, would come at a most inopportune time, the Comptroller's division being occupied now with dissemination of some $296,000,000 of benefit checks due farmers on last year's contracts.

It is a very adroit and subtle suggestion, Mr. President, that the resolution will interfere with the current distribution of benefit checks due the farmers of America under their 1935 contracts. That is delightfully calculated to raise a protest which will smother the real issue. It is excellent strategy—from the Secretary's point of view—but it does not bear up under scrutiny. The farmers are entitled to their checks without delay because a contract—good or bad—is still a contract, so far as I am concerned; and the Government's obligations under the old A. A. A. should be promptly liquidated before new Government obligations are created under the new law, which, even more than its predecessor, permits the Secretary of Agriculture to disburse public money as he pleases, if he pleases, when he pleases, and how he pleases. If a report on the old law will interfere, at the moment, with a completion of the old disbursements, let the report wait until the contracted disbursement is concluded on W. P. A. But what are the facts?

The Secretary says the report for which I am asking would—Require the undivided attention of the entire Comptroller's division for about 6 weeks.

But what does the Comptroller say? That it would take his entire division—which counts some 4,500 persons—6 weeks? Oh, no! In a letter to Representative JOHN TABER, dated March 26, 1936, he says the list of beneficiaries can be compiled—

From the punch cards retained by the Division of Disbursement, Treasury Department, which were used to prepare the payment checks.

And how long would that take? An "entire division" for "6 weeks"? Oh, no! He says the primary operation would take 10 operators and machines just 17 days of 7 hours each; or, if the machines be worked in three shifts, as is often the practice, it would take 10 operators and machines about 1 week. The subsequent labor, to conclude the compilation, would be comparatively simple and would interfere with nothing.

No, Mr. President, the time and labor element presents no insurmountable obstacle if it be decided that Congress and the country are entitled to some small degree of intimate information regarding the disbursement of the largest single sum of money ever disbursed by a nonelected officer of government, solely upon his own discretion and without public report respecting its identified destination.

Even if the task were as burdensome as the Secretary laboriously tries to suggest, that would be no reason for secrecy. The very size of the distribution would seem, at least to some of us, to emphasize the size of the challenge. One does not need to question the integrity of the distribution—which I categorically do not—in order to sustain a belief that the wisdom of the distribution, involving hundreds of thousands of decisions by hastily appointed subordinates, should pass in review for the benefit of whatever information it may disclose bearing upon continued operation of a farm-benefit plan.

So, Mr. President, I repeat my belief that the Secretary's first excuse for avoiding the issue is irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial.

Now for his second and only other excuse. I quote the Associated Press out of Washington for March 25:

The Secretary said both the "commercial people and the political people" had asked repeatedly for names of contract signers and amounts of benefit payments made, and that the A. A. A. had a steadfast rule of silence for the protection of individuals.

It seems to me that this reason is even more naive than the first. I would be the last to withdraw legitimate "protection for the individual", and I commend this sudden and wholly unexpected zeal in his behalf from this wholly unanticipated source. But in this instance it is misplaced zeal. No individual who draws subsidies from the Public Treasury—no matter how inherently worthy his cause or classification—is entitled to immunity from public scrutiny upon this score. Every penny going out of the Public Treasury is a matter of legitimate public concern. It is doubly a matter of public concern, and most emphatically a matter of congressional concern, when a billion dollars leaves the Treasury through checks that are written by an executive bureau answerable only to its own discretion.

The Secretary speaks solicitously about his fears that "commercial people and political people" would misuse the information I am seeking. I do not know to whom he refers. If by the latter reference he means it would be politically dangerous to let the information out, he may be right. He has all the information. I have only a very small fragment of it. He is in much better position to judge than am I. But I respectfully suggest that dangers are relative, and it would seem to me to be far more dangerous to leave public opinion at the mercy of the countless stories regarding extravagant farm-benefit payments, which have run up and down the land for 2 years, than to bring the true facts out into the open.

I remind the Senate that I have not invited its action on the basis of any of this gossip, although I have received literally hundreds of letters suggesting hundreds of situations, episodes, and incidents which might well be the basis of comment, which I withhold, because I insist upon clinging to the things I can prove.

I have presented three specific exhibits which I am prepared to prove any time, anywhere, when the issue is joined. I have not said even that there is anything necessarily wrong about these three cases. I say simply that they raise a question of public policy which ought to be liquidated. I say simply that the Senate is entitled to the full facts. Then let the facts speak for themselves. They may eloquently vindicate the Department of Agriculture and its A. A. A. administration. If they will, I fail to appreciate why their production should be opposed on the Secretary's plea that "a rule of silence is necessary for the protection of individuals."

My resolution is not asking for information regarding the vast multitude of benefit payments going to the vast majority of farmers. The average corn-hog benefit check in Iowa was less than $400. These farmers are still "protected"—to use the Secretary's sympathetic word—under the terms of my resolution. But I submit that the beneficiary in another State who collected $219,825 in 2 years for not raising 14,587 hogs on 445 acres is manifestly amply able to take care of himself without the need of any secretarial "protection." And how many more are there in this favored class? And why?

The average cotton contract throughout the South is under $1,500. My resolution does not ask for their disclosure—although I know of no good reason why any Government subsidy should be a secret. The Secretary is "protecting"—his word—the beneficiary who collected $168,000 for not planting 7,000 acres. I do not believe it will be seriously argued that such beneficiaries as these require any "protection" from anybody. Is this an isolated case? Who knows? The Secretary does. Must the rest of us—and particularly the legislative arm of government, which is supposed to control the public purse—go permanently uninformed?

The average wheat contract in Kansas runs in the neighborhood of $800. My resolution leaves all such contracts as secret as the day they were made. The so-called little farmer has nothing to fear from these disclosures. Indeed, my mail during the last week strongly suggests that the little farmer would immensely like to know the full facts. He is interested in finding out about the bigger beneficiary who collected $78,638 in 65 wheat checks in 2 years.

Perhaps it is all just the pro-rata operation of the basic plan. I make no charges. I simply assert the importance of knowing these larger facts for whatever bearing they may have upon our subsequent legislative grants for farm relief. I am sure the Secretary, upon reflection, will not assert a necessity that these larger beneficiaries must huddle beneath the protecting wing of his "steadfast silence" in order to be saved.

Please note that I do not hear my figures questioned. These gentlemen at the other end of the Avenue evidently know exactly what it is I am talking about. In this connection I should like to propound another question to them.

Benefit payments to domestic sugar-beet farmers are being sharply curtailed today—cut back to a basis which violates the moral obligation involved in a benefit-payment plan which was specifically substituted for a reduction in the sugar tariff. These farmers now have neither the tariff nor the full payments intended to be substituted therefor. This is one point where the Secretary's "protection"—his word—is conspicuous by its absence. As a "protectionist" the Secretary picks and chooses the beneficiaries of his grace. In the face of this particularly acute situation, I should like to submit this question:

Is it or is it not true that a great New York bank collected $705,488.66 as its residuary share of A. A. A. benefit payments to one Puerto Rican sugar operation in 1 year?

Then here is an exceedingly interesting corollary question: Is it or is it not true, that a Puerto Rican sugar company received $961,064 in 1934-35 as compensation for restricting crops; and that this company concurrently increased its capital stock by a split-up of shares; increased its stock from 70,000 shares selling in the neighborhood of $160 per share—or a market value of $11,200,000—to 700,000 shares selling this week in the neighborhood of $40 per share—or a market value of $28,000,000?

I do not assert the fact. I ask the question with considerable assurance that it is the fact.

Are these pertinent considerations, Mr. President, for the information of the Senate? Do they not involve serious questions of public policy? Shall they be left to mystifying speculation? Is it an answer for the distinguished Secretary of Agriculture to say that he is too busy to inform the Senate or that somebody needs "protection"?

There is no reason why this resolution should invite a spirit of controversy. The Secretary of Agriculture has administered an enormous responsibility. He has labored under tremendous pressure. He has been pioneering new fields. It is to be expected that the new system should have disclosed many flaws. Our problem—and his—is to profit by any lessons which hard experience may have taught. The inquiry should proceed in a spirit of cooperation. Nothing of value is gained by evasion or secrecy.

Mr. President, I make this additional statement and the additional suggestion that I am highly hopeful that the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry will find it possible to report the resolution favorably so that the facts may be available to the Congress and the country.

STOCKYARDS AND MEAT PACKING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1424) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] to recommit the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	La Follette	Reynolds
Ashurst	Copeland	Lewis	Robinson
Austin	Couzens	Logan	Russell
Bachman	Davis	Loneragan	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Donahay	Long	Sheppard
Bilbo	Duffy	McGill	Shipstead

Bone	Frazier	McNary	Steiner
Borah	George	Maloney	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Gibson	Metcalf	Townsend
Bulkeley	Glass	Minton	Truman
Bulow	Guffey	Moore	Tydings

Capper	Hayden	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Caraway	Holt	Overton	White
Carey	Johnson	Pittman
Chavez	Keyes	Pope
Clark	King	Radcliffe

Mr. LEWIS. I rise to reannounce the absence of certain Senators, and the reasons therefor, as given by me upon the previous roll call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the recommitment of the bill. On that question, the yeas and nays have been demanded. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I desire to make a very brief statement.

I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and attended the hearings which were held on this bill in 1934. At that time we had a great amount of evidence from managers and members of cooperative livestock organizations in favor of the bill. I can refer Senators to several places in the hearings where these men stated that direct buying was responsible for reducing the market price of hogs and cattle, and I think they are correct.

As the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and others have pointed out, the open markets, the regular markets which are under the supervision of the Agricultural Department under the Packers and Stockyards Act, set the price for hogs and cattle by competitive bids. The direct buyer goes out and buys on that market price; but the products which the buyer gets at these concentration markets or out on the farm are not in competition with the products at the market that makes the prices of the hogs and cattle. Therefore, it seems to me this measure should be given full consideration by the Senate, and not recommitted.

There is no question in my mind but that direct buying has had the effect of putting out of business practically all the cooperative livestock selling organizations. In North Dakota we had a great many cooperative livestock shipping associations, largely under the Farmers' Union organization. I think practically every one of them has been put out of business because of direct buying. There is such a great amount of direct buying that the shipping associations could not exist.

The Mistletoe yard at Kansas City has been used as an example, and I think it is a very good one. Through direct buying they not only get the best livestock, the best hogs, and the best cattle for the ready market, for butchering, but they thereby take that livestock out of competition with those that go into the open market which makes the price.

So I hope this measure may be further considered in the Senate and not recommitted.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate and delay a vote on the bill at this time. Merely in order that the RECORD may show the sentiment of my State concerning the bill, I desire to have printed as a part of my remarks a letter from the president of the New Mexico Cattle Growers Association. I desire to add that in order that the bill may have further study and consideration, especially in connection with the bill introduced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY], I trust the motion to recommit will be adopted.

I also send to the desk and ask to have printed a resolution adopted by the Cattle Growers Association of my State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter and resolution will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter and resolution are as follows:

THE NEW MEXICO CATTLE GROWERS ASSOCIATION,
Albuquerque, N. Mex., January 24, 1936.

HON. CARL A. HATCH,

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HATCH: We are enclosing, herewith, resolution adopted at the annual convention of the New Mexico Cattle Growers Association last year, mentioning the Capper-Hope-Wearin bills and registering our strongest opposition to them as well as any legislation curtailing the free marketing of livestock.

We give below specific reasons for being opposed to the revised Capper bill, S. 1424:

(1) We are opposed to the alternate definition of a stockyard in section 302 (2) on page 5.

We believe this would take under control many feeding and concentration points in the West to the distinct disadvantage of the livestock industry.

(2) We are opposed to paragraph (1) on page 2, where it provides that a packer may not purchase or acquire directly or indirectly livestock for any purpose other than the slaughter and processing thereof in plants owned or controlled by them. There is such a situation at Houston, Tex., where the big packers keep buyers and make deals with local packing houses.

(3) We are opposed to section 3 on page 6, which, in our opinion, in connection with the new definition of a stockyard under section 302 would discourage trading operations by legitimate buyers of feeder stock at railroad points where livestock is fed en route to market.

(4) We are very fearful of the effects of section 304 (a) on page 7. We do not want our cattle graded before sale, because in the case of big runs it would be entirely possible for tremendous delays and expensive shrinkage to occur while waiting for the official grader. We do not understand the proviso in the same section, that the Secretary is not empowered to employ people to do this work; hence it would seem well to leave out the whole section.

We would call your attention to the great danger of amendments being added either in the House or the Senate to include the more vicious provisions of the original Capper bill.

The amendments which the Packers and Stock Yards Administration desire, and which they feel are needed better to enforce the act, are introduced in entirely separate bills—H. R. 8051, by Mr. JONES, in the House, and S. 3036, by Mr. MURPHY, in the Senate.

We are urging, therefore, that the entire Capper bill be killed and that such portions of the administration bill as may be desirable be allowed to pass.

Very truly yours,

LEE S. EVANS, President.

[Annual convention of the New Mexico Cattle Growers Association, Roswell, N. Mex., Mar. 25 and 26, 1935]

MARKETING LEGISLATION

Whereas the Capper-Hope-Wearin bills now submitted in Congress constitute an attempt on the part of livestock commission men and public stockyards interests to curtail the freedom of marketing of livestock by producers and deprive them of their constitutional rights to market their product in accordance with their best judgment: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we register our strongest opposition to these bills, or to any similar legislation curtailing the free marketing of livestock.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have here a letter from Mr. J. M. Macfarlane, president of one of the leading livestock organizations of the West. In his letter, which is dated February 27 of this year, he states:

We are opposed to the Capper bill, S. 1424, and especially object to the new definition of stockyards contained in section 302

(a) (2), the language of which is so broad as to include practically every railroad feeding point and cause them to take out a license and be put under the Stockyards and Packers Act.

We also object to an excise tax on cattle to pay Corn Belt farmers for cutting down their acreage—

This is not quite germane to the bill under consideration—when such acreage taken out of corn will be put into grass to come in competition with western livestock growers, and we do not think we should be called on to pay these Middle West corn growers. The cattlemen are willing to pay their own way, but do not want to pay for somebody to come into competition with them.

Mr. James A. Hooper, secretary of the Utah Wool Growers' Association, writes me, in part, as follows:

During the close of the last session of Congress, Senate bill No. 1424 was reported out of the committee favorably. We were very much surprised that this bill received a favorable report from the Agriculture Committee, as the bill would place a serious handicap on the marketing of livestock, and would, without a doubt, result in less competition and therefore lower prices.

I have a letter from the American National Livestock Association enclosing copy of a resolution protesting against the pending bill; and the following paragraph is found in the communication:

The entire western livestock industry deplors this effort of the middlemen to attempt to legislate to restrict the freedom of livestock marketing, to reduce competition for our feeder and fat livestock, and to add an unnecessary and unwarranted burden and cost to the administration of the Packers and Stockyards Act.

Mr. President, I shall submit a few words in opposition to the measure before us. It seeks to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921. It would multiply the number of points that would be constituted as public markets and regulated in detail by the Secretary of Agriculture under an extremely broad grant of power.

The bill is opposed by 24 livestock and agricultural organizations in 13 livestock-producing States, including the American National Livestock Association, the National Wool Growers' Association, and the American Farm Bureau Federation, Western Regional Conference.

Some amendments to the act of 1921 are needed. They have been carefully prepared and are offered in the measure which has been introduced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY].

The bill is sponsored by stockyard companies and commission firms located at the large markets. They are the ones, from the information which I can obtain, who are pushing the pending bill.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President—

Mr. KING. The Senator has spoken at great length on Friday and for some time today. I shall occupy but a few minutes; so hope the Senator will pardon me for not yielding.

The interests which are sponsoring the bill are opposed to transactions favorable to the producers and to sales and purchases in the communities and districts run to favor Chicago and a few central market points.

These interests are endeavoring to impose upon producers heavy charges for yardage and sales service and forces to collect at public markets.

The United States Livestock Association advocates this bill; as I am advised, it purports to be an organization of livestock producers, but my information is that it is largely controlled by and mainly composed of individuals connected with public stockyard marketing agencies.

The proposals carried in the pending bill were considered in an A. A. A. and N. R. A. code hearing in 1934 and tabled.

I am advised that the House Committee on Agriculture conducted hearings in 1934 and took no action, and that the Senate Committee on Agriculture held hearings in 1934 and took no action. The latter committee reported the bill in June 1935 without further hearings. Some minor changes were made, but the main provisions, in effect, were not changed.

It is argued by proponents of the bill that its purpose is to extend safeguards provided by the act of 1921 to all other points where packers buy livestock. This would mean public market regulation, registration, and extra expense at several hundred railroad livestock loading pens and other points which are used primarily for loading and holding purposes, and at which but little buying or selling is done. There are numerous railroad yards in Western States, and I know that is true in my State, at which as much as 35,000 head of sheep are handled in a season, or year.

Occasionally shippers trade between themselves at such points or make sales to packers or other buyers within the yards. There is no justification for subjecting shippers to the requirement of paying, and railroads to charging, extra expenses that would be caused by "posting" such yards under the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921, as is done for the large public markets which are markets primarily and exclusively.

Second, section 7, page 7, is a new proposal. It would require Government grading, before sale, of all livestock at the present 75 "posted" markets and at the several hundred small yards proposed to be brought under the law. The section says the Secretary "shall prescribe" rules and regulations, and so forth, governing the grading of livestock. It is provided in the bill that the Government shall not pay official graders. However, this only means that the expense of such grading would immediately be paid by someone else, but finally and inevitably paid by the producer, shipper, and for a service which he does not need nor desire.

The bill gives the Secretary of Agriculture unjustifiably broad powers over commerce in livestock, in addition to those exercised under the act of 1921.

Mr. President, I desire to read a few paragraphs from page 197 of the hearings of 1934 before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate, in which there is a quotation from the work entitled "Relationship Between Direct Purchases of Hogs and the Level of Hog Prices", by Mr. Knute Bjorka.

The task of examining these arguments is greatly lightened by the exhaustive statistical studies of the Relationship Between Direct Purchases of Hogs and the Level of Hog Prices, by Mr. Knute Bjorka. Mr. Bjorka found that hog and hog-products prices bear the same relationship to each other during the period 1926 to 1930, when direct buying by packers assumed large proportions, as during the preceding 4-year period, when there was relatively little direct buying. In regard to this point he concludes that " * * * there is no statistical evidence that the relationship between pork-product prices and hog prices has been modified since 1926, when direct buying of hogs showed marked increase."

Likewise there is no statistical evidence that direct marketing has contributed to the depression of prices of pork products. On the contrary, Bjorka's study reveals higher prices since 1926 than prevailing market conditions would lead one to expect. But in regard to this situation he states, "We are not justified in drawing the conclusion that higher prices of hogs (and consequently of pork products) as compared to estimated price during the period 1926-30 was due to the increase in the proportion of hogs bought direct. Other factors may have been responsible. It must be concluded, however, that this study yields no statistical evidence to show that the increase in direct marketing of hogs has had a depressing effect upon the level of hog prices and the price of pork products."

Mr. President, I shall not take further time in discussion of the bill. If the motion to recommit should not prevail, then I may offer further observations upon the bill before us. I hope, however, that the motion to recommit the bill will prevail.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the bill now before us, introduced by myself, was drafted by a committee made up of the presidents or other executive officers of the National Grange, the Farm Bureau Federation, the Farmers Union, and the United States Livestock Association. It was brought to me by the president of the Farmers Union with the request that it be introduced. I have no doubt, as has been said, that there are commission men in the public markets who are favorable to the proposed legislation, but they are not responsible for the bill now before the Senate. It is a demand by the farmers and stockmen for honest markets.

The Agricultural Council, which met here in January, an organization made up of representatives of every agricultural and livestock organization in the country, endorsed the bill, approved it, and urged its passage. It has had thorough consideration by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. As I have previously said, there is testimony covering something like a thousand pages touching every phase of the problem.

We are told now that we should recommit the pending bill and give consideration to the measure introduced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY]. The Senator from Iowa stated on the floor an hour ago that his bill relates to an entirely different phase of the problem of livestock marketing and does not attempt to cover the problem of direct marketing. He was absolutely correct in that statement.

I sincerely hope the bill will not be recommitted to the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FRAZIER (when Mr. NYE's name was called). On this question my colleague the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY]. If the Senator from North Dakota were present, he would vote "nay", and the Senator from Rhode Island, if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am not aware how he would vote on this question if he were present. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. BENSON], and will vote. I vote "nay." If my colleague [Mr. BENSON] were present, he would vote "nay" on this question.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following pairs on this question:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]; and

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK].

If present, the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Nevada would vote "yea", and the Senator from Oklahoma and the Senator from South Dakota would vote "nay" on this question.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] has a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY].

Mr. BILBO. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON]. Therefore I do not vote on this question.

Mr. BARKLEY (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], who is absent. Not being able to obtain a transfer, I withdraw my vote. Otherwise I should allow my vote in the negative to stand.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] are detained from the Senate on account of illness.

I also announce that the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BENSON], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are unavoidably detained.

I further announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] are detained in important committee meetings.

STOCKYARDS AND MEAT PACKING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1424) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute, being the bill pending before the committee introduced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY], being Senate bill No. 3036.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas offers an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which will be read:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That section 202 of the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, is hereby amended by adding thereto the following new subdivisions:

"(h) Operate any packing plant at which livestock is slaughtered in commerce unless he has registered with the Secretary, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, his name and address, the name and location of the plant, and the class of livestock slaughtered or to be slaughtered and processed therein, and unless he has filed a reasonable bond, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, to secure the performance of his financial obligations as a purchaser of livestock.

"(i) Any packer, or any officer, director, agent, or employee of a packer who violates any provisions of this section shall on conviction be fined not less than $500 nor more than $10,000, or imprisoned for not less than 6 months nor more than 5 years, or both. Each day during which such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense. This shall not in any way abridge or alter but is in addition to existing remedies."

SEC. 2. In section 203 of said act the word "packer" and related text shall be construed to denote the plural as well as the singular, and the word "shall" where it first occurs shall be construed as "may."

SEC. 3. The following new section is added to title II of said act: "Sec. 206. Any person complaining of anything done or omitted to be done by any packer or packers in violation of the provisions of this title may at any time within 9 months after the cause of action accrues file a complaint with the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall thereupon proceed in accordance with the provisions of section 309 of said act, which are hereby made applicable to any such complaint, proceeding, and order and to any suit upon any such order."

SEC. 4. The following language is added to the first sentence of section 303 of said act; "and unless he has filed a reasonable bond, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, to secure the performance of his financial obligations as a market agency or dealer."

SEC. 5. The following language is added to section 305 of said act:

"Whenever necessary the Secretary may authorize the charging and collection from owners of a reasonable fee for the inspection of brands appearing upon livestock subject to the provisions of said act for the purpose of determining the ownership of such livestock: Provided, That such fee shall not be imposed except upon written request made to the Secretary by the Board of Livestock Commissioners or duly organized livestock associations of the States from which such livestock has originated or been shipped to market."

SEC. 6. In section 306 (e) strike out the last sentence and insert in lieu thereof: "If any such hearing involving a higher rate or charge cannot be completed within such period of suspension, the Secretary may from time to time continue the suspension for further periods of 30 days until the hearing is concluded, except that the total period of suspension may not exceed 180 days and if the hearing is not concluded within said period the proposed change in the rate, charge, regulation, or practice shall go into effect at the end of such period."

SEC. 7. Section 309 of said act is amended by striking out the words "ninety days" in subdivision (a) and inserting in lieu thereof the words "nine months" and by adding to subdivision (f) the following sentence: "The orders, writs, and processes of the district courts may in such cases run, be served, and be returnable anywhere in the United States."

SEC. 8. Amend section 312 (b) by adding thereto the following: "When it appears to the Secretary that such action is necessary to prevent injury to private property or to protect the public interests he may, pending the conclusion of such proceeding, issue a temporary cease and desist order which shall not continue in effect for a longer period than 6 months. The provisions of this act respecting final cease and desist orders shall be applicable to such temporary orders."

SEC. 9. The following new sections are added to title III of said act:

"SEC. 317. (a) Whenever the Secretary, after notice and opportunity for hearing, finds that any market agency or dealer is unable to meet his financial obligations as a market agency or dealer as they become due in the ordinary course of his business, or has failed to file a reasonable bond as required by the regulations, he may by order suspend such market agency or dealer from carrying on business as such until such time as it is shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary that such market agency or dealer has satisfied past and is able to meet future obligations and has filed such bond.

"(b) Whenever the Secretary, after notice and opportunity for hearing finds that any market agency or dealer or any officer, agent, or employee of any stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer has violated or caused to be violated any of the provisions of subdivision (f) of section 306 or section 307 or section 312, or order, rule, or regulation of the Secretary thereunder, he may by order suspend such market agency, dealer, officer, agent, or employee from carrying on or engaging in business or employment as a market agency or dealer, or officer, agent, or employee of a stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer on any stockyard subject to the provisions of this act and the Secretary may likewise suspend the conduct or operation of the business of such market agency or dealer committing such violation for a specified period not to exceed 2 years.

"(c) Any stockyard owner who violates any of the provisions of section 307 or section 312, or order, rule, or regulation of the Secretary thereunder shall on conviction be fined not less than $500 nor more than $1,000, or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both. Each day during which such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense.

"SEC. 318. (a) Whoever shall carry on or engage in business or employment as a market agency or dealer or officer, agent, or employee of a stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer after his registration has been canceled or during any period of suspension provided for by section 317 or by section 320 shall upon conviction be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

"(b) The conduct or operation of the business of any market agency or dealer after his registration has been canceled or during any period of suspension provided for by section 317 or by section 320 shall be unlawful and may be enjoined by any court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the United States, the Secretary or any party in interest.

"SEC. 319. Hereafter in any proceeding under this act inquiring into the reasonableness of any change in any rate or charge or any regulation or practice affecting such rate or charge or any new rate or charge or a new regulation or practice affecting any rate or charge for stockyard services, the burden of proof as to the reasonableness thereof shall be upon the stockyard owner or market agency against which the proceeding is directed.

"SEC. 320. The Secretary, after due notice and opportunity for a hearing, may by order cancel the registration of a market agency or dealer if he finds (a) that such market agency or dealer, or any director, officer, agent, or employee thereof, was within 2 years prior to such notice responsible in whole or in part for any violation of this act, for which an order of suspension or to cease and desist may be or has been issued, or (b) that such market agency or dealer has knowingly employed in any responsible position any person made the subject of any order under section 321 hereof, or who was responsibly connected with any market agency or dealer whose registration was canceled within 2 years prior to the date of such notice, or (c) that such market agency or dealer has conducted or is conducting the business of any market agency or dealer against whom an order of suspension is in effect. Pending the hearing, such registration may by order be suspended for a period not to exceed 60 days. Any such cancellation shall be effective for a period of 1 year and shall be applicable on all stockyards subject to the act.

"SEC. 321. Whenever the Secretary, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, shall find that any director, officer, agent, or employee of any stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer was responsible in whole or in part for any violation of this act, he may issue an order directing all stockyard owners, market agencies, and dealers subject to this act to refrain from employing or having any dealings with such officer, agent, or employee for a reasonable specified period not to exceed 2 years."

SEC. 10. Amend section 401 of said act to read:

"Every packer, stockyard owner, market agency, and dealer shall keep such accounts, records, and memoranda as fully and correctly disclose all transactions involved in his business, including the true ownership of such business by stockholding or otherwise. The Secretary is authorized to require annual reports from every packer, stockyard owner, market agency, and dealer subject to the provisions of this act in such form or forms and relating to such matters and things connected with his business as the Secretary may prescribe. For the purposes of this act the Secretary, or his duly authorized agent or agents, shall at all times during the regular hours of business have access to all accounts, records, and memoranda, including all documents, papers, and correspondence, on the date that this act becomes a law or thereafter existing and kept, or required to be kept, by packers, stockyard owners, market agencies, and dealers subject to this act. The Secretary may prescribe the manner and form in which such accounts, records, and memoranda shall be kept, and the matters and things connected with the business of such person which such accounts, records, and memoranda shall disclose. Thereafter, any such person who shall willfully refuse to submit to the Secretary, or to any of his authorized agents, for the purpose of inspection of any accounts, records, and memoranda, including all documents, papers, and correspondence, in his possession or within his control; or who fails to keep accounts, records, and memoranda in the manner and form prescribed or approved by the Secretary, shall be deemed guilty of an offense against the United States, and shall upon conviction in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 3 years, or both."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY].

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, I introduced Senate bill 3036 in good faith at the suggestion of the Department of Agriculture. It has now been offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] as a substitute for the Capper bill. My bill is designed to correct faults in the Packers and Stockyards Act, which correction is deemed essential by the Solicitor's office of the Department. The bill does not go into the subject of direct marketing. The Capper bill is primarily concerned with direct marketing. The bills are not at cross purposes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the Senator please explain to the Senate what direct marketing is and what he wants to do about it?

Mr. MURPHY. That would carry me into an exposition of the terms of the Capper bill. I think I have considerable familiarity with the provisions of that bill. In effect, according to the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture, it would accomplish the posting of some 600 additional stockyards throughout the country. A stockyard now is posted under the Packers and Stockyards Act and subject to the regulations of that act when it contains in excess of 20,000 square feet of land. The Capper bill would supplement that provision of the Packers and Stockyards Act and would subject to its terms all yards handling 35,000 head of cattle or other livestock a year. It would bring the other 600 yards under the same supervision as the central yards now have. The design of the Capper bill is to secure for the producer of livestock a larger net return than he now receives.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I do not want to annoy the Senator, but will he yield again at that point?

Mr. MURPHY. I am very glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. When the Senator says 600 additional yards will be posted, does he mean that they will be brought under control of the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. MURPHY. Exactly.

Mr. CONNALLY. The expenses and charges and all that sort of thing involved in posting and regulating the 600 additional yards would come out of the producers of livestock through fees and charges, would they not?

Mr. MURPHY. That is the conclusion.

Mr. CONNALLY. How would the Secretary of Agriculture control and regulate and supervise 600 additional marketing points without any expense either to the Government or the producer? Somebody would have to pay those expenses, would they not?

Mr. MURPHY. I believe it is a weakness of the Capper bill that it contains the provision quoted by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] in his discussion preceding the vote on the motion to recommit. The Capper bill provides, in section 304A, as follows:

Sec. 304-A. The Secretary shall prescribe, after hearing, reasonable rules and regulations relating to the weighing, fill, dock, or grades of livestock in commerce, and it shall be the duty of every packer, stockyard owner, market agency, and dealer to comply with such rules and regulations so prescribed by the Secretary: Provided, however, That nothing in this section contained shall authorize or empower the Secretary to employ or designate any person or persons to weigh, fill, dock, or grade livestock.

That seems to me to create an impossible situation in its assumption that the Secretary of Agriculture could, with the appropriation now available to him, supervise 600 additional yards. I do not know what was the purpose of the Senator from Kansas in limiting the Secretary in the matter of expenditure. Obviously, to my mind, it would be an impossibility for him to accomplish that supervision with the personnel now available to him. That is a weakness of the bill but one which does not, as I review it, go to the principle of the measure.

Inasmuch as the Senator from Texas has asked me what the Capper bill does, I shall proceed further.

Packers now own stockyards where they buy cattle or hogs or sheep. Iowa has a number of what are called concentration yards. A farmer will telephone to the representative of a concentration yard and ask him the price for hogs at that yard. The owner of the yard will answer; and the farmer, as he elects, will or will not send his hogs to that stockyard. He may send them to a central market. There are other yards which are frankly auction yards, where the stock is auctioned, and a packer may bid against another for the stock, but as a rule there is no competitive bidding by packers.

The other market, the central market, has commission merchants who represent the producers of the stock, and who are offering it for sale. In these markets a charge is imposed by the commission merchants. Other charges are imposed for feeding. These charges are paid by the producer of the livestock. In the yards which I have described as concentration yards, and in the yards which I have described as auction yards, the charges are not imposed except as to the yard owners' flat charge.

The presumption is indulged that with this bill passed, the livestock broker will find a way into these other yards, and that the system now effective in central yards will become effective in the concentration yards and in the auction yards. The charges to result probably will be borne by the farmer. The question then arises whether or not these additional costs which he will bear will be returned to him as a result of this proposed new system in higher net prices for his stock.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I am interested in the Senator's observations about the so-called auction yards. How are those sales conducted, and who pays for the sales operation? How is that charge allocated, and to whom; or is it all paid by one of the parties?

Mr. MURPHY. The owner of the yard collects a commission.

Mr. BONE. It is in the nature of a commission transaction, then?

Mr. MURPHY. Yes. Those charges now are not regulated by law.

Mr. BONE. I understand.

Mr. MURPHY. In the central market, however, they are regulated by law. In other words, it is a thing to which the producer of livestock assents. It is just a custom which has grown up, I presume.

Mr. BONE. Is that a very sizeable charge, or of what proportions is it?

Mr. MURPHY. It has not been considered an unreasonable charge, as I understand, in those particular yards. In the case of the central yards, the Secretary of Agriculture has found it necessary to impose regulations as respects those charges.

The point about the matter is that sometime after the Packers and Stockyards Act was enacted, this business of direct buying began. Theretofore, all stock had been shipped to central markets. The business of direct buying grew up. It developed tremendously in Iowa. I am satisfied from my own investigation that that was not solely a consequence of posting the yards at Chicago, Sioux City, Kansas City, or other points contiguous to Iowa. The freight rate was changed, making it cheaper to ship dressed meat out of Iowa to the eastern markets than to ship the animal on foot. That gave Iowa packers an advantage in the market over the big packers of the central market points, so that the big packers had to go out into Iowa. They bought plants in my State and went into the business of buying hogs direct, slaughtering some in Iowa, and supplying their plants in Chicago or Sioux City or Omaha in part with hogs bought direct. It was much easier for a farmer to put his hogs in a truck and truck them to market than to put them in a car and ship them to Chicago or Omaha or Sioux City and send somebody along with them, and direct marketing flourished.

However, the direct marketing system has developed to such an extent that the supply of hogs going into these central markets has been constantly diminishing, so the question is raised whether or not in the course of time the central market where prices are supposed to be fixed by competitive bidding will be destroyed. The thought in the minds of the framers of the bill is that when there is kept out of the Chicago or other central market approximately 42 percent of the hog slaughterings of a given day, and 20 percent of the cattle, and those percentages are brought in direct, circuitously, so to speak, around the central yards and into the packing plants, it destroys the urgency on the packers to bid for the stock that is offered in the open market, because their packing needs for the day are already in considerable measure supplied by direct purchases.

It is probably true that hogs marketed direct in Iowa net the farmer more by the amount of the charges imposed in the central market than they will net him with the Capper bill enacted unless—and this, as I see it, is the pivotal point in the whole thing—unless as a result of bidding in these newly posted yards the price in the central markets, the now posted yards, is raised.

Mr. President, I have no desire whatsoever to speak in words of disparagement of the Capper bill. I am supporting it without a deep conviction that it will accomplish the end sought. I am not sold on the idea that our Iowa hog farmer is going to be a great deal better off by reason of the enactment of the bill. Nevertheless I shall go along with the bill in the hope that the competitive bidding which may result in the newly posted yards will increase the net price which the farmer will receive.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the Senator explain how these points will become any more competitive under this bill than they now are? Are they not entirely free, and may not anybody go in and buy and pay the highest market price? How is the restriction of a market going to make it more competitive? I should like to have the Senator explain that.

Mr. MURPHY. If the Senator please, the restrictions on the market are all made in the presumed interest of the producer of livestock. One is free to send his stock to a given yard today. It may, however, be a yard owned by Armour; it may be a yard owned by a private company; it may be a yard owned by Swift. These yards will be opened to competitive bidding.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let us take the case of some of the yards that are to be brought in under this bill that are not now under it. Take the case of the small concentration points: Are not they an entirely free market? How will the enactment of this bill put more competition there? Will it not lessen competition?

Mr. MURPHY. If it results in bringing in the commission merchant representing the producer, bringing in the speculator in livestock, and causing bidding which now does not prevail—because in many instances there is a single buyer—if it causes bidding, then it is assumed that it will get the producer a higher price than would otherwise be paid.

Mr. CONNALLY. If it will; but tell us how it will.

Mr. MURPHY. By bringing in the livestock speculator.

Mr. CONNALLY. How will it bring him in?

Mr. MURPHY. The livestock speculators are not there now, Mr. President. They are in the central market. This bill gives them an incentive to go into yards not now posted. But the expected largest gain will be from increased speculative buying in central markets freed from the threat of direct purchases.

Mr. CONNALLY. They are free now to go anywhere in the United States and buy cattle at any place where they can find them, or buy hogs at any place where they can find them. How is the enactment of this bill going to make them do any better than that?

Mr. MURPHY. I shall revert to the original explanation of the matter, which is this:

The whole theory of commission merchants' representation is that the commission man handling the livestock of the farmer will get a higher price than the farmer can get; that in the central market there are also the speculators in livestock, and that these speculators oblige the packers to bid a higher price than they otherwise would bid by holding the stock off the market. I repeat at this point that with competitive bidding at all yards, and no sales direct, prices, in the view of the proponents of this bill, will inevitably rise. I think that is the theory on which it is based. I ask the Senator from Kansas if that is a sufficient exposition, in justice to the bill?

Mr. CAPPER. I think the Senator has stated it correctly.

Mr. CONNALLY. And while they are holding them off the market the stockyard is getting a charge from them for feeding them, and they are losing weight every day.

Mr. MURPHY. That is incontrovertibly true, unless they are fed and the farmer has been disposed to feed his stock before slaughter.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator regard it as more important or beneficial to the people, say, of the State of Utah, of Colorado, or of Montana, where cattle and sheep and hogs are raised, to have an organization, call it a packers' organization or anything else, that will slaughter the animals and satisfy the domestic demands and then ship to California or Oregon or elsewhere any surplus, than to compel them to ship to Omaha or to Chicago, with a reduction in the weight of the animals during that long haul that is inevitable, with the high cost of shipping, then ship the meat back to Utah and Colorado and the other States after the animals have been slaughtered in Chicago and dressed, and pay the freight both ways?

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator I will say that my study of the bill did not reveal that it would affect the packers of his State in the respect to which he refers. I think, however, that the packers of the Senator's State come here with more or less justification with a complaint about this bill because of the provision with respect to the prohibition of feeding by packers.

Certainly, in my opinion, there is little or no justification for the packers in our part of the country going into feeding operations, and I think they ought to get out of them, but the packers in the West and Southwest are in a situation a little different. They have to feed, as I am advised, in order to assure themselves a supply of livestock at all times. If the packing plant out there wishes to operate, and there is a deficiency of hogs—if it slaughters hogs—and it cannot feed them, and there are none coming on the market, it means that they will have to go into the Omaha market and buy the hogs, ship them out there and slaughter them, with all that increased expense. Otherwise, if they were permitted to feed, most of the expense would be saved them. I will ask the Senator from Kansas if that is not an approximately correct statement.

Mr. CAPPER. I think the Senator has stated the situation about as it is. I think he has made a fair statement.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield for another question?

Mr. MURPHY. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I find that under the Capper bill it is made unlawful and a crime to—

Purchase or acquire, directly or indirectly, cattle, sheep, or swine, for the purpose, or with the intent, of feeding and fattening such livestock in order to render it suitable for slaughter—

It would be a crime for me or the Senator from Iowa to go into my State or into any State and purchase or acquire, directly or indirectly, any cattle, or sheep, or hogs, in order to feed them and to fatten them.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, that is not correct.

Mr. KING (reading):

or for any purpose other than the slaughter and processing thereof in a packing plant or plants owned, operated, or controlled, directly or indirectly, by such packer.

I ask the Senator whether he justifies legislation of that kind, and if so, where does he find legal authority to make it a crime for the Senator or myself to go and buy cattle or sheep for the purpose of fattening and feeding them?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The bill does not make it a crime for the Senator from Utah or the Senator from Iowa or any other Senator or any other individual to do what the Senator has stated. I understand it makes it a crime for the packer to do those things.

Mr. KING. Oh, no.

Mr. CAPPER. It undertakes to say that the feeding of livestock is the producer's business, the farmer's business, and not the business of the packer.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understood this was aimed at the custom of the packers of establishing their own feeding stalls or feeding establishments, and feeding the stock themselves preparatory to slaughter.

Mr. CAPPER. In competition with the producer, the farmer.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. One other question, if the Senator will yield further.

The Senator from Iowa suggested a while ago, in respect to the western packers, who were situated differently from those in Chicago, that unless they fed their stock, their hogs or cattle, they would be required to go into the Omaha market and obtain them. Of course, if they do feed them, they feed them, I suppose, in the section of the country where they buy them. They establish these feeding places out in the West. Is that correct?

Mr. MURPHY. That is as I understand it to be.

Mr. BARKLEY. Why should they be required to abandon that market simply because they might not be permitted to feed the cattle? They could still buy fattened stock in that section of the country without having to go to the Omaha market to supply their demands.

Mr. MURPHY. The representation is that there are periods when the stock is not being offered, and in order that they may assure themselves a supply and be able to take care of their trade they have to feed, and they make the representation that whenever anybody is ready to assure them a supply of livestock they are ready to quit their feeding operations.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield.

Mr. KING. I revert again to paragraph (i) on page 2, and I insist that under the reading of that paragraph it is a crime for anyone to—

Purchase or acquire, directly or indirectly, cattle, sheep, or swine for the purpose or with the intent of feeding and fattening such livestock in order to render it suitable for slaughter—

That is a crime. That is the end of that sentence so far as the significance of that provision is concerned. Then it makes it a crime for him to do either of those things—or for any purpose other than the slaughtering and processing thereof in a packing plant or plants owned, operated, or controlled, directly or indirectly, by such a packer.

It is a crime to buy for the purpose of feeding and fattening livestock.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, these subparagraphs refer back to certain denunciations in the original packers act, and I understand that the previous part of that section which denounces certain things applies to packers.

Mr. CAPPER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. We cannot read this without reading the previous part of that section.

Mr. CAPPER. I think we all remember that the packers were attempting some years ago to engage in all kinds of business which might have some relation to the buying and selling of livestock, and they finally entered into a consent decree in which they agreed not to take on other businesses. But it is found that now they are setting up private stockyards, in which they engage in the feeding of livestock in competition with the producer, in competition with the farmer.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from Kansas would tell me how it is in competition with the producer. Do not the packers buy the feed from the producer?

Mr. CAPPER. A large part of the profit is in the feeding of livestock.

Mr. GEORGE. Where does the packer get the feed with which he feeds the livestock? It is a fact that it is not possible to have hogs in every section of the country ready for the market at all times unless someone bears the burden of carrying the hogs and feeding them. It is just a plain matter of business, and there is no other way of carrying on that operation. If somebody who is organized on behalf of the producers, even though a packing house has made a contribution of land, or put a fence up for them, does not do something about the matter, there is not much chance of having the hogs fed in some sections of the country during periods of the year so as to have them ready for the market. That is the case. Yet it is proposed by the pending bill so to provide that nobody may actually feed his hogs if any packer has contributed anything to the concentration pens or anything else where the hogs are concentrated or fed. Thus, instead of helping the hog producers of the Southeast, it would practically destroy them.

Mr. CAPPER. It is found that the packer is using this feeding device as a means for manipulating the market.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no, Mr. President; that is just one of the bugaboos seen here by Senator after Senator. It is a plain business proposition that someone must furnish the feed. Nobody has the feed except the producer. It does not matter to whom the producer sells the feed. He is furnishing the feed, and the cattle and the hogs are using the feed. If it is all simply a conspiracy on the part of the packers to control prices, it seems to me they are subject to prosecution under the existing law.

There certainly cannot be a free flow of hogs in some sections of the country through some periods of the year unless someone feeds the hogs. Are we to outlaw every concentration point, and every feed point, and every little cooperative organization which is handling the hogs and getting them ready for the market, simply because the packers have made some contribution to them? The packers are interested in developing hog raising. They are interested in increasing the production of hogs in my State and in other States. They naturally make their contributions to anything which will increase the volume and the flow of hogs to the market. If the concentration points and cooperative organizations are to be outlawed simply because the packers make some contributions, and it should be said, "Oh, no; they must come under the act; they must be regulated; they must be controlled under the Packers' Act", hog raising in sections of the country will be crippled.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator desire to proceed with his remarks, or would he prefer to suspend now and resume in the morning?

Mr. MURPHY. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that I rose to answer an inquiry of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. I shall be glad to conclude whatever I have to say in the morning.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before the Senator relinquishes the floor, pursuing the colloquy of a moment ago, I simply desire to refer to the fact that section 202 of the Packers and Stockyards Act denounces certain things that may not be done by the packers. Section 202 says that it shall be unlawful for any packer to do certain things which are described in subsections (a) to (g). Subsection (g) is stricken out in the pending bill but certain other subsections are added. All the prohibitions contained in the bill apply to the packers.

DEATH OF JOHN SNURE

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. KING. The morning press brought us the sad news of the passing of one who enjoyed the confidence, and, indeed, the affection of all who had the privilege of an intimate acquaintance with him.

For many years John Snure occupied a position in the Senate gallery, where we daily had the privilege of meeting and conferring with him. He was a man of integrity, of high ideals, and was an honor to the great profession which he adorned. He was not only a great writer and journalist, but he was a profound student of public questions, and had a broad and comprehensive knowledge of the social, economic, and political problems of the period in which he labored. His love of truth, his sincerity, his unquestioned honesty and probity earned for him the confidence and, as I have indicated, the esteem and affection of an ever-widening circle of individuals. He wrote and spoke the truth and correctly recorded public events fearlessly and honestly.

We do well to pause in this busy and hurrying life to pay tribute to the splendid and fine character of one who has left us. I pay tribute to him and join with the thousands who mourn his untimely death.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to approve what has just been said by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] concerning Mr. John Snure. Senators have an opportunity to form a conclusion as to the character and disposition not only of their colleagues, but also of those who are less intimately connected with the work of the Senate.

The press gallery has many men serving the great newspapers and news agencies of the Nation who are conscientious, truthful, and fair. Senators learn to respect and admire one who demonstrates that disposition and those attributes of character.

I believe we would all concur in the opinion that Mr. John Snure never knowingly misstated, and never misrepresented public men, or the incidents that occur in public affairs. He was kind, generous, and courteous. I am sure we are all appreciative of the tribute which was paid him by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I, too, was sad this morning when I read in the press the announcement of the passing of John Snure, whom I have known for the 19 years of my service in this body. He was, like most of the newspaper "boys", reliable and well informed, and never imparted any knowledge which was given in confidence. He was able, and in many respects typified the best that could be found in newspapermen. I join my colleagues on the Democratic side in expressing deep regret at his passing, and I am sure I speak for all the Republican Members of the Chamber.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to join the able Senators who have preceded me in their tribute to Mr. Snure. Since I was a Member of the House I have known him, and I may say that the eminent Senators who have eulogized him correctly portray him as a gentleman in manner, courteous in his profession, ever faithful as historian, and deserving, sir, the tribute which has come from the eminent Senators who have spoken.

I conclude with the wish that his son, who has taken up the journalistic profession, may realize in his own reputation and achievement that which his father earned—the respect of his fellow men, and the praise of eminent men in high place.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, I rise at this time to say a few words in tribute to our departed friend.

John Snure's journalistic career covered a period of many years in Iowa. I was contemporaneous with him in newspaper work. He was above all a modest man. He was earnest. He was sincere. He was untiring in his industry. He carried in his heart a deep devotion for right and an abiding sympathy with the poor and the oppressed.

I shall always remember with delight that upon my coming to Washington our meeting was as a reunion of long parted friends. I had counsel from him many times on to the wisdom of legislation proposed here, and that counsel was invariably based upon his judgment of the right. Journalism has lost in him an exemplary representative of its best ethics.

REPLACEMENT OF BRIDGES DESTROYED BY FLOOD IN MASSACHUSETTS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the Committee on Commerce has favorably reported House bill 11945, authorizing the Commonwealth of Massachusetts to reconstruct some bridges over navigable rivers which have been washed out by the recent floods. I have conferred with the leaders on both sides of the Chamber, and they both think immediate action should be taken, without placing the bill on the calendar. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bill be laid before the Senate and that immediate action be taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11945) granting the consent of Congress to the Department of Public Works of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for the construction, maintenance, and operation of certain free highway bridges to replace bridges destroyed by flood in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that nominations of postmasters on the calendar may be confirmed en bloc.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MARCH 30, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, hide not Thy face from us and be not silent. Thou art our God, in which we trust and from whom we seek security, rest, and refreshment. Thou art unspeakably satisfying, a benediction, and a triumph. Before we go forth to the duties that await us we most earnestly desire to thank Thee for Him who has shown us a life of lowly duty, unselfish labor, and consecrated sorrow; bid us to rise up and walk in His way. Grant that Thy name on earth may be everywhere honored, Thy kingdom everywhere come, and the whole world filled with Thy glory. Do Thou guide and refresh our thoughts as we labor for the elevation of our people, and when the evening shadows fall may we have great peace. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a resolution passed by the Boston Northeastern Regional Meeting of the United States Conference of Mayors.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

RESOLUTION ON W. P. A. UNANIMOUSLY ADOPTED AT BOSTON NORTHEASTERN REGIONAL MEETING OF UNITED STATES CONFERENCE OF MAYORS, MARCH 21, 1936

Whereas we have met in formal sessions of the Northeastern Regional Section of the United States Conference of Mayors and have received first-hand reports from the chief executives of the cities of Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Maine, New Hampshire, New York, and New Jersey with regard to the pressing problems of caring for the unemployed needy in these communities; and

Whereas these reports have revealed that, though there has been an evident improvement in general business conditions, still the numbers on relief and in need of aid have not been substantially reduced; and

Whereas the present W. P. A. program has been productive of useful and constructive works of lasting benefit and permanent value to our communities; and

Whereas considerable alarm has been felt over the announced reductions in W. P. A. quotas: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved (as the consensus of the northeastern regional section), That the President and executive committee of the United States Conference of Mayors be instructed to continue their efforts to insure an extension of the W. P. A. program, which is absolutely essential to provide adequate care and assistance for the unemployed employables of our Nation. It is the hope of this group that industry will absorb much of the surplus labor during the coming months and lessen the problem of relief, but until such does take place, we must carry on as in the past. In this connection we authorize the president and executive committee to place at the disposal of private industry all the informational facilities of the Conference of Mayors in any plan which industry may develop in accordance with the message of President Roosevelt on March 18 to effect increased employment during the coming months; be it further Resolved, That it be recommended to the Works Progress Administrator that W. P. A. quotas be not reduced except as workers are actually placed in other jobs.

(Major cities in New York, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Maine, Rhode Island, Vermont, and New Hampshire represented.)

HEALTH AUTHORITIES OF FOUR STATES UNITE FOR ELIMINATION OF STREAM POLLUTION

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing correspondence between myself and Dr. Arthur E. McClue, State health commissioner, and a resolution adopted by the health departments of West Virginia, Virginia, Pennsylvania, and Maryland.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, the recent destructive floods throughout many sections of the country struck with devastating effect the States of West Virginia, Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania. In this connection we are faced with the need for immediate action, not only to bring about control of rivers and streams in this important territory but there ties in closely the proposed program for elimination of pollution. Health authorities recently joined together in an effort to focus the attention of our officials toward the pressing problem of carrying forward a comprehensive program which will aid in combating disease which results from stream pollution.

Correspondence between Dr. Arthur E. McClue, State health commissioner of West Virginia, and myself on this subject and a resolution approved by the health officials of these four States are included herewith:

MARCH 30, 1936.

Dr. ARTHUR E. MCCLUE,

State Health Commissioner, Charleston, W. Va.

MY DEAR DR. MCCLUE: I deeply appreciate your letter of March 26 relative to the program under way for improving conditions in the Potomac River Basin.

I want to congratulate the health officials of Maryland, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and West Virginia for their cooperative effort toward the establishment of the Potomac River conservancy district. I have kept in close touch with this proposal and am exerting every effort possible to secure favorable consideration of this plan. I shall be active along the lines you suggest.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

JENNINGS RANDOLPH.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA, DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH,
Charleston, March 26, 1936.

HON. JENNINGS RANDOLPH,

Member House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN RANDOLPH: I have no doubt that you are familiar with the efforts which are being made to improve conditions of public health in the Potomac River Basin.

I wish particularly to call your attention at this time of flood emergency on the Potomac River to the joint action of the health authorities of four States in the Potomac River watershed to establish the Potomac River conservancy district to enable these States to work together with the Federal Government to control detrimental stream pollutions in this area, which is affecting public health.

The enclosed resolution speaks for itself and we would appreciate your help when this matter is brought before the Congress.

Very truly yours,

ARTHUR E. MCCLUE, M. D.,
State Health Commissioner.

Resolution adopted by the representatives of the State health departments of Maryland, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and West Virginia relating to the establishment of the Potomac River conservancy district as recommended by the special advisory committee on water pollution of the National Resources Committee

At a conference held in Baltimore, Md., on January 27, 1936, between representatives of the State health departments of Maryland, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and West Virginia, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas the Special Advisory Committee on Water Pollution of the National Resources Committee has made an extensive survey of stream pollution conditions and of the legislation existing for the control of pollution throughout the United States, and has reported the results of its findings thereon under date of September 16, 1935, to the Honorable Harold L. Ickes, chairman, National Resources Committee; and

"Whereas the said special advisory committee has found that many States are faced with increasingly serious pollution of their waters; that there is a need for the development and adoption of uniform standards of water quality for various uses; that insufficient effort is being made to protect streams used as a source of public and industrial water supply, for recreation, agriculture, and to protect water fowl and fish life from the effects of domestic and industrial waste; and that many States are lacking in legislation properly drawn to cope with these problems; and

"Whereas the said special advisory committee has presented to said National Resources Committee a tentative program for consideration for the interstate control of stream pollution on the basis of drainage areas, where possible; for the simplification and coordination of State laws; for broader authorization and adequate funds for research; for the institution of a cooperative program of investigation to be carried on by legally constituted State agencies with an appropriate Federal agency; and

"Whereas the said special advisory committee has recommended the establishment of a demonstration unit on the Potomac River drainage basin, to be known as the Potomac River Conservancy District, to be used not only as an aid in the solution of the many serious pollution problems in a special program of cooperation between the States of Maryland, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and West Virginia and the Federal Government, but also to serve as a training unit for the development of scientific and administrative personnel for duty with other States; and

"Whereas such a demonstration unit as the Potomac River Conservancy District, involving the States of Maryland, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and West Virginia, would be admirably suited for a demonstration of the possibilities of: (1) Better coordinated water-pollution control legislation in the aforementioned States, and between said States and the Federal Government; (2) more adequate administrative procedure by State agencies; (3) development of the legal and administrative procedures for regional or metropolitan pollution abatement authorities; (4) coordination of municipal sewage disposal projects with State-wide or interstate projects; (5) clearing up unsolved problems of treating industrial wastes; (6) extension of cooperation with industry; and (7) direction of public interest toward adequate control of water pollution; and

"Whereas the Potomac River drainage basin is comparatively small in size; sufficiently close to the Washington base for consultation, negotiation, and review; sufficiently well advanced in detailed major studies and in many cases actual corrective field construction could be undertaken in the immediate future; and is such that Federal expenditures could be kept at a sufficiently modest level to warrant the demonstration program: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Department of Health of the State of Maryland, the Department of Health of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, the Department of Health of the Commonwealth of Virginia, the Department of Health of the State of West Virginia, charged by law with the duty of protecting the public health and recognizing the importance of clean streams as sources of present and future public water supplies, respectfully request the President of the United States and the Congress, to take such action as may be necessary and to provide sufficient financial aid to carry out the recommendations of the said special advisory committee on water pollution of the National Resources Committee, for the establishment of the Potomac River conservancy district for the purpose of removing the present undesirable, unsanitary, and dangerous pollution of the Potomac River, an interstate stream, where there now exist serious dangers to health and life which are rapidly increasing with the density of population; and be it further

"Resolved, That the State Health Department of Maryland, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and West Virginia do hereby agree to cooperate with the Federal Government, with the National Resources Committee and with the officials of the Potomac River conservancy district, in solving the many problems of stream pollution on the Potomac River drainage basin; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to the Members of Congress from the States of Maryland, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and West Virginia, and to the National Resources Committee."

R. H. RILEY, M. D., D. P. H.,
Director of Health, State of Maryland.

BALTIMORE, Md., February 14, 1936.

EDITH MACBRIDE-DEXTER, M. D.,
Secretary of Health, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.
HARRISBURG, Pa., February 20, 1936.

I. C. RIGGIN, M. D.,
State Health Commissioner, Department of Health,
Commonwealth of Virginia.
RICHMOND, Va., February 24, 1936.

ARTHUR E. MCCLUE, M. D.,
State Health Commissioner, State of West Virginia.
CHARLESTON, W. Va., March 11, 1936.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that not only will such a plan aid in better health conditions but we shall have an even flow of water, which will enable the growth of industrial development and the increased employment of workers.

ISSUES INVOLVED IN THE PRESENT DEMOCRATIC PRIMARY CAMPAIGN

Mr. BERLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a radio address delivered by myself.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BERLIN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address which I made over station WJHB, at Greensburg, Pa., on Saturday evening, March 28, 1936:

My friends, I consider it most unfortunate that I am compelled to come to this audience and my Democratic friends on a matter of party principle and disagreement; a matter which I dislike. I wish to assure the Democratic voters of Westmoreland County that in the last few months I have made as honest an effort as any man can make to effect a settlement of the Democratic Party difficulties with Chairman J. Hilary Keenan.

Mr. Keenan agreed verbally to my written agreement designed for the sole purpose of advancing the ranks of the Democratic Party to give our President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, an outstanding majority in the general election in November. I deem a victory for the President of much greater importance to you, my constituents, and the people of the Nation as a whole, than the election of a Congressman, State senator, or State representatives.

Keenan failed to live up to his verbal agreement. Therefore, I am going to take this occasion to define the two major and all-important issues in the present Democratic campaign for Congress. Candidates can almost be forgotten, inasmuch as the principles involved should be of more concern to the voters of the Democratic Party of Westmoreland County than the naming of Democratic candidates. Briefly, here are the issues involved:

First. Shall the Democratic voters of Westmoreland County on April 28 permit, by their votes, one man, Judge J. Hilary Keenan, who arrogantly designated himself as the Democratic organization, to assume complete control and ensconce himself as overlord of the party, so that he may be in a position to not only name the candidate who would be permitted to run at Democratic primaries but to control all patronage, including county, State, and Federal? In other words, in case he should be successful in his greed and avarice, he would then be in complete dictatorial control.

And, second, will the Democratic voters of Westmoreland County sanction Keenan's use of the W. P. A. as a political tool? As you well know, the Works Progress Administration is an organization set up by Congress, at the request of President Roosevelt, to relieve the suffering of the great army of unemployed. Should this or any other relief agency be used as a political football to build a machine for furthering Keenan's selfish ambition to become the boss?

The President has well expressed the genuine feeling of all good Americans—that is, that he did not want to see the Works Progress Administration hampered or discredited by partisan activity.

Administration of public relief and relief work is a public duty. Honesty and integrity are demanded in meeting that responsibility. Those who would make the relief program political and partisan are not capable of serving in public office.

The President has sounded the keynote in saying of the work-relief program, no political distinction can be permitted.

The present political campaign in Westmoreland County is a contest of real democracy against the autocracy of a self-appointed political despot, Judge J. Hilary Keenan.

It is a contest of the people in this district against an attempt at one-man rule of the Democratic Party.

It is a contest of the voters against a political czar.

Arrogance, ambition, personal hatreds, and greed are the platform planks of Keenan.

Keenan is waging a battle of heads he wins or tails the other fellow loses. It's the old Army game, so far as Keenan is concerned. He has concocted a plan to become absolute dictator of the Democratic Party of Westmoreland County and is willing to sacrifice the destiny of the Democratic Party to achieve his aim.

In stating the issues I should like to talk with you a few minutes on two records. Let's look at these records. One is the attempt of Keenan to develop and perfect a political dictatorship along lines that deserve repudiation by the voters of the Democratic Party in Westmoreland County.

The other is the one Keenan is attacking—my own—which I wish to set forth in the course of these remarks.

First, let's look at Keenan's record. In 1932 the Democratic Party won a notable victory in this district. That year I was convinced that the voters of this district wanted a new deal. I campaigned for more than 8 months and covered more than 33,000 miles. Although the victory was a victory of the voters who wanted a new deal, Mr. Keenan took the credit.

In 1934 in the State election Westmoreland County rolled up the second largest Democratic majority in the State of Pennsylvania when the voters of this district endorsed the policies of the Democratic Party. The Democrats won, but again Keenan took the credit and became more and more arrogant.

Keenan was made patronage chief of Westmoreland County by Governor Earle, who had been elected and for whom I have the utmost respect. Now, let's see what Keenan has done for the Democratic Party in the county as a dispenser of State patronage. With a tremendous Democratic majority in the 1934 election, the possibilities of recognition for the Democrats of Westmoreland County were strong. But did Keenan consult and advise with Democratic leaders even among his own intimates? No; he went into a huddle with himself and then muffed his chances. With characteristic selfish desire Keenan assigned to himself the job—and what has he done? Practically nothing outside of getting himself three jobs. What a record!

It is true that an outstanding Democratic attorney obtained a job as assistant United States attorney—that attorney was Jay R. Spiegel, a man whom I was glad to endorse. Upon the retirement of the United States district attorney, Keenan should have made an effort to have the assistant named for the job which would have brought credit to Westmoreland County, but did he do this? He did not. He stood by and let the principal appointment go outside the county when one of our own citizenry should have had the job.

It is true that Keenan himself became United States marshal, a police job, but later resigned. Did he try to keep this position in this county? No; he permitted it to go outside despite the excellent showing this county gave the ticket in 1932 and 1934. Keenan then took a higher salaried job with the State administration as member of the workmen's compensation board and later resigned to take an appointment as common pleas judge—an office which he sought as an elective candidate and for which the Democratic voters repudiated him at the primary election. After resigning as a member of the compensation board he permitted that job to get away from the Democrats of Westmoreland County.

With the splendid record the Westmoreland County Democrats have, Keenan has not been able to get a job in the State cabinet, or any other recognition which this county deserves, other than regular jobs which belong to the county—but no major offices.

In fact, he let several good positions that had been held by county residents during the Republican administration go into other districts. The most important among these was secretary of mines, formerly held by Walter H. Glasgow, of Scottsdale, a significant office to be held by a resident of the county. Keenan also failed to retain for the Democrats the position of inspector in the department of labor and industry which was formerly held during the Republican administration by Earl Gilchrist, of Scottsdale.

The net result of Keenan's political management of patronage is that of getting himself his three jobs. The fact that he took care of himself first and last illustrates the type of man he is—full of avarice, greed, and selfishness.

And so, let's see what Czar Keenan has up his sleeve for 1936. He is moving forward with his characteristic pretense. He has slated a Westmoreland County businessman who up to 1933 was a Republican, and who debated and admittedly supported and voted for Herbert Hoover in 1932, to become what he calls the Democratic organization's candidate for Representative in Congress in 1936. It would be interesting, if it were possible, to note the reaction of the old line of Democrats, who have all passed on, such as Henry Ackerman, Silas Kline, John B. Keenan, J. R. Spiegel, James M. Laird, Van Buren Laird, Buck Howell, Tommy Martin, Hon. Lucien W. Doty, Peter McCann, Hon. Curtis H. Gregg, J. Q. Truxall, Clark Gadd, and hundreds of others, to Chairman Keenan's wizardry and temerity in selecting a 1932 Hoover Republican, converting and placing him on a Democratic pedestal as a dyed-in-the-wool Roosevelt Democrat, and brazenly telling the Democrats of Westmoreland County that they must vote for his personally chosen candidate. Mr. Robert Allen is that candidate. I have nothing personal against Mr. Allen other than the fact that he is permitting himself to become the pawn of this self-seeking, would-be political dictator.

Mr. Allen was selected by Mr. Keenan as W. P. A. manager when the work-relief program was instituted. This job was merely a curtain-raiser for the 1936 campaign, because it was intended that Allen would run for Congress. Mr. Allen came here a very few years ago from rock-ribbed Republican Vermont. He came here as a sales manager employed by a corporation whose policies have been consistently against the humanitarian program of President Roosevelt. If this county were in the South, Mr. Allen would be called a "carpetbagger." I do not challenge the right of Mr. Allen on his own responsibility to seek public office, but I do think he should be a candidate on his own merits rather than as a pawn of a self-appointed political dictator whose aim is to rule or ruin the Democratic Party in Westmoreland County.

Do you see Keenan's game? If Allen were nominated and elected, he would be obligated to do Keenan's bidding. He would be nothing more than a political puppet. Keenan would be the real boss. Keenan is jealous of what prerogatives and limited patronage a Member of Congress has, and wants to grab that in addition to his other control over local patronage. If Allen were nominated and defeated in the fall election and President Roosevelt were reelected, Keenan would then be in the position of dominating Federal patronage. He would be in the saddle. And, as I have said before, it's heads Keenan wins, tails the other fellow loses. But if the Keenan candidate wins the nomination, the Democratic Party of Westmoreland County loses, because it will be sacrificing its right of choice by ballot for the dictates of a greedy and ambitious political despot.

With that power he would not only be dispensing county, State, and Federal patronage but he would be in the position of saying who would be allowed to run in the primary election and who should not, as he is trying to do now.

In this connection, I should mention that I have supported to the letter the legislation making possible the work-relief program of the President. I have done everything possible to bring new opportunities and new hopes to the unemployed and the unfortunate of this district. So it seems queer indeed to have the would-be one-man Democratic organization of this county use the humanitarian work program to satisfy his ego and therefore sacrifice a Member of Congress who helped bring this program to Westmoreland County.

I might make this observation at this point that Keenan did call a meeting of Democrats of the county to meet in Jeannette to select candidates. He knew those called to be 90 percent favorable toward him. I understand that the group at that meeting voted almost unanimously to oppose my candidacy—the purpose, to be sure, for which the meeting was called. But in order to prolong the farce a committee of nine was appointed from that group to interview the different candidates. The committee of nine meeting was held and I attended and made my statement along with the other candidates. Keenan's candidate, Mr. Allen, did not appear. This unofficial committee made up of Keenan's friends made their report that no candidate should be endorsed for Congress. What did Keenan do with the report? He threw it out of the window, ordered other candidates to step aside, indicated that he was the Democratic organization and that he wanted Allen as his candidate. Democrats remember the State committee members and the county committee have never been called to meet and were not consulted. Four hundred and seventy county committee members and the State committee were completely ignored by Keenan in his selection of a candidate.

Work-relief legislation, like other legislation, is a matter which demands the trust and responsibilities of public office imposed upon Members of Congress. Legislation for alleviating poverty and misfortune is particularly a sacred obligation by the Members of Congress to their constituents. Of all the thousands of persons in relief positions in Westmoreland County, I have not recommended the employment of more than half a dozen persons for positions, and they were on relief and eligible. I challenge anyone to disprove this statement.

I believe the relief workers employed by the W. P. A. will give their Representative in Congress, who helped formulate and make possible the work-relief legislation, their support. I believe their support will go to the Member of Congress instead of to the candidate of the man who arrogantly in charge of the works program, after it had become a reality, tried to build a political machine on the misfortunes and sufferings of his fellow men.

I should like to quote from a letter written by Harold T. Ryan, member of the Democratic county committee. This letter brings to public attention Keenan's disgraceful conduct in trying to use the W. P. A. for political purposes.

I shall quote from a letter written by Mr. Ryan to Mr. Allen, and which was a part of the letter sent to the editor of the Greensburg Tribune Review. Mr. Ryan said, in writing to Allen:

"In the past few days several matters have come to my attention which I find it difficult to believe. I am informed that your petitions were passed around among W. P. A. employees. I also learned that you counted on a nucleus of 9,000 votes among the W. P. A. workers. Surely you can see such implications are proper issue upon which the opposition can build.

"Finally, have you taken into consideration that our elected representative in Washington was the means whereby our county expressed its approval of W. P. A. and secured it? That the individual appointed to administer W. P. A. in the county should use it as a stepping stone to oppose the elected representative who gave us the organization cannot help but react upon the sense of humor of the citizens."

The letter speaks for itself. That is the record of Keenan. It reeks. It smells. It is offensive to every right-thinking Democrat. It is repulsive. It is disappointing. It is shocking to every Democrat with a sense of decency and fair play. That's the Keenan record.

Every voter in Westmoreland County has a right to know my record. My record is found in the pages which set forth the proceedings of the Congress of the United States since I have been a Member of that body. But I will summarize briefly so that all may know how I stand. Here is my record:

In all, there have been 46 major pieces of legislation introduced and passed by the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses, all bearing the stamp and approval of President Roosevelt. Of these 46 measures I have voted for every one, and I challenge any one of my political opponents to disprove this statement.

Veterans: I have supported veterans' legislation all the way down the line. Thousands of letters of commendation from veterans of this district confirm the story. A letter from Congressman WRIGHT PATMAN, leader of the veterans' bloc, and National Commander Ray Murphy, of the American Legion, tells the same story.

Labor: I have supported work-relief measures and I have lent every effort to legislation which will wipe out unemployment. Letters from laboring people of this district confirm my statement, as well as a letter from Congressman WILLIAM P. CONNERY, leader of the labor group in the House of Representatives.

Old-age pensions: I went down the line of the President's social-security program to provide a workable plan of pensions and social insurance.

Farm relief: I have always supported farm legislation which would lift the purchasing power of the farmer.

Youth: I supported the C. C. C. measure, which has been a godsend to many thousands of young men and their families throughout this country.

Investors: I voted against the "death sentence" clause because I thought it an unfair attack on the investing public. I voted for the final bill, which was sponsored by the administration, which gives adequate control over public utilities.

I could elaborate on my voting record, but it is set forth in the public proceedings in the United States Congress. I shall go into more detailed discussion of my stand on matters of legislation in subsequent speeches in the campaign. I challenge anyone to look into my record and say that I did not stand for the best interests of the people of this district.

But Keenan, with his usual greed and selfish ambition, will attack me. He will use the weapons of the treacherous. He will be unfair. He will defame. He will vilify. He will try to mislead. He never would stick to facts. He will try to cover up some of his own record in an effort to discredit another's.

He will mention that old threadbare charge long ago forgotten by Westmoreland County Democrats that I failed to attend a victory dinner in 1932.

He will mention a framed spite lawsuit instituted only in an attempt to embarrass me politically.

He will say that I have had relatives on the Government pay roll. I have secured a job for a daughter, but what father would not if he has any feeling or regard for his family? But who is Keenan to charge me with nepotism, when he has, I am informed, 14 relatives on the public pay rolls; that is nepotism gone wild.

They will say that I left the President on the "death sentence" in the public utilities legislation. I had permission of the leadership of the House when I made that vote. The Democratic platform of 1932 said:

"Regulation to the full extent of Federal power of:

"(a) Holding companies which sell securities in interstate commerce.

"(b) Rates of utility companies operating across State lines.

"(c) Exchanges in securities and commodities."

That is the first reason I voted against the "death clause." Secondly, I felt that such stringent requirements would impoverish many and deprive the helpless, the aged, and others of their life savings which had been invested in stocks. Third, I had more than 10,000 letters from reputable Westmoreland County citizens, many of whom I personally know, urging me to vote against that clause. As I have said before, I did vote for the bill as finally drafted, because I felt certain that it was consistent with the party platform and did effectively regulate public utilities with an iron hand.

Others will criticize me for consistently supporting veterans' legislation. But at all times I have voted for legislation which seeks to do justice for the veterans. I have no apologies to make for my record in this respect.

It will be said that I did not favor the Guffey-Snyder coal bill, and that I did not favor legislation for the farmers. A booklet which will be placed in your hands in the near future will contain photostatic copies of letters from leaders in the House of Representatives and from chairmen of important committees endorsing my record and telling the Democrats of this county how I have supported legislation in behalf of the miners, the laborers, the farmers, the veterans, the sportsman, and other groups of constituents.

That is my record, and I have just given you a prediction of the unfair attacks which will be made against me.

While I am discussing the campaign issues in Westmoreland County, I would digress briefly on a subject with which some of you are doubtless familiar.

I am told of the amusing antics of one of our very important (in his own vain opinion) editors of a weekly paper published here in Greensburg. This editor takes great delight in linking my name and my candidacy with other popular, reputable, high-class, clean-living gentlemen. If this be true, I am highly honored, as you are usually judged by the company you keep. The old "saw", "Birds of a feather flock together"—and I further wish to say to you, my Democratic friends, I am pleased to be associated with and to be called "friend" by the gentlemen whose standing this would-be character assassin tries to besmirch. But I am fearful that in his wild rantings of the last few years his attacks have been made on too many respectable men and women in this community, directly or with deceitful innuendos. Thus, his standing in his community and in the county has gone to such a low ebb that decent people resent his many untruthful attacks and unfair statements and refuse further to read his paper. Many others, wishing to be amused and with the common thought "Who is he after now?", read his yellow Tory sheet. This editor has shifted his position and his attack on individuals as often as the moon has changed in the last 4 years.

It might be interesting reading to many of the bituminous coal miners who happen upon his writings if he should tell them of his activities in the coal miner strikes in more than the 25 years he served as superintendent of the Keystone Coal Co. at the Haydenville mine. At that time he was known as a political spy for the Republican Party, part of the time under the command of Harry F. Bovard, a sagacious leader. Any interested person can get his labor record from any old-time miner in the Haydenville district. That record evidently was known to the labor vote of Westmoreland County, as shown by the votes given this editor when he was a candidate at the Democratic primary election last year against Leonard B. Keck, now county controller, and I might say that the reason this editor is now opposing me is due to the fact that I supported the very efficient, capable, official who is now serving as county controller, and I was one of the first persons who suggested to Len Keck that he should be a candidate. This editor, who opposed Keck, made the statement to me, "If he could not beat that dumb Dutchman (meaning Keck) he would never be heard of again in politics." And, in amazement, I am told that he is again asking the Democratic voters to nominate him at the coming primary election as a candidate of the Democratic Party for legislature.

A former Democrat once said in many of his speeches, "Let's look at the record." Let's see what this editor and his paper have stood for. In the beginning, he was financed, the paper started and given to him by the very people he is now so viciously attacking. To further show his instability I am told that he insisted on, and helped to sponsor the candidacy of his then friend, Willis Ruffner, to oppose me in the coming primary. After less than 4 weeks, he has now turned against Mr. Ruffner, and is supporting Mr. Allen, and it is a fair wager that he may switch to any other candidate before the end of the campaign.

Many Democratic voters will remember his attacks on Chairman Keenan just before the 1935 primary election when a slate was made by Keenan. Now, why this sudden love and admiration for Keenan and his slated candidates in 1936? The voters may again penetrate his disguise and ascertain his reasons.

In his vicious moments he has attacked the clergy, the courts, the city council, the mayor, commissioners, the poor board, and many reputable citizens of this community. It would take more time than I have at my command to recite the vilifying history of his paper, and for what reason? Only one—to endeavor to please someone in power that he might receive lucrative public printing and a soft job for himself—a job without work.

My friends, I will at no future time discuss this person or his vilifying sheet. Sufficient to say that on two occasions in which he has been a candidate the Democratic voters have visualized behind his mask of deceit. The American people admire decency, honesty, sincerity, loyalty, and above all truthfulness. "Doc" Null, the editor of the Observer, cannot claim credit with having any one of these attributes so admirable in decent citizenship.

The contest, ladies and gentlemen, therefore is between two records—one that of unselfish support of the President attested to by his leaders in Congress and by the many thousands of letters from constituents which my office makes reply to within 24 hours after their receipt. The other record is that of Keenan—a selfish, self-appointed, political would-be dictator, who has attempted to take the mantle of Roosevelt and who is now attempting to use a supporter of Hoover in 1932 to defeat your Representative in Congress just in order to satisfy his own greed and ambition. You be the judge. Yours is the verdict.

AMERICANISM PREVAILED OVER COMMUNISM

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and to print a report adopted by a resolution passed by the Federation of Citizens' Associations in Washington, consisting of 63 organizations.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, last year the Congress of the United States passed a law to prevent the indoctrination of communism in the public schools of Washington, D. C. That law took effect July 1, 1935. It is permanent law now. The superintendent of schools, Dr. Frank W. Ballou, did not like this law. He claimed that it infringed on his academic freedom, which he wanted unhampered and unrestricted. He claimed that because the law said teachers shall not teach or advocate communism, it prevented factual instruction. He raised so much fuss about it that the board of education called on the Corporation Counsel, Mr. Prettyman, for an opinion. Dr. Ballou seemed to forget that the words "teach" and "advocate" are synonymous, for Webster's Unabridged Dictionary says that "to teach" means "to advocate", and that "to advocate" means "to teach."

Corporation Counsel Prettyman rendered his opinion that the law did not prevent any teacher from expounding the evils and unsoundness of communism, but did prevent teachers from trying to indoctrinate communism.

When Dr. Frank W. Ballou, our $10,000-a-year superintendent, who on the side has been spending much of his time serving as secretary to $300,000 5-year commissions, and delivering lectures for honorariums and expenses, learned that he was prohibited from having his 2,900 teachers from teaching anything but sound American doctrines, he rebelled, and still contended that his academic freedom was being interfered with, and he refused to instruct his teachers that they must obey the law.

Under the circumstances the Comptroller General of the United States, who is the head of the General Accounting Office, and whose duty it is to require all public money to be paid out in strict accordance with the law, required the teachers to make affidavit that they had not violated this law before he would allow them to draw their money.

Dr. Frank W. Ballou was advised that if he did not like the affidavits he could very easily get rid of them, for if he would issue a short order that his teachers must obey the law as construed by Corporation Council Prettyman, which gave them the right to teach the evils and unsoundness of communism but prevented them from trying to in-doctrinate communism, that Comptroller General McCarl would withdraw his order and not require the affidavits. But Dr. Ballou refused to accept the proposal. He insisted on exercising his academic freedom and of being allowed to teach what he pleased. And he proceeded to incite henchmen to action.

The radicals in Washington immediately began to howl. They wanted academic freedom. The Communists in Washington began to howl and to froth at the mouth. They wanted their academic freedom. They wanted their free speech. They wanted to expound factual instruction. They did not want any ignorant majority to control them. They immediately got the ear of the "yellow" sheets, the "pink" sheets, the "red" sheets, and the subsidized sheets, which proceeded to fill their columns with clamoring demands for free speech and factual instruction and academic freedom.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. Sisson] who for years was a member of his home board of education, who is not a member of the District Legislative Committee, is not a member of the District Appropriation Committee, and is not a member of the Committee on Education, nevertheless saw fit on January 20, 1936, to introduce a bill (H. R. 10391) to make more effective the law against advocating communism in the District of Columbia, which specifically provided that teachers could give instruction concerning the political, economic, or social system of any country.

That did not suit Dr. Frank W. Ballou. That did not suit his Board of Education. That did not suit the "pink" sheets, the "red" sheets, or the subsidized sheets. It did not suit the radicals. It did not suit the Communists. They wanted their academic freedom. They cried for it. They bawled for it. They howled for it. They clamored for it. They insisted that they would have nothing less. They wanted all law repealed. They wanted no law. They wanted to be free to do what they pleased, to teach what they pleased, to indoctrinate what they pleased, and they did not want any ignorant majority to exercise any control whatsoever over them.

So on February 21, 1936, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Sisson] introduced his new bill (H. R. 11375) to repeal outright the law that prevents indoctrinating communism in the Washington public schools.

This new repeal bill pleases Dr. Frank W. Ballou. It pleases the Board of Education. It pleases the "pink" sheets. It pleases the "red" sheets. It pleases the subsidized sheets. It pleases the radicals. It pleases the Communists. They all want it. They all cry for it. They all bawl for it. They all clamor for it.

BUT WASHINGTON PEOPLE DO NOT WANT THE SISSON BILLS

In the District of Columbia there are many different associations of citizens. There are 63 different citizens' associations which have banded themselves together in what is known as the Federation of Citizens Associations. For months this Federation of Citizens' Associations has had a committee working zealously to keep communism out of the Washington schools. This committee has been against both of the Sisson bills. It opposed the two Sisson bills at the hearing before the subcommittee handling them.

FIGHT MADE ON FEDERATION COMMITTEE

Dr. Frank W. Ballou and his Board of Education and those helping them in trying to preserve his do-what-he-pleases academic freedom have been so very influential, aided by the pink press, the red press, and the subsidized press, that they caused a vicious fight to be made upon the committee of the Federated Citizens' Associations, thinking that if the committee could be destroyed they would win their fight. The facts were daily misrepresented. The people were told daily that teachers could not even mention Russia. The people were told that if a child asked about Russia the teacher would be compelled to say, "Hush; we cannot mention that subject"; and other claims were made just as ridiculous. Pink teachers from other places were induced to send telegrams demanding do-as-you-please academic freedom. Outside red teachers sent many propaganda telegrams urging the passage of the last repeal Sisson bill. Under such fire and the influence of such propaganda, several of the 63 citizens' associations voted to endorse the repeal Sisson bill, and one or two tried to repudiate the committee of the federation.

SHOWDOWN CAME LAST SATURDAY NIGHT

There was called for last Saturday night a meeting of the Federation of Citizens' Associations, for the express purpose of acting on the report of said federation's committee. A special effort was made to have present every friend of Dr. Frank W. Ballou, every friend of the board of education, every advocate of the Sisson repeal bill, and every enemy of the law that stopped communism in the Washington schools, for the express purpose of trying to table the federation's committee report and of endorsing, if possible, the Sisson repeal bill.

MOTION TO TABLE COMMITTEE REPORT FAILED

As soon as the meeting was ready for business a Hebrew, named Wender, moved to table the report of the federation's committee. By a vote of over 2 to 1, his motion failed.

MOTION TO ENDORSE SISSON BILL FAILED

Then a motion was made to endorse the Sisson repeal bill. By a vote of over 2 to 1, that motion failed.

MEETING ADOPTED REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF FEDERATION OF CITIZENS' ASSOCIATIONS

Then, by a vote of over 2 to 1, the meeting of the Federation of Citizens' Associations of the District of Columbia adopted its committee report, which is the following, to wit:

Committee report approved and adopted March 28, 1936, by Federation of Citizens' Associations of the District of Columbia, immediately following the voting down by it of a proposed substitute motion to endorse the Sisson repeal bill, H. R. 11375

MARCH 28, 1936.

To the Federation of Citizens Associations, District of Columbia:

The last report of this special committee, dated January 4, 1936, was approved by the federation, and resolutions were adopted on that date describing "existing conditions" in the Public Schools of this District as "favorable to subversive, antipatriotic, and communistic propaganda", and expressly declaring that "the recent action of the Board of Education makes it imperative that the Congress of the United States shall be appealed to without delay to provide an effectual remedy and one which will be so thorough that there can be no danger of a recurrence of existing conditions." This special committee has made appeal to the Congress as so directed by the federation, the subject matter being presented to the Senate and House District Committees, and also to the House Appropriations Committee.

The Subcommittee on the District of Columbia of the House Appropriations Committee conducted a thorough investigation into this subject matter. The entire subcommittee of five members participated actively in the investigation, and went to original sources for their data. Books and magazines, etc., in use with pupils in the public schools were carefully studied by said subcommittee, with such books, magazines, etc., actually before them for weeks; and the printed hearings show that the subcommittee found an abundance of antipatriotic and procommunistic matter, and also matter tending to seriously affect and undermine fundamental morals of the pupils in the matter of sexual relations. The destruction of sexual morality is well known, of course, to be one of the aims and purposes of communism. The Superintendent of Schools, the head of the history department in the high schools, and the editor of Scholastic Magazine, were heard before said subcommittee, and disclosed no possible excuse or justification for the conditions against which this Federation has complained, and which are now admitted to have been going on for a number of years. In fact, the report of the House Appropriations Committee of March 3, 1936, expressly states (p. 9): "The subcommittee was of the unanimous opinion that the Board of Education should take immediate steps to eliminate from the public schools all communistic books and magazines."

On February 25, 1936, the Subcommittee on Education of the House District Committee began hearings respecting this same subject matter, the hearings coming on upon two bills introduced by Congressman Sisson, of New York, namely:

1. H. R. 10391 (Introduced Jan. 20, 1936) entitled "A bill to make more effective the law against advocating communism in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

2. H. R. 11375 (Introduced Feb. 21, 1936) entitled "A bill to repeal a proviso relating to teaching or advocating communism in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and appearing in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936."

On March 2, 1936, this special committee of the federation presented to said subcommittee on education copies of the five resolutions adopted by the Federation itself, and its executive committee, relating to this subject matter, namely:

1. Resolution adopted by the federation March 16, 1935, advocating a rider upon the then pending District of Columbia appropriation bill, in view of the disclosure that Dr. Charters (shown to be on the advisory board of Communistic Moscow University, summer school), was being employed for character education in the District of Columbia public schools.

2. Resolution adopted by the executive committee November 12, 1935, providing for the creation of this special committee and the taking of steps to eliminate textbooks in the District of Columbia public schools containing communistic propaganda and secure for the pupils instead "a clear and informative definition of communism and its evil and atrocious aims and purposes."

3. Further resolution adopted by the executive committee December 3, 1935, directing this special committee to extend its work to cover periodicals as well as textbooks.

4. Resolution adopted by the federation December 7, 1935, approving and endorsing the aforesaid actions by the executive committee.

5. Resolutions adopted by the federation January 4, 1936, advocating an immediate appeal to Congress to provide "an effectual remedy and one which will be so thorough that there can be no danger of a recurrence of existing conditions."

In support of these resolutions said subcommittee had called to its attention the precise data which had been revealed by this special committee showing the intolerable conditions going on in the District of Columbia public schools for a number of years. In fact, said subcommittee had the benefit of the then physical production before it by this special committee of books, magazines, etc., to enable it to verify from original sources the truth or falsity of the conditions as found by this special committee. However, said subcommittee failed to take advantage of the opportunity thus afforded it, apparently taking the position that it was not its province to ascertain what conditions in the District of Columbia public schools need congressional action to correct same, nor to recommend appropriate corrective legislation in making its report, but that it should limit itself strictly to favoring or opposing the aforesaid Sisson bills or one of them. If this is the position of said subcommittee, it is certainly an anomalous and unsound one, it being the plain duty of the House District Committee to deal with the subject matter in a practical and constructive way as to what legislation is appropriate and adequate.

Your special committee has carefully considered all of the foregoing and recommends that the federation deal specifically with the following issues which have been raised.

1. So-called academic freedom: We recommend that the Federation reject as fundamentally unsound the proposition advanced by Congressman Sisson and by the Board of Education that it is an invasion of the rights of the school authorities for Congress to direct, regulate, or control any features of the curriculum in the public schools. No one has been able to suggest wherein this proposition has any foundation in American institutions; exclusive legislation for the District of Columbia is vested by the Constitution in the Congress, and the school authorities are public servants obligated to respect and obey such legislation. It should be noted in this connection that as early as 1886 (act of May 20, 1886 (24 Stat. L. 69)), Congress upheld its jurisdiction, not only in the public schools of the District of Columbia but in schools everywhere else subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, by expressly requiring "the nature of alcoholic drinks and narcotics, and special instruction as to their effects upon the human system" to be taught, and to require removal from office of anyone failing or neglecting to comply with such requirement.

2. Legislation requiring pupils to be acquainted with evil aims and effects of communism and other un-American doctrines: Since Congress has the undoubted power to require pupils to be acquainted with the harmful effects of alcohol and narcotics, which affect the individual only directly, and the Nation indirectly, how can anyone seriously question the power of Congress to require that pupils in the public schools of the District of Columbia shall be made acquainted with the evil aims and effects of communism and other un-American doctrine, which affect both the Nation and the individual directly? This special committee recommends that the federation advocate the immediate passage of legislation to this effect, with means for enforcement similar to what is provided for in the aforesaid act of 1886, and with specific requirement that all such subversive doctrines be expressly denounced to the pupils in all textbooks or other data or explanation used with the pupils referring to such doctrines. This is in accord with the uniform position taken by this federation at all times. Not only has the federation at no time objected to pupils in the public schools being made so acquainted, but it has insisted at all times upon the pupils being made so acquainted for their own protection; in other words, that the truth, and not half truths, shall be told the pupils about and against communism and that it is inherently impossible to tell them the truth about communism without teaching against communism and denouncing it as a world revolution conspiracy seeking destruction by force and violence of all nations and practically every vestige of civilization.

3. Repeal of clause as to communism contained in District of Columbia appropriation bill of June 14, 1935: This special committee recommends to the federation that it advocate such repeal just as soon as legislation of the character set forth in the preceding paragraph has been enacted. In so recommending, this committee feels that the emergency purpose of said clause will then no longer exist, and the subject matter will be better and more effectually taken care of by such substitute legislation. The federation should make no apologies to anyone for the emergency protective resolution adopted by it March 16, 1935, on this subject, the matter being brought up first by then President Yaden, who accepted a substitute offered by Delegate Suter.

4. Withdrawal of requirement for monthly affidavits. This special committee further recommends that this federation also advocate the withdrawal of the requirement for monthly affidavits in any event immediately upon the enactment of the substitute legislation hereinbefore proposed, and, even before such enactment, immediately upon the school authorities acceding to the reasonable demand of Congress that there shall be no teaching about communism which does not teach against and denounce it. As a matter of fact, the clause against communism in the aforesaid District of Columbia appropriation bill of June 14, 1935, does not require any monthly or other affidavits; and it was not until December 1, 1935, that the Comptroller General decided to make such requirement, and then only because it became apparent that the school authorities would not accede to the reasonable demand of Congress (inherently necessary) that no teaching about communism could take place which did not actually teach against and denounce it.

HARRY N. STULL,
MRS. GEORGE CORBIN,
MRS. HORACE J. PHELPS,

Special Committee on Elimination of Communistic, etc., Matter from District of Columbia Public Schools.

Mr. Speaker, on last Saturday night in Washington, D. C., Americanism prevailed over communism. The "pinks" and the "reds" were put to route. It was a great victory for our institutions, our Constitution, and our Government.

The time has come when we must stop communism. The time has come when we must put communism out of our country. The time has come when we Democrats must weed all "pinks" and "reds" out of our Government. I have lowered my visor. I have unsheathed my sword. I have entered the lists. I am at war to the finish against all Communists and subversive enemies of good government.

FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing resolutions passed at a meeting of the Ohio Valley Conservation and Flood Control Congress at Huntington, W. Va., March 24, 1936.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following:

Resolution

Whereas the Ohio Valley is now being visited by another flood disaster, which might have been averted to a marked degree by the completion of a comprehensive system of source stream-control reservoirs, as has been previously proposed by various organizations in the Ohio Valley; and

Whereas the present flow has caused damage to the extent of at least $200,000,000 in the Ohio Valley; and

Whereas a comprehensive system of source stream-control reservoirs could have been built for not to exceed $211,000,000;

We therefore request that, without further delay, the following measures be carried out by proper action and appropriations by the Congress of the United States:

That an appropriation of sufficient funds be made by Congress to permit the Board of Army Engineers to make a comprehensive and detailed survey of the 39 reservoirs, their equivalent, or such a number of these reservoirs as have not been previously surveyed by the Board, which reservoirs were included in Survey Report No. 308, Plan No. 4, Sixty-eighth Congress, second session, as the plan for the ultimate development in the Ohio Valley east of Cincinnati.

It is further requested that appropriations for construction be made by the United States Government as rapidly as the individual projects are approved by the Board of Army Engineers.

"It is estimated that should these 39 reservoirs, their equivalent, or a major portion of them be constructed, material damage and loss of life resulting from future floods in the Ohio Valley would be greatly reduced.

"In the Survey Report No. 308 hereinbefore mentioned it is estimated that the construction of these 39 reservoirs, their equivalent, or a major portion of them will reduce the crest of most floods in the Ohio Valley between Pittsburgh and Cincinnati approximately 8 feet, and a lesser amount from Cincinnati to Cairo, and during certain floods would reduce the crest in the Mississippi River itself below Cairo as much as 2 feet."

Whereas an appropriation of $364,000 has previously been made by Congress for specification, foundation, exploration, surveys, aerial maps, etc., for the Bluestone Dam on New River, in West Virginia, and $800,000 has been appropriated by Congress to be used toward the purchase of land which will be inundated by this dam, and

Whereas the construction of this dam will markedly reduce the crest of any floods in the Kanawha Valley, and to a lesser degree reduce the crest of floods in the Ohio Valley, and

Whereas the use of this dam and the ability to render constant flow through its use will mitigate the effects of pollution through dilution in the Kanawha River and Ohio,

We therefore request that the Congress of the United States appropriate at this time sufficient funds to complete construction of this dam.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. O'CONNOR, chairman of the Committee on Rules, presented a privileged report from that committee on H. R. 11968, as follows, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed.

House Resolution 470

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 11968, "A bill relating to the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make rehabilitation loans for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes." That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommend, with or without instructions.

PROTECT AMERICA

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a radio address delivered by myself.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address delivered by me on March 27, 1936:

The existence of the independent retailer in the United States is threatened by inroads made by the gigantic chain-store organizations. However, one bright hope is held out to him in the Robinson-Patman bill, which the House will vote on during this session. This bill prohibits the payment of brokerage or commission under certain conditions, suppresses pseudo-advertising allowances, protects the independent merchant, the public whom he serves, and the manufacturer from whom he buys, from exploitation by unfair competitors.

Thousands of independent merchants who were at one time successful, are today numbered among the 12,000,000 unemployed people of our country; yet the footprints of their service toward their community, can be traced back over American history in community building. The history of these independent merchants is a tragic one. They were among those who, in the early days, eliminated the lawless elements who obstructed the progress in the building of communities, villages, towns, and cities.

The service of these independent merchants can be traced to their support of farm organizations, of community clubs, of schools, churches, fire departments, police departments, street improvements, lighting, community chests, and the charitable organizations.

The community in trouble found refuge, in years gone by, in the generosity and assistance given by the independent merchants. Small hamlets and towns grew to big cities and became prosperous. Then came the advent of the great chains. Great financial organizations saw the profit-making possibilities in mass purchases. With their efficiency experts and great financial backing, it is possible for them to demand lower prices; to secure rebates and discounts.

Their operations began in large cities and slowly extended into the rural communities and towns and villages of the Nation. These loans and discounts and pseudo-advertising allowances were the weapons for their own distribution systems.

The independent dealer, struggling desperately with old and tried methods, and through local friendship and service, endeavored to compete, only to find that the community which he had put upon its feet and made to progress was eventually turned over to a powerful organization whose interests were not in the progress of the community but in the turnover of merchandise, which in many cases comes from the mills in which slave labor is employed.

With their mass production and powerful financial backing, with their loans and discounts and rebates, plus the advantages of slave labor, these gigantic organizations swept over our land like locusts, with the result that many independent merchants, whose history can be traced to the very founding of the community, are in the army of unemployed, and in most cases through no fault of their own.

Preserving the American market for the American farmer links itself closely to the need of preserving the American market for the American merchant. It not only links itself closely to conditions prevailing in our country today, notwithstanding the expending of billions of dollars to keep men and women happy by furnishing them employment, at the expense of the American taxpayer, but the question links itself closely to the envious determination of industrialists and capitalists in foreign lands to capture not only the market of the American farmer but the market of the American merchant and the American manufacturer.

It is a question of exploitation of American capitalists, of slave labor in foreign countries at the expense of the army of unemployed workers in America. The American capitalists, closely connected to these gigantic chain-store organizations with tremendous financial interests in foreign lands, are closely connected with this problem, and unless it is solved, the efforts of the American people to maintain the high standard of American living will be futile.

American ships, subsidized by the American taxpayers, bring tons upon tons of manufactured merchandise into our land to be distributed through the medium of chain organizations, and find their way into the homes of the American consumers, whose very existence depends upon the success of the American farmer and the American merchants. This merchandise, manufactured by poorly paid men, women, and children in foreign countries, comes in direct competition with merchandise which can be manufactured by the army of unemployed in our land.

American and foreign ships, many of them subsidized, bring to our shores millions of gallons of foreign-grown coconut oil, to come in direct competition with the products from American farms.

American ships, subsidized by the taxpayers of America, bring tons of merchandise to our land from foreign shores, from foreign factories where men and women work at low wages, to come in direct competition with the workers in American factories where the wages are based on the high standard of American living. Blackstrap molasses by the millions of gallons is coming into our land on ships to come in direct competition with the products of the American farmers and American industry who are entitled to the American market.

Gigantic organizations who are exploiting the slave labor of foreign lands to manufacture merchandise to come into our land in direct competition with the American laboring man, do not hesitate in an effort to exploit Federal funds to gain the cheap labor of Americans in order that their products and their organizations can successfully eliminate the competition of the independent merchant.

With billions of dollars already expended in an effort by our Government to keep millions of people employed, with 12,000,000 still unemployed, with thousands upon thousands of young men and women coming out of our schools and universities, with nothing and no jobs and no hopes to apply their education because there are no jobs, with the President of the United States asking Congress for a billion and a half more money to furnish more employment, with $500,000,000 authorized to prevent soil erosion and a crop-control program in America by taking out 30,000,000 acres of land from production, the question becomes one of American charity, and charity begins at home.

The American farmer, who is the real customer of the American industrialists, must be given an opportunity to make a living. The American laboring man, who has a right to believe in the promises that the American standard of living will be a job for him in order that he can support his family and those who depend upon him, must be protected against the inroads of foreign-manufactured merchandise. The independent merchant, who through the years has been the very foundation of his community, must be protected against unfair competition and exploitation by the great chain organizations. Unless he is given that protection the few independent merchants who still remain in their old communities struggling for their very existence will be but a memory and the money collected by the agents of these great chains in the communities of America will continue to flow into the coffers of great financiers to be invested in foreign-made manufactured goods and foreign-produced farm products.

It is therefore those who have the interest of the Americans at heart who are hoping for the successful passage of the Robinson-Patman bill in this last session of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

IMPEACHMENT OF JUDGE RITTER

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged resolution for immediate consideration, and, pending that, it might be that if I made a short explanation of the resolution it would relieve the necessity of reading it.

Mr. SNELL. I think the resolution should be read.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

House Resolution 471

Resolved, That the articles of impeachment heretofore adopted by the House of Representatives in and by House Resolution 422, House Calendar No. 279, be, and they are hereby, amended as follows:

Article III is amended so as to read as follows:

"ARTICLE III

"That the said Halsted L. Ritter, having been nominated by the President of the United States, confirmed by the Senate of the United States, duly qualified and commissioned, and, while acting as a United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, was and is guilty of a high crime and misdemeanor in office in manner and form as follows, to wit:

"That the said Halsted L. Ritter, while such judge, was guilty of a violation of section 258 of the Judicial Code of the United States of America (U. S. C., Annotated, title 28, sec. 373), making it unlawful for any judge appointed under the authority of the United States to exercise the profession or employment of counsel or attorney, or to be engaged in the practice of the law, in that after the employment of the law firm of Ritter and Rankin (which at the time of the appointment of Halsted L. Ritter to be judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, was composed of Halsted L. Ritter and A. L. Rankin) in the case of Trust Co. of Georgia and Robert G. Stephens, Trustee, v. Brazilian Court Building Corporation et al., no. 5704, in the Circuit Court of the Fifteenth Judicial Circuit of Florida, and after the fee of $4,000 which had been agreed upon at the outset of said employment had been fully paid to the firm of Ritter and Rankin, and after Halsted L. Ritter had, on, to wit, February 15, 1929, become judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, Judge Ritter on, to wit, March 11, 1929, wrote a letter to Charles A. Brodek, of counsel for Mulford Realty Corporation (the client which his former law firm had been representing in said litigation), stating that there had been much extra and unanticipated work in the case, that he was then a Federal judge; that his partner, A. L. Rankin, would carry through further proceedings in the case, but that he, Judge Ritter, would be consulted about the matter until the case was all closed up; and that 'this matter is one among very few which I am assuming to continue my interest in until finally closed up'; and stating specifically in said letter:

"I do not know whether any appeal will be taken in the case or not, but, if so, we hope to get Mr. Howard Paschal or some other person as receiver who will be amenable to our directions, and the hotel can be operated at a profit, of course, pending the appeal. We shall demand a very heavy supersedeas bond, which I doubt whether D'Esterre can give; and further that he was 'of course primarily interested in getting some money in the case', and that he thought '$2,000 more by way of attorney's fees should be allowed'; and asked that he be communicated with direct about the matter, giving his post-office-box number. On, to wit, March 13, 1929, said Brodek replied favorably, and on March 30, 1929, a check of Brodek, Raphael, and Eisner, a law firm of New York City, representing Mulford Realty Corporation, in which Charles A. Brodek, senior member of the firm of Brodek, Raphael, and Eisner, was one of the directors, was drawn, payable to the order of 'Hon. Halsted L. Ritter' for $2,000 and which was duly endorsed 'Hon. Halsted L. Ritter. H. L. Ritter' and was paid on, to wit, April 4, 1929, and the proceeds thereof were received and appropriated by Judge Ritter to his own individual use and benefit, without advising his said former partner that said $2,000 had been received, without consulting with his former partner thereabout, and without the knowledge or consent of his said former partner, appropriated the entire amount thus solicited and received to the use and benefit of himself, the said Judge Ritter.

"At the time said letter was written by Judge Ritter and said $2,000 received by him, Mulford Realty Corporation held and owned large interests in Florida real estate and citrus groves, and a large amount of securities of the Olympia Improvement Corporation, which was a company organized to develop and promote Olympia, Fla., said holdings being within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States district court, of which Judge Ritter was a judge from, to wit, February 15, 1929.

"After writing said letter of March 11, 1929, Judge Ritter further exercised the profession or employment of counsel or attorney, or engaged in the practice of the law, with relation to said case.

"Which acts of said judge were calculated to bring his office into disrepute, constitute a violation of section 258 of the Judicial Code of the United States of America (U. S. C., Annotated, title 28, sec. 373), and constitute a high crime and misdemeanor within the meaning and intent of section 4 of article II of the Constitution of the United States.

"Wherefore, the said Judge Halsted L. Ritter was and is guilty of a high misdemeanor in office."

By adding the following articles immediately after article III as amended:

"ARTICLE IV

"That the said Halsted L. Ritter, having been nominated by the President of the United States, confirmed by the Senate of the United States, duly qualified and commissioned, and, while acting as a United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, was and is guilty of a high crime and misdemeanor in office in manner and form as follows, to wit:

"That the said Halsted L. Ritter, while such judge, was guilty of a violation of section 258 of the Judicial Code of the United States of America (U. S. C., Annotated, title 28, sec. 373), making it unlawful for any judge appointed under the authority of the United States to exercise the profession or employment of counsel or attorney, or to be engaged in the practice of the law, in that Judge Ritter did exercise the profession or employment of counsel or attorney, or engage in the practice of the law, representing J. R. Francis, with relation to the Boca Raton matter and the segregation and saving of the interest of J. R. Francis therein, or in obtaining a deed or deeds to J. R. Francis from the Spanish River Land Co. to certain pieces of realty, and in the Edgewater Ocean Beach Development Co. matter for which services the said Judge Ritter received from the said J. R. Francis the sum of $7,500.

"Which acts of said judge were calculated to bring his office into disrepute, constitute a violation of the law above recited, and constitute a high crime and misdemeanor within the meaning and intent of section 4 of article II of the Constitution of the United States.

"Wherefore, the said Judge Halsted L. Ritter was and is guilty of a high misdemeanor in office.

"ARTICLE V

"That the said Halsted L. Ritter, having been nominated by the President of the United States, confirmed by the Senate of the United States, duly qualified and commissioned, and, while acting as a United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, was and is guilty of a high crime and misdemeanor in office in manner and form as follows, to wit:

"That the said Halsted L. Ritter, while such judge, was guilty of violation of section 146 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1928, making it unlawful for any person willfully to attempt in any manner to evade or defeat the payment of the income tax levied in and by said Revenue Act of 1928, in that during the year 1929 said Judge Ritter received gross taxable income—over and above his salary as judge—to the amount of some $12,000, yet paid no income tax thereon.

"Among the fees included in said gross taxable income for 1929 were the extra fee of $2,000 solicited and received by Judge Ritter in the Brazilian Court case as described in article III, and the fee of $7,500 received by Judge Ritter from J. R. Francis.

"Wherefore the said Judge Halsted L. Ritter was and is guilty of a high misdemeanor in office.

"ARTICLE VI

"That the said Halsted L. Ritter, having been nominated by the President of the United States, confirmed by the Senate of the United States, duly qualified and commissioned, and, while acting as a United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, was and is guilty of a high crime and misdemeanor in office in manner and form as follows, to wit:

"That the said Halsted L. Ritter, while such judge, was guilty of violation of section 146 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1928, making it unlawful for any person willfully to attempt in any manner to evade or defeat the payment of the income tax levied in and by said Revenue Act of 1928, in that during the year 1930 the said Judge Ritter received gross taxable income—over and above his salary as judge—to the amount of, to wit, $5,300, yet failed to report any part thereof in his income-tax return for the year 1930, and paid no income-tax thereon.

"Two thousand five hundred dollars of said gross taxable income for 1930 was that amount of cash paid Judge Ritter by A. L. Rankin on December 24, 1930, as described in article I.

"Wherefore the said Judge Halsted L. Ritter was and is guilty of a high misdemeanor in office."

Original article IV is amended so as to read as follows:

"ARTICLE VII

"That the said Halsted L. Ritter, while holding the office of United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, having been nominated by the President of the United States, confirmed by the Senate of the United States, duly qualified and commissioned, and, while acting as a United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, was and is guilty of misbehavior and of high crimes and misdemeanors in office in manner and form as follows, to wit:

"The reasonable and probable consequence of the actions or conduct of Halsted L. Ritter, hereunder specified or indicated in this article, since he became judge of said court, as an individual or as such judge, is to bring his court into scandal and disrepute, to the prejudice of said court and public confidence in the administration of justice therein, and to the prejudice of public respect for and confidence in the Federal judiciary, and to render him unfit to continue to serve as such judge:

"1. In that in the Florida Power Co. case (Florida Power & Light Co. v. City of Miami et al., no. 1183-M-Eq.), which was a case wherein said judge had granted the complainant power company a temporary injunction restraining the enforcement of an ordinance of the city of Miami, which ordinance prescribed a reduction in the rates for electric current being charged in said city, said judge improperly appointed one Cary T. Hutchinson, who had long been associated with and employed by power and utility interests, special master in chancery in said suit, and refused to revoke his order so appointing said Hutchinson. Thereafter, when criticism of such action had become current in the city of Miami, and within 2 weeks after a resolution (H. Res. 163, 73d Cong.) had been agreed to in the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, authorizing and directing the Judiciary Committee thereof to investigate the official conduct of said judge and to make a report concerning said conduct to said House of Representatives, an arrangement was entered into with the city commissioners of the city of Miami or with the city attorney of said city by which the said city commissioners were to pass a resolution expressing faith and confidence in the integrity of said judge, and the said judge recuse himself as judge in said power suit. The said agreement was carried out by the parties thereto, and said judge, after the passage of such resolution, recused himself from sitting as judge in said power suit, thereby bartering his judicial authority in said case for a vote of confidence. Nevertheless, the succeeding judge allowed said Hutchinson as special master in chancery in said case a fee of $5,000, although he performed little, if any, service as such, and in the order making such allowance recited: 'And it appearing to the court that a minimum fee of $5,000 was approved by the court for the said Cary T. Hutchinson, special master in this cause.'

"2. In that in the Trust Company of Florida cases (Illick v. Trust Co. of Florida et al., no. 1043-M-Eq., and Edmunds Committee et al. v. Marion Mortgage Co. et al., no. 1124-M-Eq.), after the State Banking Department of Florida, through its comptroller, Hon. Ernest Amos, had closed the doors of the Trust Co. of Florida and appointed J. H. Therrell liquidator for said trust company, and had intervened in the said Illick case, said Judge Ritter wrongfully and erroneously refused to recognize the right of said State authority to administer the affairs of the said trust company and appointed Julian S. Eaton and Clark D. Stearns as receivers of the property of said trust company. On appeal the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit reversed the said order or decree of Judge Ritter and ordered the said property surrendered to the State liquidator. Thereafter, on, to wit, September 12, 1932, there was filed in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida the Edmunds Committee case, supra. Marion Mortgage Co. was a subsidiary of the Trust Co. of Florida. Judge Ritter being absent from his district at the time of the filing of said case, an application for the appointment of receivers therein was presented to another judge of said district, namely, Hon. Alexander Akerman. Judge Ritter, however, prior to the appointment of such receivers, telegraphed Judge Akerman, requesting him to appoint the aforesaid Eaton and Stearns as receivers in said case, which appointments were made by Judge Akerman. Thereafter the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit reversed the order of Judge Akerman, appointing said Eaton and Stearns as receivers in said case. In November 1932 J. H. Therrell, as liquidator, filed a bill of complaint in the Circuit Court of Dade County, Fla.—a court of the State of Florida—alleging that the various trust properties of the Trust Co. of Florida were burdensome to the liquidator to keep, and asking that the court appoint a succeeding trustee. Upon petition for removal of said cause from said State court into the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, Judge Ritter took jurisdiction, notwithstanding the previous rulings of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals above referred to, and again appointed the said Eaton and Stearns as the receivers of the said trust properties. In December 1932 the said Therrell surrendered all of the trust properties to said Eaton and Stearns as receivers, together with all records of the Trust Co. of Florida pertaining thereto. During the time said Eaton and Stearns, as such receivers, were in control of said trust properties Judge Ritter wrongfully and improperly approved their accounts without notice or opportunity for objection thereto to be heard. With the knowledge of Judge Ritter, said receivers appointed the sister-in-law of Judge Ritter, namely, Mrs. G. M. Wickard, who had had no previous hotel-management experience, to be manager of the Julia Tuttle Hotel and Apartment Building, one of said trust properties. On, to wit, January 1, 1933, Hon. J. M. Lee succeeded Hon. Ernest Amos as comptroller of the State of Florida and appointed M. A. Smith liquidator in said Trust Company of Florida cases to succeed J. H. Therrell. An appeal was again taken to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit from the then latest order or decree of Judge Ritter, and again the order or decree of Judge Ritter appealed from was reversed by the said circuit court of appeals which held that the State officer was entitled to the custody of the property involved and that said Eaton and Stearns as receivers were not entitled to such custody. Thereafter, and with the knowledge of the decision of the said circuit court of appeals, Judge Ritter wrongfully and improperly allowed said Eaton and Stearns and their attorneys some $26,000 as fees out of said trust-estate properties and endeavored to require, as a condition precedent to releasing said trust properties from the control of his court, a promise from counsel for the said State liquidator not to appeal from his order allowing the said fees to said Eaton and Stearns and their attorneys.

"3. In that the said Halsted L. Ritter, while such Federal judge, accepted, in addition to $4,500 from his former law partner, as alleged in article I hereof, other large fees or gratuities, to wit, $7,500 from J. R. Francis, on or about April 19, 1929, J. R. Francis at this said time having large property interests within the territorial jurisdiction of the court of which Judge Ritter was a judge; and on, to wit, the 4th day of April 1929 the said Judge Ritter accepted the sum of $2,000 from Brodek, Raphael & Eisner, representing Mulford Realty Corporation as its attorneys, through Charles A. Brodek, senior member of said firm and a director of said corporation, as a fee or gratuity, at which time the said Mulford Realty Corporation held and owned large interests in Florida real estate and citrus groves and a large amount of securities of the Olympia Improvement Corporation, which was a company organized to develop and promote Olympia, Fla., said holdings being within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States District Court of which Judge Ritter was a judge from, to wit, February 15, 1929.

"4. By his conduct as detailed in articles I, II, III, and IV hereof, and by his income-tax evasions as set forth in articles V and VI hereof.

"Wherefore the said Judge Halsted L. Ritter was and is guilty of misbehavior, and was and is guilty of high crimes and misdemeanors in office."

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the resolution which has just been read proposes three new articles. The change is not as important as that statement would indicate. Two of the new articles deal with income taxes, and one with practicing law by Judge Ritter, after he went on the bench.

In the original resolution, the charge is made that Judge Ritter received certain fees or gratuities and had written a letter, and so forth. No change is proposed in articles 1 and 2. In article 3, as stated, Judge Ritter is charged with practicing law after he went on the bench. That same thing, in effect, was charged, as members of the committee will remember, in the original resolution, but the form of the charge, in the judgment of the managers, could be improved. These charges go further and charge that in the matter connected with G. R. Francis, the judge acted as counsel in two transactions after he went on the bench, and received $7,500 in compensation. Article 7 is amended to include a reference to these new charges. There is a change in the tense used with reference to the effect of the conduct alleged. It is charged, in the resolution pending at the desk, that the reasonable and probable consequence of the alleged conduct is to injure the confidence of the people in the courts—I am not attempting to quote the exact language—which is a matter of form, I think, more than a matter of substance.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I may not be entirely familiar with all this procedure, but as I understand, what the gentleman is doing here today, is to amend the original articles of impeachment passed by the House.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. SNELL. The original articles of impeachment came to the House as a result of the evidence before the gentleman's committee. Has the gentleman's committee had anything to do with the change or amendment of these charges?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; just the managers.

Mr. SNELL. As a matter of procedure, would not that be the proper thing to do?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not think it is at all necessary, for this reason: The managers are now acting as the agents of the House, and not as the agents of the Committee on the Judiciary. Mr. Manager PERKINS and Mr. Manager HOBBS have recently extended the investigation made by the committee.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Do I understand that the amendments come because of new information that has come to you as managers that never was presented to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Perhaps it would not be true to answer that entirely in the affirmative, but the changes are made largely by reason of new evidence which has come to the attention of the committee, and some of these changes, more or less changes in form, have resulted from further examination of the question. This is somewhat as lawyers do in their pleadings. They often ask the privilege of making an amendment.

Mr. SNELL. And the gentleman's position is that as agents of the House it is not necessary to have the approval of his committee, which made the original impeachment charges?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I have no doubt about that; I have no doubt about the accuracy of that statement.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. In just a moment. If any further information is desired by the House with regard to these pleadings, I shall yield to my colleague on the committee, Mr. PERKINS, who is really senior to my colleague, Mr. HOBBS. These gentlemen are more familiar with the later discoveries and the investigation than I am, because they conducted it.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MAY. The whole sum and substance of the amended articles of impeachment is to make them more specific and certain in the nature of amended pleadings, such as we do in court, pointing out the particular matters to which this applies, and it is not any new thing, except to more particularize so as to make more definite.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It is not new, except that these gentlemen who made the investigation believe they have made a discovery of certain facts which ought to be presented to the Senate in connection with the case.

Mr. MAY. And this pleading authorizes the presentation of evidence on that subject?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. I had not heard of the matter before, but as I understand from what the gentleman says he is not including new charges. Of course, if the gentleman is including new charges, and the House is going to be asked to vote on whether or not this man in their judgment is guilty of those charges, there certainly should be some hearing before the House and some evidence presented on which the House might pass its judgment. On the other hand, if the charges or articles were crudely drawn, and it is the purpose of these articles to perfect or correct that crudeness, then I can see how it could be a matter of form largely, so far as this resolution is concerned.

Do these new articles include new charges, which have not been considered by the House?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Possibly I can make clear just what they do include. Except for what I have designated as the three new articles, the proposed changes are such changes as have occurred to the managers should be made to clarify and make more certain the allegations, and make them more nearly conform to what it is contemplated will be the evidence. As the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] will recall, there is a change in the original articles of impeachment that Judge Ritter was engaged in the practice of law. At least it meant to charge that. The gentleman will remember that there is an additional charge contained in these new articles of impeachment of further activity on the part of the judge in the practice of the law after he went on the bench.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. As far as I am concerned, I intend to let this go through, but I do not want a practice established here which is wrong, that is, that this House informally, without notice, and without consideration, vote on new specific charges on which a man is to be tried in the Senate, without any information on the part of the committee which studied the matter, or without any information on the part of the House, respecting the new charges. Assuming, for instance, that you were to add another charge, charging this man with larceny, and it had not been discussed at all except by the managers. You bring in another charge, charging this man with larceny; it would seem that the House should at least know on what you base that charge before it is asked in a solemn way to impeach this man on that charge. When the next case comes I do not want to be in the position where some will say, "That is what we did in the Louderback case or the English case", or some other case, because if we did it in the English case, or the Louderback case we were wrong.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. RICH. If the things which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] says are true, why should they be permitted to come in in this case, if your committee has not given further consideration to these charges, and bring something here that you do not know definitely is the case? You have to make up your minds before you bring something here to impeach this man if you expect the House of Representatives to agree to this resolution, because it is not right for you to do it without your own personal knowledge.

Mr. MICHENER. I think the House wants to do everything within its power to have our managers present all the facts to the Senate, but my whole inquiry is aimed at the question as to whether or not this House could morally vote to include articles of impeachment or new charges against any person, about which the House has no information whatever. We must not do it, as a matter of form.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I make a further brief statement, because we are due in the Senate soon. If I may have the attention of the House, I will try to make a clarifying statement in regard to this whole matter.

As I have had occasion to mention before, much of the confusion in impeachment proceedings grows out of the fact of the confusion between the power under the British system and the power under the American system and the character of prosecution under the British system and the character of prosecution under the American system. I think American lawyers and laymen now agree that under the American system, impeachment is an ouster suit, a civil action. The House recently voted to direct a prosecution at the bar of the Senate to separate a Federal judge from his official position. In the resolution the managers on the part of the House were authorized to file any additional pleadings. The central thing that the House agreed upon was that, in its judgment, whether right or wrong, this judge ought to be ousted from his office. That was the major thing. That is the thing of substance that the House agreed upon. All Members of the House cannot go to the Senate. The House selects certain managers to represent it in an effort to oust a Federal judge whom the House has determined, in its judgment, ought to be ousted.

I agree with the gentleman from Michigan that with regard to these matters we ought to exercise very great caution, but it seems to me that in this procedure is an unnecessary consumption of the time of the Members of the House, who, of necessity, cannot go into the details of the consideration of the separate items and cannot take the time to pass judgment upon changes in pleadings which, in the judgment of its lawyers, and that is the position we occupy, ought to be effected. In the English case, which was the last case, as I recall, in which this question arose, counsel for the respondent objected to what I now recall was article V of the charges. The managers on the part of the House amended article V of the charges and came back to the floor of the House and the House approved that amendment, and we went to trial on those impeachment charges, including article V, the amended article which the House had agreed to. To all practical purposes, this is a lawsuit. The people are one party and the judge is the other party. I do not believe it is feasible in the conducting of a lawsuit for those who represent as large a body as this body to make an explanation that they thoroughly understand in the details of pleadings. It cannot be done. Most of you Members are lawyers. You know that very frequently in the preparation of a case and joinder of issue there is necessity to modify the pleadings, and you never consult your client about it. I would be glad if it could be done in another way. I would be glad if this whole cumbersome machinery could be gotten rid of. I am thoroughly convinced that good behavior is a justiciable issue and can be tried in the courts of the country, and I am about ready to submit a tentative bill to bring that about; but now we have to proceed in this cumbersome way, and the managers who made the chief investigation, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PERKINS], who is ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], one of the younger members, suggested that these changes should be made.

I happen to be one of the managers also. I have sat in council with these gentlemen. It is their opinion that these amendments ought to be made before we attempt to join issue in the Senate, and this is why we are here.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I understood the gentleman to say a moment ago that the House had decided that the judge in question ought to be ousted from office, but it is my understanding the House by its action merely decided there was probable cause for his ousting and that this is tantamount to the action of a committing magistrate in binding a party over for a hearing on probability of guilt. I do not understand it was our decision that he should be ousted.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion. I would like to modify my statement, because the gentleman is more nearly accurate than I. What the House decided was that the judge ought to be put to trial before the Senate.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 472

Resolved, That a message be sent to the Senate by the Clerk of the House informing the Senate that the House of Representatives has adopted an amendment to the articles of impeachment heretofore exhibited against Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, and that the same will be presented to the Senate by the managers on the part of the House.

And also, that the managers have authority to file with the Secretary of the Senate, on the part of the House any subsequent pleadings they shall deem necessary.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HOT SPRINGS, N. MEX.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7024) to authorize the sale by the United States to the municipality of Hot Springs, N. Mex., the northeast half of the southeast quarter and the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 6, township 14 south, range 4 west, Hot Springs, N. Mex., with Senate amendments, and agree in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 4, after "1933" insert " ", pursuant to the provisions of section 17 of the act of November 9, 1929 (42 Stat. 212).

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize the sale by the United States to the municipality of Hot Springs, N. Mex., of the north half of the southeast quarter and the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 6, township 14 south, range 4 west, New Mexico principal meridian, New Mexico."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish the gentleman from New Mexico would make a short explanation of these amendments. So far as I know there is no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The House passed a bill authorizing the sale of certain land to the municipality of Hot Springs, N. Mex. In the Senate an error was found in the description of the property. The Senate amendments correct the description and amend the title.

Mr. SNELL. It is nothing but a change of the description of a piece of land.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate amendments?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMEMORATIVE 50-CENT PIECES, LONG ISLAND, N. Y.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 11323) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of the first settlement on Long Island, N. Y., with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of the first settlement on Long Island, N. Y., there shall be coined at a mint of the United States to be designated by the Director of the Mint not to exceed 100,000 silver 50-cent pieces of standard size, weight, and composition, and of a special appropriate single design to be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, but the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the necessary dies and other preparations for this coinage.

"Sec. 2. The coins herein authorized shall bear the date 1936, irrespective of the year in which they are minted or issued, shall be legal tender in any payment to the amount of their face value, and shall be issued only upon the request of the chairman or secretary of the Long Island Tercentenary Committee upon payment by him of the par value of such coins, but not less than 5,000 such coins shall be issued to him at any one time and no such coins shall be issued after the expiration of 1 year after the date of enactment of this act. Such coins may be disposed of at par or at a premium by such committee, and the net proceeds shall be used by it in defraying the expenses incidental and appropriate to the commemoration of such event.

"Sec. 3. All laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same, regulating and guarding the process of coinage, providing for the purchase of material, and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of coins, for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting, for the security of the coins, or for any other purposes, whether such laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein authorized."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman explain this amendment?

Mr. COCHRAN. It is simply a strengthening of the phraseology of the bill to make more certain that there shall be no cost to the Federal Government.

Mr. SNELL. Is that all there is to it?

Mr. COCHRAN. That is all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRELIMINARY SURVEY REPUBLICAN RIVER, KANS.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8030) to authorize a preliminary examination of Republican River, Smoky Hill River, and minor tributaries of Kansas River, in the State of Kansas, with a view to the control of their floods, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "in the State of Kansas."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize a preliminary examination of Republican River, Smoky Hill River, and minor tributaries of Kansas River, with a view to the control of their floods."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the amendments.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. As I understand them, they simply enlarge the power granted in the original bill to permit the survey to be continued outside the State of Kansas. This is necessary because the river flows through Nebraska as well.

Mr. SNELL. What was this preliminary survey?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON] to answer the question as this is his bill.

Mr. CARLSON. This is for a preliminary survey of a river. The bill as originally drawn contained the words "in the State of Kansas." About two-thirds of the river lies in Nebraska, so the Senate has taken out the words "in the State of Kansas."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CARLSON. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. What did I understand the name of the river to be?

Mr. CARLSON. It is a good name, "Republican River."

Mr. SNELL. I do not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ACQUISITION OF LANDS NEAR MIAMI, FLA.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8372) to authorize the acquisition of lands in the vicinity of Miami, Fla., as a site for a naval air station and to authorize the construction and installation of a naval air station thereon, with a Senate amendment, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

THE NATIONAL HOUSING ACT AND ITS ADMINISTRATION BY THE NATIONAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION AS IT APPLIES TO FINANCING REHABILITATION OF TENEMENT HOUSES IN SLUM AND BLIGHTED AREAS IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, we hear a great deal about slum and blighted areas in the congested tenement-house sections of large urban centers, and in particular of the type found in my congressional district in the city of New York, and may be found in other districts in the poorer sections of the city.

I have heard many definitions given of the terms "slum" and "blighted" tenements and the possibility of making physical alterations which will modernize them to meet the provisions of the multiple-dwelling law of the State of New York. As to the aforesaid definitions, the best to my mind is given by the United States Information Service, as follows:

"A slum" is most simply defined as "housing (on whatever scale) so inadequate or so deteriorated as to endanger the health, safety, or the morals of its inhabitants." "A blighted area" is defined as a "residential area on the downgrade, which has not reached the slum stage."

TENANTS DOOMED

For the information of those not informed of the plight of both tenants and owners of these outworn and obsolete multiple dwellings, they are forced by the new amendments to the multiple-dwelling law in the State of New York to make their buildings, through mandatory legislation, modern in every detail. This requires extensive alterations calling for vast outlay of expense. If this law is enforced, and the commissioner of tenement house department, Hon. Langdon W. Post, is recorded as having stated he "will enforce the law", then the owners and tenants of the so-called slum tenements are doomed to be victims of a distinct failure on the part of mortgagees to make coordinated effort with building industry for the renovation and rehabilitation of said tenements.

OWNERS HANDCUFFED

The owner is financially handcuffed and unable to negotiate for loans required to reconstruct their buildings and will no doubt suffer the loss of their equity. With respect to the blighted type, it is possible under the provisions of the National Housing Act to negotiate loans up to $50,000 insured by the Federal Government, which will enable them to remodel and reconstruct their buildings according to law. This low-cost housing problem is one of the most difficult to solve. The various units of so-called low-cost housing built through subsidies granted by the Government do not reach down far enough to lower brackets averaging $3 to $5 per room per month.

Private industry finds it impossible to invest in such type of low-cost construction because it is nonprofit producing. Therefore it is the opinion of many experts in this important field of industry that the Government must temporarily lead the way by guaranteeing building loans or such other plan that may be found to be feasible and practical in the premises. It is the honest opinion of all unbiased minds that the Federal Government is exhausting every conceivable means to find a solution to this perplexing problem and keep within bounds of the Constitution. Federal agencies are cooperating and conferring constantly with labor and industry, as well as with State, municipal, and private organizations in a concentrated effort to give practical relief in the affected slum and blighted areas. President Roosevelt has made it an emphatic declaration of national policy. This policy is that the broad interests of the Nation require that special safeguards should be thrown around home ownership as a guarantee of social and economic stability, and that to protect home owners is a proper concern of the Government. We are working toward the ultimate objective of making it possible for American families to live as Americans should.

WORK FOR UNEMPLOYED

It is the opinion of experts that the essence of any remedy to restore normalcy throughout the country to our economic structure is work and wages for the 85 percent of the unemployed members of the various crafts in the building industry.

The following plan, submitted to me by experts who have made an intensive study of this subject, will be of interest to every Member of Congress:

PROPOSED PLAN FOR A NATIONAL PUBLIC-HOUSING PROGRAM

The time has come when the frequent pledges of the administration to develop a clear-cut, permanent national public-housing program, designed to improve workers' living conditions, reemploy building workers at fair wages in productive work, and broaden and stabilize the potential market of the building industry, must be fulfilled.

The housing problem, as we see it, comes down to one simple question: How can an adequate supply of decent new housing be built for families with annual incomes of $1,500, $1,000, and less? This group comprises from half to two-thirds of the population today, and even in 1929 the vast majority of skilled industrial workers earned less. Bad living conditions will continue, the residential building industry will remain a speculative "luxury trade", and an extreme housing shortage will be unavoidable—unless this question is answered in the near future.

Private enterprise cannot do this job. It has not done it in the past, and it is not doing it today even with the aid of Government-guaranteed mortgages.

Local governments cannot do it alone. Their financial condition is too weak and their resources too restricted to permit them to raise any of the necessary subsidies for low-rent housing. The establishment of local housing authorities capable of initiating, constructing, and operating housing projects, even if the subsidies are provided by the Federal Government, cannot be accomplished all at once. Federal demonstrations of proper standards and efficient large-scale planning technique, will in most cases have to be done first.

The Federal Government cannot provide real leadership or concrete achievements as long as its housing agencies are on a temporary, emergency, work-relief basis. There will be very few efficient local housing authorities until there is a permanent Federal housing authority, equipped with the necessary powers and funds.

In view of these obvious facts, the administration should not delay in pushing forward an adequate legislative program for housing. This responsibility has already been assumed, although in a very small way in the work of the P. W. A. housing division and of suburban resettlement. And the responsibility for protecting the interests of owners and private financial agencies in middle-class and upper-class housing has been taken over by the Federal Government in a very large way, indeed. The H. O. L. C. and the F. H. A. have together about $4,000,000,000 worth of commitments in this class of residential property.

Is it too much to ask that the Federal Government should do something, even though not on such a Herculean scale, for the actual construction of much-needed dwellings for that half of our population who cannot hope for improved housing conditions by any other means?

The American Federation of Labor at its last convention unanimously adopted a resolution on a public-housing program. It is now the duty of the American Federation of Labor, as the only organized representatives not only of the building-trades workers but also of millions of families in need of better homes, to present this program in more concrete terms. Following are recommendations for immediate Federal legislation and a national housing policy and program:

A NATIONAL PUBLIC-HOUSING AUTHORITY; PREMISES AND GENERAL POLICIES

1. There must be a definite long-term program for the provision of an adequate supply of low-rent housing, available to families who cannot secure decent housing through ordinary private initiative.
2. This program should be entrusted to a new, permanent national public-housing authority, set up in corporate form, with a three- or five-man board on which labor and consumers are represented.
3. All Government-aided, large-scale, low-rent housing activities should be carried out through this authority, except strictly rural housing and rural resettlement, which properly belong to the field of agricultural planning.

4. The national public-housing authority must be independent of any agency such as F. H. A., primarily concerned with the financing and refinancing of individual middle-class and upper-class homes. Such agencies, and the interests with which they are naturally allied, have too often proven themselves to be hostile to the purposes and procedure of a public-housing program.

5. In view of the need for immediate and effective action, and also in consideration of the impending acute shortage of homes, Federal aid must not be limited to the direct reconstruction of central slum areas.

6. On the other hand, housing for industrial workers must in general be located within easy reach of a variety of work opportunities, and projects must not be set up on the basis of part-time industry and compulsory gardening. In isolated areas, subsistence homesteads merely extend the feudal conditions already existing in many one-industry and company towns. In the suburbs of larger cities they will only serve to keep the level of cash wages down.

7. The national public-housing authority should work through local public-housing authorities and cooperative or other non-profit private agencies representing labor or consumers. Such local agencies should, wherever and whenever possible, initiate, construct, own, and manage housing projects.

STANDARDS TO BE MAINTAINED IN ALL PUBLIC-AIDED HOUSING PROJECTS

1. Prevailing union wage rates, and union working conditions, must be maintained in the design, construction, and operation of all housing projects receiving public aid. In general, all public-aided housing should be constructed by prequalified contractors.

2. There must be bona fide labor and consumer representation on both the national public-housing authority and on all local public-housing authorities eligible to receive Federal aid.

3. Projects should be large enough to be planned as complete neighborhood units, including recreational and social facilities and meeting halls.

4. Minimum physical standards of construction and dwelling design should be set up for each region, below which no public-aided housing can fall.

5. Projects must be so set up and operated that they will remain permanently within reach of the income groups for whom they were intended. Management must be professional and not political.

POWERS AND APPROPRIATIONS

1. The Federal Government must expect to supply practically all of the subsidy needed to make up the difference between "economic rent" and what low-income families can pay. For this purpose the authority must have the power to make capital grants, loans at less than the cost of the money, and clearly defined contractual annual grants.

2. The authority must have the power to make self-liquidating loans to local agencies. These agencies should be encouraged, however, to raise as much of their capital as possible themselves, and the authority should have the power to guarantee the obligations of local agencies.

3. Since most local authorities will be inexperienced and unable to take their full share of responsibility at the outset, and since immediate construction and widespread demonstrations of modern housing standards are essential, the authority must itself have the power to construct and manage housing projects.

4. To carry out these purposes, the authority should receive in this session of Congress an appropriation of $500,000,000, to be expended within the next 2 years. This sum will go for capital and annual grants, interest subsidies, and running expenses. In addition, it should have the power to issue bonds and to borrow from the Postal Savings Bank and other semipublic sources, in order to provide funds for self-liquidating loans.

BUILDING IMPORTANT ELEMENT

I believe that not until a comprehensive and constructive Nation-wide program of stimulating influences is organized, to give life and energetic vitality to the existing dormant building-construction industry, will we balance our economic structure and bring happiness and contentment into the millions of homes in the Nation. In my own humble opinion, building construction constitutes one of the highly important elements in the life of the Nation, and that it will prove itself, if given the proper opportunity, to be the most powerful essential instrumentality in the Government's heroic efforts to make better living conditions for the 1,500,000 of people forced through no fault of their own to live in the 67,000 slum and blighted tenements of the city of New York.

THE ROBINSON-PATMAN BILL

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Robinson-Patman bill has been reported favorably by the Committee on the Judiciary of the House by a vote of 11 to 6. The report will be filed by the Hon. HUBERT UTTERBACK for the committee at an early date, and I hope every Member of the House reads the bill and the report.

EQUAL RIGHTS BILL

This bill is not penalizing any person or corporation. It is intended to give equal rights to all and special privileges to none. It will not place a burden or tax on chain stores. It will not deny chain stores any right, privilege, or benefit that they are justly entitled to receive. It will, however, give the independent merchants the same rights and privileges granted by manufacturers to chain stores based upon the same quantity of purchases, and so forth. It will not compel manufacturers to charge chain stores high prices for their goods, but it will compel manufacturers to give independents the same prices under the same conditions. A factory that sells 25 percent of its output to a chain-store corporation will not be permitted to give the chain-store corporation a better price than it gives to the independents who purchase the other 75 percent of the factory output.

CONSUMERS SAVED TWO AND ONE-FOURTH BILLION DOLLARS A YEAR

There is an effort being made by certain selfish, greedy, monopolistic interests to mislead the people and have them believe that the enactment of this bill into law will cost the consumers $750,000,000 a year. If chain-store corporations doing 25 percent of the retail distribution business can save the consumers $750,000,000 a year the independent merchants who do the other 75 percent of the retail distribution business will be able to save the consumers two and a quarter billion dollars a year when they receive the same prices as the chain stores receive. Certainly no one will contend that those who purchase the smaller part of a manufacturer's output are entitled to a better price than those who purchase the major part. Competition is guaranteed. The weasel phrases in the Clayton Act are removed and teeth are inserted instead.

EQUAL OPPORTUNITY

If this bill is enacted into law it will greatly curb monopoly, give independent business a fair opportunity, restore employment, and greatly assist consumers, farmers, and wage earners.

NATIONAL YOUTH ADMINISTRATION

Mr. MERRITT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address made by my colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MERRITT of New York. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address by Hon. JOSEPH E. CASEY, of Massachusetts, on March 16, 1936:

It is a privilege and a pleasure for me to come here to Lunenburg and talk to such a splendid gathering upon a subject which you have chosen—the National Youth Administration.

It may be that because I belong to the younger group in Congress I feel more keenly the problem of youth. But whatever the reason, I believe most sincerely that our Government should become deeply conscious of the seriousness of this problem.

True, the Civilian Conservation Corps was a splendid step in the right direction. In March of 1933 it enrolled 300,000 young men between the ages of 18 and 25 in 1,200 camps throughout the country. This number has since been increased to nearly half a million. The conservation program gave these youths an opportunity to improve their minds and bodies and also provided financial help that was so sorely needed by their families. They are doing a most useful work in preserving our forests and in helping prevent soil erosion and floods throughout the country. I am happy to announce that the civilian conservation camps' enrollment will not be decreased and that this splendid program will continue in full force and effect. I am unreservedly in favor of continuing these camps.

The civilian conservation program was a beautifully conceived and marvelously executed plan. It does not, however, solve the youth problem. It not only makes no provision for girls and young women, but, above and beyond these, there are hundreds of thousands of boys and young men who do not come within its scope. Hence the necessity for the National Youth Administration.

The National Youth Administration was established June 26, 1935, as a division of the Works Progress Administration with a budget of $50,000,000. It aims to provide needy young people with educational, recreational, training, and work opportunities. With these aims I am in entire accord. By helping needy students continue in school the National Youth Administration not only provides them with an education but it takes them out of a labor market that is already vastly overcrowded. By providing recreational facilities, it is enabling the youth of the land to build up its health and to find an outlet for its abundant energy in a clean and wholesome manner. It was the Duke of Wellington who said that the Battle of Waterloo was won on the playing fields of Eton. It may be that the battle against the depression will be won on the playing fields of America.

The third aim—to provide training and work opportunities is a most desirable one. Under present circumstances very little can be done. The National Youth Administration has accomplished something, however. It has provided part-time work projects for young people coming from work-relief families, whereby they may work for one-third of a month and receive a one-third security wage appropriate to their locality and the type of work done.

This is the first opportunity, apart from the Civilian Conservation Corps, that the younger group has had to take advantage of the Government's provision for work relief. In the past, regulations have provided that work relief was available to only one member of the family, namely, the head.

By this means young people have some small basis for independence—a dime for bus fare, an occasional movie, a chance to give a girl an ice-cream soda—pitifully small, to be sure, but of tremendous importance to the self-respect and dignity of 18.

I know that there are some who believe youth should have been left to itself—to do or die—upon the theory that is the way to make them self-reliant, thrifty, and courageous. To them I ask, How can youth practice these virtues when there is no opportunity to do so? How can a young person alone buck a vast and intricate industrial system? I know that some of them have done it, but they were exceptional. I am pleading for the average American girl and boy.

Since 1929 hundreds of thousands of young people with high hopes, eager ambitions, and splendid dreams have entered a world where it is no longer enough to have the will and ability to work. Unable to get work they are caught in a vicious circle—without experience they cannot get jobs and because they cannot get jobs they cannot acquire experience.

I would widen the scope of youthful opportunities. I would follow the English system and train them for civil-service examinations and for diplomatic posts. Let us open up careers in public service for them, so that in the future Government positions may be filled by those best fitted for them rather than the present system of filling them with party followers whenever there is a change in administration.

I say to you of the older generation, captains of industry, judges on the bench, statesmen, you all had something out of life, but tell me, wasn't the best time, that time when you were young, young and had nothing, except a chance to feel your strength? That is what youth asks today. An opportunity to feel its strength. Do not deny them this opportunity. Do not destroy youth—youth with the faith, with the strength, with the romance of illusions.

For 7 years youth has been beating upon the door of opportunity with no success. For 7 years youth has come of age in a world where all is changing, confused, and insecure. Is it too much to ask that young people be afforded the opportunities that our fathers and grandfathers had?

Young America is looking forward to the day when it will bear great responsibilities. It is looking forward to the day when it will guide the destinies of our Nation. To this day old America must look forward, too. If young America is not prepared, if it has been handicapped by the present economic and social maladjustments, it is old America which is responsible. It is the future of America that is at stake. Gerald Raftery sets this forth beautifully in his poem entitled "Boy."

"His hands are busy now with bat and ball—
But some day on the levers of the world,
On strange, unknown controls these hands will call
A new world forth; on steering wheels curled
Their strength will guide (through what new element?)
Another age; at work on drawing board
These hands will map the clean, aloof ascent
Of starward-reaching towers, human-cored.

"His eyes, that crinkle now into a grin
Of half-embarrassment, one day will see
A wider world than we can ever win,
A universe we cannot dream to be;
Further in time and space than we have seen
His eyes will see, and watch without surprise
A million miracles of bright routine
Beyond the furthest dreaming of our eyes.

"His brain that puzzles now on a plus b
Will build and plan more bravely on the earth
And battle to the shining victory
Against disease and poverty and dearth.
Beyond our ways his brain will carry on,
Being armed with eagerness and strength and youth,
To learn triumphantly when we are gone
More than we ever knew—or taught—of truth."

REPORT OF THE UNITED STATES EMPLOYMENT SERVICE

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a brief report of the Director of the United States Employment Service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following brief report of the Director of the United States Employment Service:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
UNITED STATES EMPLOYMENT SERVICE,
Washington, March 28, 1935.

HON. WILLIAM P. CONNERY, JR.,
Chairman, Committee on Labor,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN CONNERY: Responding to your inquiry, I submit the following summary of the operations of the United States Employment Service for the 30 months ended December 31, 1935. You will please note that these statistics represent the operations of combined State employment services and the National Reemployment Service for this period of 2½ years.

The number of different individuals applying for employment at the offices of the combined services was 20,714,703.

The total number of placements made by these offices were 13,094,125.

Of the total number of placements, there were 6,219,704 placements on Civil Works Administration and Works Progress Administration projects. The remainder, or 6,874,421, represents placements made on projects of the Public Works Administration or in private industry. The number placed in private industry during this period was 2,892,355.

In response to your further inquiry concerning the Veterans' Placement Service, I submit this statement:

The Veterans' Placement Service is a function of each of the operating offices of the State Employment Services and of the National Reemployment Service.

The priority of opportunity for employment on public works projects as prescribed in the National Industrial Recovery Act for ex-soldiers with dependents, if and when qualified, has resulted in a larger proportion of placements for the veterans than for the whole total of those registered.

The total number of different veterans who applied for employment during this period was 1,440,380. The number of placements made (excluding placements made on work-relief projects) was 1,365,578.

I shall be pleased to submit any further information that you may desire.

Very truly yours,

W. FRANK PERSONS, Director.

AMERICAN AGRICULTURAL ADVANTAGES UNDER THE RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain statistical material, for which I have secured an estimate from the Public Printer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, at intervals since the opening of this session of Congress we have listened to denunciations of the various reciprocal-trade agreements entered into by the administration. We have had charges hurled that "agriculture was laid on the altar of foreign trade." We have had inserted in the RECORD tables which have purported to show the loss that agriculture might suffer under these agreements, based on the concessions granted foreign countries by the United States. These tables have been easy to compile for the reason that the concessions that we have made to foreign countries on agricultural products have been relatively small, relatively unimportant, and have been safeguarded in all important cases by quota arrangements.

No one, however, has yet arisen to present an accurate picture of the benefits that American agriculture has obtained under these agreements, and so with the permission of the House I desire today to speak somewhat on that subject and to insert tables which will show the actual benefits which already have been, and will be, received by agriculture of the United States from concessions made by foreign countries.

Eleven trade agreements have thus far been concluded and nine have come into effect, as follows: Cuba, September 3, 1934; Belgium, May 1, 1935; Haiti, June 3, 1935; Sweden,

August 5, 1935; Brazil and Canada, January 1, 1936; the Netherlands, February 1, 1936; Switzerland, February 15, 1936; Honduras, March 2, 1936. In addition thereto there are pending trade agreements with Colombia and Nicaragua, details of which are available.

In every one of these agreements substantial reductions in import duties are made by the countries concerned on agricultural products of the United States, including my own State of California, which enter into foreign trade. May I say that the prosperity of California agriculture depends in an important measure on export trade. Criticism has been levied on some of these agreements in that they were taking care of only products of Midwestern States, but a careful analysis of the appended tables will show any unbiased reader wherein all branches of agriculture, from all States, have benefited.

It must be remembered that these agreements are reciprocal-trade agreements. We have given concessions, it is true, and in other agreements to be entered into we will give other concessions; but the balance is so strikingly in favor of our own growers and producers that I think it well worth while to give the concrete facts to the farmer so that he may judge for himself.

It must also be remembered that there is an obvious attempt to confuse the farmer by making him believe that the slight increase in agricultural imports which occurred in the last year is attributable to these reciprocal-trade concessions. Only four of these, however, were in effect during any part of 1935. Only the agreement with Cuba was in effect for the whole year. No agricultural concessions were granted to Sweden, and during the period of 1935 that the Haitian agreement was in effect agricultural imports from that source, owing to a shortage of crops, decreased over a comparable period of 1934. The concessions made to Belgium on agricultural products were small and insignificant, and there was but a slight increase in these import items during 1935. As to Cuba, the principal imports, sugar and tobacco, were placed on a quota basis, and no complaint is being received from producers of these commodities.

The Canadian agreement has drawn a particular fire from those who would use the farmer as a shield in their warfare to keep intact present ruinous trade barriers. A statement which appeared recently in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD (p. 2866) purporting to tell the story of increased imports of Canadian agriculture brought in under this agreement included the items of fresh pork, milk powder, fresh beef, bacon, hams, and wool, on which no concessions whatever were made by the United States. This misleading type of information must be answered conclusively, not merely by stating that it is misleading but by showing to the farmer himself how the market for his own products has been widened in Canada and elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker, hundreds of other concessions on other items allied to agriculture industries, such as dressed furs, wines, and fish products, and on industrial products, minerals, petroleum and its products, have been made in these agreements. It is not my intention to set those items out in the tables which I shall append. It is my desire simply to answer conclusively the statement that agriculture has been sold down the river or "across the lakes."

With these remarks I append hereto a series of tables listing the agriculture products on which concessions have been obtained by the United States in the nine trade agreements now in effect and also in those concluded with Colombia and Nicaragua, which are now awaiting exchange of ratification. These tables are taken from official sources and include every item on which the farmers and producers of the United States have received concessions from foreign countries under these agreements. Anyone who will study these tables carefully must become convinced of the magnitude of the reciprocal-trade program and the enormous benefits that our own agriculture stands to achieve under it.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS ON WHICH CONCESSIONS WERE OBTAINED BY THE UNITED STATES IN THE ELEVEN TRADE AGREEMENTS CONCLUDED TO MAR. 15, 1936 CANADIAN AGREEMENT

The majority of the duty reductions occur as a result of the extension to the United States of the most-favored-foreign-nation treatment. In the column headed "Nature of assurance", three designations are used as follows: (1) "M. F. F. N." indicates that the reduction in duty is the result of the extension of most-favored-foreign-nation treatment, without assurance that this rate may not be increased; (2) "Bound M. F. F. N." indicates that the reduction in duty is the result of the extension of most-favored-foreign-nation treatment and that this rate had been bound against increase during the life of the agreement; (3) "Bound below M. F. F. N." indicates that the reduction in duty involves a concession below the present most-favored-foreign-nation treatment and that this rate has been bound against increase during the life of the agreement. The phraseology of the tariff classifications has been abridged. The initials "n. o. p." signify not otherwise provided for more specifically elsewhere in the Canadian tariff. The letter "(s)" following a minimum specific duty rate indicates that it applies only in specified seasons.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, April 6, after the reading of the Journal and disposition of business on the Speaker's table, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes in reply to the gentleman from New York in connection with his criticism of the Secretary of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if the gentleman can defend the Secretary of Agriculture in connection with things he has done in this administration, the gentleman from Oregon ought to be given an hour.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial appearing in this morning's Washington Herald entitled "Polecat Politics."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object to the editorial. I do not object to the gentleman's remarks.

NEW ENGLAND TODAY AND TOMORROW

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address that I made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address which I delivered on March 26, 1936, over the radio:

The Yankee network is to be cordially commended for the patriotic service it is rendering not only to New England but to the Nation and possibly to the world by developing these New England town meetings of the air. In these tumultuous times many ponder whether or not government of the people can cope with the stupendous problems of these days. Across the seas dictatorships are established and parliaments are abolished.

Dictatorships in their inception sometimes offer a glittering contrast to the inefficiency and paralysis that often seems to be characteristic of popular government.

The sturdy individualism of New England developed in the town meetings and giving its stamp to the pioneers who did so much to make America in the last century needs now to reassert itself in coping with these new problems and demonstrating the capacity of revitalized patriots to see and think and speak in terms of a nation and a world in dire distress.

The remarkable response of New England communities to the appeal of the Red Cross for funds to assist in flood relief demonstrates that the voluntary spirit of cooperation has not disappeared in any abject dependence upon governmental aid.

In recent years the Government has done much in many lines.

Northern New England realizes the significance of the Passamaquoddy development in giving relief to those who are in need, and in assisting in the industrial rehabilitation of an area that was certainly depressed.

We profoundly appreciate the consideration of the authorities in Washington and their readiness to help in every way with the funds that have been placed at their disposal and the authority that they may now exercise. New England, however, seems more than ever determined to do everything within its power to help itself in the solution of the problems with which we are faced.

It is our understanding here in Washington that the Red Cross is assisting all communities in extending aid to those suffering from the recent devastating floods and that the Red Cross expects to help greatly in individual rehabilitation in homes and farms.

Meanwhile the Works Progress Administration, otherwise known as the W. P. A., through its administrators in each State will immediately receive and promptly pass upon projects to restore public property of any kind that has been damaged by the floods. This applies to bridges, highways, schoolhouses, waterworks, sewer systems, public buildings of any kind, and any other public property. They ask only that the local community make such contribution as it is able.

In carrying out these projects the usual limitations as to relief labor and material cost will not apply.

All those in authority here in Washington have been most helpful and sympathetic and ready to cooperate in any way within their power. The New England Senators and Representatives have kept in constant touch with their constituencies and with all the governmental agencies which were in a position to render aid and feel assured of prompt action to afford relief.

As the days and the weeks and the months pass by here in Washington one becomes constantly more impressed with the necessity of contacts with the folks back home. Washington is a vampire city living upon the vitality of a nation. Washington easily becomes mesmerized with its own importance as the wires pour in here from every quarter of the land, and yet it is the farms and the factories of the Nation from which alone Washington may draw its life.

One comes in daily contact here with representatives from every section of the United States and with citizens of every conceivable point of view. Interests and influences of sundry and subtle kinds operate above and below the surface. Every conceivable appeal that may affect human actions is brought to bear here to influence the destiny of a nation.

Yet our constituencies after all are the things we exist to serve. This forum is not the place nor does time permit to discuss the tremendous problems with which this Congress is now faced.

There are not lacking those who feel despair over the capacity of a great self-governing democracy to face the challenge of the economic and social mechanism we have evolved. They suggest the creation of a Frankenstein that will destroy our civilization.

Whether or not our civilization may end in such a catastrophe as have other great civilizations that have preceded us upon this earth, certainly this generation of Americans do not propose to sit idly down and permit our great heritage to be dissipated without a struggle.

There can be no challenge of the profound truth that American democracy may continue to be an example and an inspiration for the struggling peoples of mankind only if the spirit of the New England town meetings shall continue to animate the people of the United States, and they shall individually and resolutely determine the course of their affairs.

The subtle and sinister suggestion that the governmental relief measures incident to this great depression will destroy the independence of the American people and that they will go the way of Greece and Rome, content with their corn and their circuses, is a challenge to the descendants of the 10 generations who have made America preeminent among the nations of the world.

New England has been justly proud of its position as one of the twin settlements from which poured out across a continent the energy and the visitation which have made America what it is today.

New England has long exercised an influence out of all proportion to its size in the councils of the Nation. We should have been more than human if that responsibility had not been sometimes abused and that power sometimes exercised for something less than the welfare of the Nation as a whole.

New England suffers now somewhat for the sins of its fathers in an attitude of mind in other sections of the country that is not always sympathetic with the ideas of New England as to how our national progress may best be served and America made a better nation in which more and better Americans may live richer and better lives.

New England today and tomorrow will be worthy of its past if it shall go forward, true to its ideals and traditions, and more than ever determined to lead the Nation away from the morass in which civilization would inevitably be engulfed if we should yield to the subtle suggestion that popular government is no longer equal to our needs.

The minute men and women of New England may continue to serve the Nation in its hour of greatest need. Surely that opportunity for service lies open before us in individual reconsecration to the spirit of our forefathers and the determination that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOTT. I did not understand the gentleman's objection to my unanimous-consent request. I am not sure just what his objection was.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I objected to the editorial. I do not care what else the gentleman puts in the Record.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will restate his request.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and to include therein an editorial appearing in this morning's Washington Herald entitled "Polecat Politics", which has to do with the Black investigation in the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order for today, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] for 20 minutes.

THE BUDGET AND FOREIGN-TRADE FALLACIES

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that I be not interrupted during the course of my remarks, and I also ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

FAILURE OF ACTING DIRECTOR OF THE BUDGET TO REPLY TO OFFICIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House and of the country to the manner in which inquiries of Members of Congress, and probably all citizens, are treated by officials of the administration.

Under date of March 17, and mailed that day, I addressed a letter to the Honorable David W. Bell, Acting Director of the Budget, in which I called attention to the fact that Members of the House have said on the floor that "the Budget for the ordinary appropriations and expenditures is balanced." I asked Mr. Bell for the authority for that statement and inquired whether it was borne out by his accounts.

Under date of March 26 I again wrote to Mr. Bell, calling his attention to the failure of any reply to reach me and added that I would be glad to have information as to the difference between an ordinary budget and an extraordinary budget. I further inquired under what authority of law there are in existence at this time two budgets.

Up to this morning both of my letters remain unanswered. If the inquiry was not a proper one and if Budget information must be confidential and withheld from Members of Congress, well and good, but that is not my conception of the Budget Director's official position nor of mine as a Member of this House. I, therefore, call upon him publicly to furnish this information. If he does not intend to furnish it, ordinary courtesy would require that he answer my two letters and state his reason for not providing the information I have asked for in an official way.

FOREIGN-TRADE FALLACIES

Mr. Speaker, I was quite surprised at reading in the press the other day certain extracts from the speech by a very prominent Republican before the Economic Club in New York City, wherein he seems to have accepted without question the oft-stated but thoroughly misleading doctrine (a) that we are a creditor nation and (b) that to regain our foreign export markets we must accept more imports.

The gentleman evidently has been misinformed regarding our international position and is unfamiliar with our experience in the last 2 years as regards the attempt to increase exports by increasing imports. I feel sure that he would not have embraced this false doctrine if he had been aware of the true facts.

WE ARE NO LONGER A CREDITOR NATION

In the first place, we are not a creditor nation. Mr. George N. Peek, who until recently was foreign-trade advisor to the President, showed in his letter to the President of April 30, 1935, that our book position as of December 31, 1934, as a creditor nation was wholly dependent upon the value of our direct investments abroad, such as branch factories, mines, plantations, public utilities, and so forth, and upon the status of the war debts. Our direct investments are still being carried on our books at the 1929 valuation of nearly $8,000,000,000, which is 50 to 60 percent too high; and, as far as the actual value of the war debts as an asset is concerned, one man's guess is as good as another's.

If we charged off the war debts and scaled down our foreign investments to the 1936 valuation we find that we are no longer a creditor nation, particularly in view of the large increase in foreign holdings of American securities. Therefore, the argument that we must revise our tariff policy because we are a creditor nation is not sound.

In his reports to the President as foreign trade adviser, Mr. Peek showed that as a result of our international trade in 1934, including both visible and invisible items, we were a net debtor to the world for the year in the amount of $970,000,000. Largely as a result of our huge purchases of gold and silver, and more recently as a result of increased imports under the so-called reciprocal-trade treaties, we had an adverse balance of visible trade in 1935 amounting to some $1,841,000,000. This, of course, does not include invisible items, for which statistics are not yet available, which consistently run against us.

Our adverse balance of international trade in the last 2 years has been settled largely by the transfer to foreigners of American-held securities, and has resulted in a corresponding reduction in our net creditor position. I referred to this fact in my remarks of March 4, and in connection with my remarks of March 17, I inserted in the RECORD a table showing our heavy adverse balance of visible trade during 1934 and 1935. The trend is continuing in the same direction. Therefore, I submit to the proponents of the administration's trade-treaty program the question, whether, on the basis of these facts, we can regard ourselves for practical purposes as a creditor nation, or whether we can accept the theory that we are a creditor nation as a basis for foreign trade and tariff policy?

FOREIGN TRADE INCLUDES MANY INVISIBLE ITEMS

Mr. Speaker, the theory that to regain our export markets we must admit more imports is one of those part truths that is more deceptive than an outright false premise. Many other things besides agricultural and industrial products enter into trade between nations. In addition to merchandise imports and exports, there are the so-called "invisible" items, which include shipping and other services, tourists' expenditures, immigrant and charitable remittances, interest payments, and so on; also gold, silver, and securities. All these items enter into the total balance of payments, and often dominate completely the merchandise balances.

For example, Great Britain, in spite of a definitely adverse balance of merchandise trade, has been able through the sale of her shipping, banking, and other services, and through the receipt of interest from her foreign investments to maintain a favorable balance of payments in 1935 amounting to some 37,000,000 pounds sterling, or approximately $185,000,000.

So far as our own country is concerned, we have in the past depended on a large favorable balance of merchandise trade to offset the heavy invisible balances against us.

We now find this merchandise balance falling off sharply, having dropped from $478,000,000 in 1934 to $234,000,000 in 1935. In February of this year we had an unfavorable balance of merchandise trade in the amount of $10,191,000 as against a favorable balance of $10,508,000 in February a year ago. On top of this, we find during 1934 and 1935 a vast excess of imports over exports, including gold and silver, the proceeds of which have been used by foreigners not for additional purchases of American goods and services, or for payment on public and private debts, but for the repatriation of their own bonds at perhaps 25 cents on the dollar, or for the acquisition of American securities and other capital assets.

FOREIGNERS BUYING AMERICAN SECURITIES RATHER THAN GOODS

The vast increase in our imports has not resulted in any perceptible increase of our commodity exports, and therefore has been of no benefit to American agriculture, industry, or labor but has merely made possible a heavy drain on our liquid assets. This whole matter is very thoroughly and authoritatively discussed by Mr. Peek in a speech before the National Industrial Conference Board last October, which I commend to the attention of the House as being unchallenged, and in my opinion unchallengeable.

INCREASED IMPORTS HAVE NOT RESULTED IN INCREASED EXPORTS

I say emphatically that increased imports do not necessarily result in increased exports. This has been our experience during the past 2 years, and experience is to be relied upon more than theory. It has been said that in order to get foreign countries to purchase from us we must put additional purchasing power in their hands by letting them sell us more of the goods we consume here in the home market. This the administration has done, to the injury of our own farmers, manufacturers, and workingmen who were deprived of the opportunity to supply the domestic market with their products. However, in spite of the fact that in 1935 we imported foreign goods in the amount of $2,047,000,000, an increase of 24 percent over 1934, and in spite of the fact that we bought over $2,000,000,000 of foreign gold and silver at artificially inflated prices, making total imports of more than $4,000,000,000, foreign countries only purchased American goods in the amount of $2,282,000,000, which was an increase of only 7 percent over 1934. There is nothing to indicate that the creation of still further purchasing power in the hands of foreign countries, whether by additional tariff reductions or gold and silver purchases, will result in any further increase in our export trade.

The present administration has based its entire foreign-trade policy upon the false premise to which I have referred. It can and will be challenged. The Republican Party can never accept this fallacious doctrine as a basis for its tariff policy, and it will not allow itself to be committed either directly or indirectly to the foreign-trade theories and fallacies of the present administration. We have more than a valid case against the administration, and we are going to press it in the coming campaign.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to violate the gentleman's request, but I wonder if he would yield to me for a question?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the distinguished Democratic leader.

Mr. BANKHEAD. As I understand it, although I have not been so informed by the gentleman who is now addressing the House, the speech now being delivered by the gentleman from Massachusetts is in answer to a speech made in New York a few days ago by Colonel Knox, the illustrious candidate for nomination as President of the United States, in which Mr. Knox took a position directly opposite to that now being assumed by the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. TREADWAY. I did not name the individual, as stated by the gentleman from Alabama; however, he is right in the assumption that it was Colonel Knox who addressed the Economic Club in New York last week to whom I referred. This gentleman enunciated views directly opposite to those which I hold and directly opposite to views that other men hold as well.

FOREIGNERS ALREADY HAVE TREMENDOUS FREE MARKET IN UNITED STATES

No one can possibly object to our buying abroad in increased quantities those things which we do not produce at home, but which we consume in great quantities. I refer, of course, to such products as coffee, tea, rubber, spices, raw silk, and so on. These articles are now on the free list, and so far as I know no one has sought to have a duty placed upon them. We charge foreign countries nothing for the privilege of selling these commodities in our rich domestic market, and it seems to me that we could well trade our surplus products for these things that we need rather than encourage increased importations of competitive agricultural and industrial products which we can and do produce at home.

We constantly hear it said that our tariff rates are too high, but seldom are any specific instances cited. However, if they are excessive in any instance, adequate machinery is afforded whereby they may be reduced by as much as 50 percent upon a showing that the existing duty more than offsets the difference in foreign and domestic production costs.

WHOLESALE TARIFF REDUCTIONS SOLVE FOREIGN UNEMPLOYMENT PROBLEM, BUT NOT OUR OWN

There is no excuse, in my opinion, for the wholesale reductions being made by the President under the authority granted him by the subservient Democratic Congress. These reductions are being made upon competitive products produced on our own farms and in our own factories, irrespective of differences in foreign advantages in production costs. They have resulted in no compensating advantages in the way of increased exports. Thus the result has been to take a job away from one man without creating a job for another, to close one factory without opening another, to increase the surplus of one farm commodity without finding a market for the surplus of another, to give employment to foreign workers in preference to our own, and to perpetuate our unemployment problem, and lengthen our relief rolls.

FARM EXPORTS DECREASING

The promise was held out that if the President were given the authority to enter into foreign-trade treaties we would be enabled to dispose of our surplus farm products. Instead, agricultural exports have declined. On the other hand, agricultural imports have increased. One of the principal items for which a foreign market was going to be found was lard, but our exports of lard declined from 431,000,000 pounds in 1934 to only 96,000,000 pounds in 1935. Another item was wheat, but our exports of wheat declined from 17,000,000 bushels in 1934 to only 233,000 bushels in 1935.

This list shows there is no such thing as a tariff barrier keeping out agricultural products from foreign countries. I wish there were. There should be such a barrier to protect the agricultural interests of our own country. It is ridiculous to say there are tariff barriers when records and statistics show that no such things exist. Why are we not given some illustrations of what these tariff barriers are? You do not hear anyone give any illustrations or cite any concrete example of the effect of such tariff barriers, and if there were, there is plenty of machinery of Government to correct such a situation.

FARM IMPORTS INCREASING

As against this decline in agricultural exports, agricultural imports have increased as follows: Corn from 3,000,000 bushels in 1934 to 43,000,000 bushels in 1935, wheat from 8,000,000 bushels in 1934 to 27,000,000 bushels in 1935, oats from 6,000,000 bushels in 1934 to 10,000,000 bushels in 1935, live hogs from 7,716 pounds in 1934 to 3,400,000 pounds in 1935, fresh pork from 182,000 pounds in 1934 to 4,000,000 pounds in 1935, and butter from 1,250,000 pounds in 1934 to 22,700,000 pounds in 1935.

We have heard a great deal about tariff barriers, but there is no appearance of them in the importation of these commodities. On the contrary, imports have come in in excessive quantities, crowding out our own products in spite of the existing tariff rates.

TRADE TREATY RESULTS CONTRARY TO EXPECTATIONS

I was very much interested in hearing a gentleman say, a few moments ago, that in 15 minutes he can defend the record of Secretary of Agriculture Wallace. The gentleman has a big job on his hands to perform in 15 minutes.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, who is one of the leading exponents of the administration's present trade policy, admitted in his annual report for 1934 that there was danger of the trade-treaty program producing results other than those that were expected and hoped for. That is exactly what has transpired. In my humble opinion, the repeal of the Reciprocal Tariff Act and the abrogation of the treaties made thereunder should be one of the major planks in the Republican platform in the coming campaign. I feel confident that the coming Republican convention will take up this subject and write a plank that means something when the party appeals to the voters of the country to support the Republican candidates who will be nominated at Cleveland. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. STARNES). Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, on January 3 of this year I introduced a resolution in the House of Representatives asking for a congressional investigation of the administration of Federal relief moneys in the State of Michigan.

I realize that my request for favorable action on this resolution requires explanation on my part. Let me make it clear at the outset that I am not quarreling with the high ideals and purposes behind the granting of Federal assistance to our States and localities to relieve suffering and prevent starvation. I grant the necessity for Federal assistance and laud the actions of our great humanitarian President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, in submitting to Congress his request for funds so that no person will starve in this land of plenty. In spite of the enormous burden that the relief load has placed on our Treasury of the United States, there are times when it seems to me that our grants to the needy have not been large enough.

The administration of President Roosevelt pledged itself to care for these millions of our good citizens who had been deprived of a means of livelihood and brought face to face with starvation because the Republican Party permitted entrenched greed to exploit at will. That pledge has been faithfully kept, and despite the wails that have gone up from certain quarters over an unbalanced Budget, the mass of our people, I know, appreciate what has been done for them.

I realize the magnitude of the task to which the Democratic Party addressed itself. This was an emergency job and one for which machinery of administration did not exist. Most admirable of all policies of this administration of relief as announced by President Roosevelt was that which banned politics. No one with a grain of human sympathy in his make-up would ask that a program of relief be administered other than on a strictly nonpartisan basis. Of all the funds spent by the American Government in our history none have been more precious than these dollars which have been appropriated for direct and work relief. Any man guilty of misusing these funds has committed no ordinary crime. These funds were appropriated to furnish subsistence to families who would otherwise lack food. Misuse of the funds means that children were forced to suffer, their bodies wracked by undernourishment. I can contemplate no more heinous crime than this.

And this is the point of my request for an investigation of the relief administration in Michigan. I have charged publicly and I do so again, that the administration of relief in Michigan has been contaminated by Republican politics, that the program of assistance to the needy has been perverted by Republican politics, that the efficiency of the program has been impaired because of the chicanery of Republican politicians who have administered it. Funds have been misused in Michigan, discrimination has been practiced, and I lay the responsibility for this situation directly upon Dr. William Haber, E. R. A. administrator, deputy administrator of the W. P. A., State director of the National Youth Administration, official in charge of the distribution of surplus commodities, and mouthpiece of Mr. Harry Hopkins, in Michigan.

I am, of course, best acquainted with the situation in my own district in upper Michigan, where the Relief Administration is directed by one of Mr. Haber's henchmen, Walter M. Berry; but from dozens of facts in my possession, I am convinced that elsewhere in the State, the same rotteness prevails. I wish that I had all the facts relative to each instance of perversion that has been called to my attention. If I had these it would not be necessary to ask for an investigation—indictments would be in order.

I should like such an investigation to give to the people of Michigan, and to this Congress, full details as to why it has been necessary to call a grand-jury investigation of the Relief Administration in Antrim County. Among the charges made here are: First, that relief funds given to some persons were charged against others; second, that certain people were paid for work never performed; third, that supplies purchased from a certain drug store for persons not on relief were charged to relief clients; fourth, that pay rolls have been padded; fifth, that bonuses were paid in 1934, when no provision was made for such payment.

I want an investigation to determine the facts as to pay-roll padding in Detroit, estimated at half a million dollars or more. I have seen evidence of where one person's name was carried on at least three pay rolls. I have seen names on pay rolls that are patently fictitious—Julius Caesar, Mark Antony, and other names taken from history books or from the tombstones of some obscure cemetery.

I should like an investigation to inform us as to why in 1933 and 1934, the Relief Administration in Lansing, where Mr. Haber is located, showed extreme favoritism to certain of the coal dealers. I should like to have the facts also as to the purchase and distribution of coal in Detroit, during the past few years. I should like to know why when the city of Detroit stopped buying coal for relief clients, the policy of placing these purchases on bid, which had been in effect for 20 years, was discarded and the orders placed as those in charge of relief desired. Who got the orders and why?

I should like to know how many cases similar to that of Alex. Lewis, clerk in the public-welfare offices in Detroit, caught in 1931 after he had obtained some $200,000 by faking grocery orders and vouchers, can be found.

I should like a check to be made as to the relationship between the relief administration in Detroit and certain real-estate dealers as to the rental of homes for relief clients.

The people of Michigan deserve to know why the Lenawee County Relief Commission was suspended in 1935 and the administrator framed. Why did Mr. Haber's office instruct the Lenawee administrator to bill certain expenses against work projects where the labor was not actually used?

We are entitled to know whether the rural rehabilitation organization, when this agency was a part of the relief administration, made a loan of $24,000 to the Sunrise Co-operative Farm in Saginaw County, and whether this loan was later paid out of relief funds and covered up.

I should also like to know why Mr. Haber ignored the report of a member of the Michigan Society of Architects, made as the result of an investigation during 1934 and 1935, which showed that Government money was ruthlessly wasted and diverted to purposes which could not be legal under the law. I can tell you why. It was because this report showed plainly that the responsibility rested on Mr. William Haber.

I want to know why Mr. Haber permitted Federal funds to be used to build a conservatory of music in Cheboygan, Mich., on private property. Why, when relief administration officials had full knowledge of the facts, did Mr. Haber sanction a conspiracy contract between a certain architect, Davenport, and the county engineer in Berrien County, named Preston, wherein Davenport contracted to bribe Preston with one-half of his commission of 10 percent. A certified copy of the contract and a signed statement by Preston can be obtained. At a hearing before the Michigan Society of Architects board of engineers Davenport admitted the bribery. Max Barton, regional engineer, was implicated in this situation.

Why has Haber permitted materials to be purchased without complying with Government regulations? Why has he accepted false and perjurious statements from architects, such as that of an architect on the juvenile detention home in Detroit? And why have officials implicated in these situations been promoted to positions of high authority rather than dismissed, as was the case of Max Barton, who is now in the employ of the W. P. A. in the Flint region?

I want to know why Mr. Haber appointed an unscrupulous contractor from Flint to be purchasing agent of the W. P. A. there. I refer to Mr. Cecil Kelly. I have information that when Mr. Kelly submitted his bid on the Mayville School, of Mayville, Mich., he endorsed it as follows:

Five hundred dollars is my bid for adding the bleachers to the gymnasium. If there is a lower bid than my bid, deduct $50 from that bid and that will be my final bid.

Why has Mr. Haber employed architects who were not licensed, this being contrary to the compiled laws of Michigan? Why in many instances were no bids taken on material purchased?

Perhaps a real investigation would discover the meaning of a certain telephonic conversation between Dr. Haber and Mr. Berry during the political campaign of 1934, in which Mr. Haber told Mr. Berry to go down the line for Fitzgerald, the Republican candidate for Governor. I have in my possession signed affidavits from two persons who swear that they heard a Mr. Balkema, then a henchman of Haber, state that he listened in on this conversation and that he heard Dr. Haber make this statement.

I should like to know, too, how it happens that a certain Mr. Much—and others, too, could be mentioned—a Republican candidate for township supervisor in Marquette County, Mich., was given the authority to distribute Federal surplus commodities while running for office. My answer is that the whole relief set-up in Marquette County is under complete Republican domination, and that every means possible has been used in the Relief Administration to give political advantage to the Republican Party. Perhaps, too, the Republican character of the Relief Administration in upper Michigan will explain why these officials insisted that they be given the power of naming the distributors of surplus commodities before any merchandise under their control would be moved. I wonder how those families who have been forced to wait for weeks for this supplementary assistance feel when they learn that Republican politics was the cause of their privation.

Perhaps with an investigation we could find out what the true facts are regarding the Misery Bay Road project in Houghton County. In January 1935, the director of the works division of the E. R. A. in Michigan stated that the records in his office showed that $35,000 had been spent on 7.6 miles of this road from Toivola to Misery Bay. The project, according to these records, was 99 percent complete. I have affidavits in my files signed by farmers, residents in these communities, showing that practically no work was ever done on the road. Where did the money go?

I should like to know why men were given work-assignment slips for the Misery Bay road project and then taken to work on a high-school project in a nearby community, Painesdale. I should like to know why no action was taken by the Relief Administration on this situation after it was called to their attention.

I want to refer, too, to another matter that I believe needs explanation. This is the naval-armory project for Hancock, Mich. I am particularly interested in this project, because it is one of the most worth-while projects in my district. Last November, while in Lansing, Mich., I checked on this project and was informed that it had been approved by President Roosevelt and by the Comptroller General. Final approval was given on January 3, 1936, under Treasury warrant no. 1265, which allocated $125,086 of Federal funds for this particular project. I was told in Lansing that moneys allocated to this project were deposited in banks and reserved for exclusive use on this project. I was hopeful that the project would be put into effect soon.

Yesterday, I received a telegram containing information that the moneys allocated to the Hancock Armory had been diverted to be used in Bay City. This was something of a surprise, to say the least. I immediately attempted to reach Mr. Hopkins, but failed to locate either him or his assistant, Mr. Aubrey Williams. I did get in touch with the office of Mr. Howard Hunter, of the W. P. A., and I asked for a definite ruling as to whether funds allocated to one project could be diverted to another. The ruling obtained was that such diversion was not regular or legal. On the basis of this information I wired Mr. J. B. Thornton, of Hancock, Mich., as follows:

Re tel. Hancock Naval Reserves Armory. I have conferred with W. P. A. authorities here and requested definite ruling. Informed as follows: Funds for projects approved by President and Comptroller General with Treasury warrant issued cannot be transferred to any other project. I put concrete problem to them with regard to Hancock Armory. They are making complete investigation here and will notify me very shortly. States authorities of W. P. A. cannot legally divert funds allocated to your project to Bay City. I am contacting State authorities, also, and will notify you as early as possible.

About an hour after the wire had been sent I was called by Hunter's office and informed that the ruling was not what I had been told previously. It seems that Mr. Hopkins issued a bulletin last September giving State W. P. A. administrators power to divert funds from one project to another of a similar classification. It was intimated that the relief load and related conditions were the deciding factor in such cases of diversion. The facts are, of course, that the relief load in Houghton County, Mich., is about as heavy as in any place in Michigan, so that this cannot be the reason for the rejection of the Hancock project.

Within a short time this Congress is going to consider an additional appropriation for work relief, and I think it is high time that we take cognizance of some of the problems involved in the administration of this program. I recognize the need for flexibility in such a program, but, inasmuch as the Members of this House are in the end to be held responsible for the administration of the program, I submit that we should take considerable care in the formulation of the policies under which this program is to operate. I do not believe that the national Administrator, Mr. Harry Hopkins, should be delegated the authority of a dictator. If he is to have this power, his name should be Hitler, not Hopkins. As Members of Congress, we should, by our actions, see that the money we appropriate is used as we intend it to be used. We can do it in spite of the power of Harry Hopkins, as evidenced by the actions a little over a week ago on the C. C. C. camp program. We were told that Harry Hopkins thought the camps ought to be reduced in number. At the time of our meeting I told the members of our group that just as long as we submitted to Harry Hopkins we would be on the receiving end of all the adverse criticism in the country. We took concerted action then, and we can take it again.

I notice that the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] has purposed that the relief moneys be turned over to the individual States, to be administered as each State administration saw fit. The Senator may sincerely believe that this would be a corrective step. I disagree with him, for I know that the Senator's campaign manager, Mr. F. L. Woodworth, is the State welfare director, and I know for whose benefit the money in Michigan would be spent.

Woodworth today works hand in glove with Mr. Haber, and Haber's power in Michigan is already so vast as to make him the biggest detriment the relief program has. Why should Haber be given full authority to play hide and seek with projects which have been approved by the President and the Comptroller General and for which a Treasury warrant has been issued? A case in point is the armory project at Hancock, Mich. One of the best projects in upper Michigan. This project received every approval necessary except that of Mr. Haber, and in spite of the fact that the relief load in Houghton County, Mich., is as high as any place in the United States, Mr. Haber does not see fit to put it in operation. There is something funny about this whole business, and I should like to find out what the truth is.

Why was not the report of the investigation made by a special investigator of the E. R. A. as to the administration of relief in my district made public? I can tell you why, because I have seen a summary of the investigator's report. The investigator found that under Haber and Berry, who handles the relief in upper Michigan, there was a preponderance of Republicans in the relief administration greater than 2 to 1. The investigator found that money upward of $100,000 had been spent in a most irregular fashion on a playground project in Ishpeming, Mich., on the private property of the Cleveland Cliffs Mining Co.

He found that a certain member of the Houghton County relief administration had been guilty of irregularities in connection with the purchase of fuel for relief clients. There are dozens of such damning items to be covered, had I time to do so. And, finally, the report was not made public because it stated definitely that Walter Berry, of a strict Republican background, was not a fit personality to head the relief administration in upper Michigan. The investigator stated further that this was the opinion of persons of every political faith—Republican, Democratic, and Independent. No action was taken on the report, and I wonder why? Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Haber saw fit to cover the whole episode with whitewash. The E. R. A. investigated itself and found no evil. Mr. Haber protected Mr. Berry and Mr. Hopkins protected Mr. Haber. We have heard recently about a similar whitewashing investigation carried on in the State of West Virginia, where the W. P. A. investigated itself after facts as to the rottenness were brought to light by Senator HOLT, of that State. This whitewashing is so much a parallel of the one which resulted after the investigation in my district last year, that I am led to the conclusion that the Relief Administration is no fit agency to investigate itself. We need a real investigation to find out why Mr. Hopkins protects such men and such irregularities.

It has been charged that I have not presented conclusive facts to show the necessity for a complete inquiry into the relief administration in Michigan. I realize that I do not have all the facts; neither do the thousands of persons who have written me in the past year complaining about discrimination in the administration of relief. That is why we want an investigation to determine the facts.

(The time having expired, by unanimous consent Mr. Hook was given 2 minutes more.)

Mr. HOOK. I have been charged by the Republican press in Michigan with desiring this investigation for selfish political reasons. I give the lie to that statement. Attacks have been made on me and statements have been made about me in an attempt to browbeat me into submission and to silence my voice, attacks which distorted the facts. I care not for myself and will carry on no matter how rotten the onslaught is. If I have to acquiesce by silence to the dishonesty and rottenness that is prevalent in the administration of relief in my State in order to be a Member of Congress, then I will not be here, for when conditions are brought to my attention I, as a Representative of my people, will bring them to light so that the crooks and thieves may be eliminated from the high and mighty places they hold.

So long as I am a Member of this august body, just so long will I fight dishonesty and corruption, lies and slanderous remarks about me notwithstanding.

I am willing to abide by the results of an honest and impartial investigation. I do not desire to have any voice in the choosing of any official charged with the administration of relief. But I do desire, and I shall insist, that those who are given the responsibility of administering relief be men and women of honesty, sympathy, and ability, interested in the welfare of our people, and not cheap, petty politicians interested only in the advancement of party interests. They must be men and women who are in sympathy with the program which they are administering. Certainly they must not be persons whose only desire is to discredit the agency for which they are working and to defeat the administration under which their agencies are established. When such able men and women, who have the success of the program at heart and who are really interested in the welfare of our people, are put in charge of relief in Michigan our people will be satisfied. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McCORMACK). Under the special order of the House, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAMNECK] for 30 minutes.

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Speaker, I think my colleague has an important message which should be heard by the Members of the House, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and thirty-one Members have answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAMNECK] has the floor.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. LAMNECK. I yield.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 4212) to amend section 2 of the National Housing Act, relating to the insurance of loans and advances for improvements upon real property, and for other purposes, be taken from the Speaker's table, that the House insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

To amend section 2 of the National Housing Act, relating to the insurance of loans and advances for improvements upon real property, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. DINGELL. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Maryland whether the question of the $2,000 homes is involved in this request?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Of course they are.

Mr. DINGELL. Has the House committee agreed to give up the $2,000 homes?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The conferees have not yet been appointed.

Mr. DINGELL. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, Mr. REILLY, Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina, Mr. HOLLISTER, and Mr. WOLCOTT.

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and insert therein certain tables.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE TAX BILL

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I want to discuss this afternoon for a few moments a matter which to me is one of the most important that has ever come before the House since I have been a Member.

What I am going to say about it I want you to know follows from a very firm conviction. There is no politics in this statement. I am not trying to get even with anybody or show any particular independence in my attitude, but I am convinced that the new tax bill we are now considering is not good for America, and I am not afraid to pay whatever penalty goes with my position. [Applause.]

I do not want to pose as a tax expert. There are men on the Committee on Ways and Means, of which I am glad to be a member, who know more about tax legislation than I do.

But I have not been convinced by them or anybody else that this tax bill is a good thing for America. I have not seen a more hard-working subcommittee than the subcommittee having in charge the consideration of this bill. They have worked hard and diligently for 3 or 4 weeks. I attended many of their meetings, and had it not been for this deliberation on their part, it would have been utterly impossible to have presented this matter to the Congress in any form that would have permitted of its adoption.

I do not know whose bill this is. I do not know whether it is the President's bill, whether it is the Treasury's bill, or somebody else's bill, and I do not care anything about that. I think that we should consider this tax bill from the standpoint of whether this is a good thing for America or whether it is not, whether it is a good thing for business, and I claim that a bill that is not good for business is not good for the United States of America.

I am including herewith the schedule of rates to be charged to corporations on earnings beginning with January 1936.

The schedules proposed are as follows:

SCHEDULE I

CORPORATIONS WITH ADJUSTED NET INCOME OF $10,000 OR LESS

If there is no undistributed net income, there shall be no tax on the adjusted net income.

If the undistributed net income is 10 percent of the adjusted net income, the rate of tax on the adjusted net income shall be 1 percent.

If the undistributed net income is 20 percent of the adjusted net income, the rate of tax on the adjusted net income shall be 3½ percent.

If the undistributed net income is 30 percent of the adjusted net income, the rate of tax on the adjusted net income shall be 7½ percent.

If the undistributed net income is 40 percent of the adjusted net income, the rate of tax on the adjusted net income shall be 13 percent.

If the undistributed net income is 50 percent of the adjusted net income, the rate of tax on the adjusted net income shall be 18½ percent.

If the undistributed net income is 60 percent of the adjusted net income, the rate of tax on the adjusted net income shall be 24 percent.

If the undistributed net income is 70 percent of the adjusted net income, the rate of tax on the adjusted net income shall be 29½ percent.

If the undistributed net income is 70.3 percent of the adjusted net income, the rate of tax on the adjusted net income shall be 29.7 percent.

SCHEDULE II

CORPORATIONS WITH ADJUSTED NET INCOMES OF MORE THAN $10,000

If there is no undistributed net income, there shall be no tax on the adjusted net income.

If the undistributed net income is 10 percent of the adjusted net income, the rate of tax on the adjusted net income shall be 4 percent.

If the undistributed net income is 20 percent of the adjusted net income, the rate of tax on the adjusted net income shall be 9 percent.

If the undistributed net income is 30 percent of the adjusted net income, the rate of tax on the adjusted net income shall be 15 percent.

If the undistributed net income is 40 percent of the adjusted net income, the rate of tax on the adjusted net income shall be 25 percent.

If the undistributed net income is 50 percent of the adjusted net income, the rate of tax on the adjusted net income shall be 35 percent.

If the undistributed net income is 57½ percent of the adjusted net income, the rate of tax on the adjusted net income shall be 42½ percent.

If the percentage which the undistributed net income is of the adjusted net income is not one of the percentages of the adjusted net income shown in schedule I or II, then the rate of tax shall be proportionate.

If the adjusted net income is more than $10,000, the tax, at the option of the corporation, shall, in lieu of being computed under schedule II, be computed by adding:

(1) A tax upon the adjusted net income computed under schedule I; and

(2) A tax upon the amount of the adjusted net income in excess of $10,000, at the rate in schedule II, which would be applied if the tax were being computed solely under such schedule.

SCHEDULE III

EXEMPTION OF BANKS

It is recommended that incorporated banks and trust companies bona fide operated as such be exempted from the plan proposed under recommendation no. II and be subject to a tax of 15 percent on the net income (see recommendation no. XV, relating to intercorporate dividends) in lieu of the present graduated corporation tax. It is further recommended that banks continue to be subject to section 102 of the Revenue Act of 1934 relating to accumulation of surplus to avoid surtax.

The subcommittee leaves to the full committee as an unsettled question whether dividends paid by banks to shareholders, individual or corporate, should be treated under the present law or whether they should be fully taxable like dividends paid by other corporations.

SCHEDULE IV

TREATMENT OF INSURANCE COMPANIES

It is recommended that all bona-fide insurance companies (mutual and stock, foreign and domestic) be exempted from the plan proposed under recommendation no. II and be subject to a tax of 15 percent in lieu of the graduated rates under existing law; except that foreign insurance companies other than life and other than mutual be subject to a rate of 22½ percent in lieu of the graduated rates under existing law.

It is recommended that dividends received by all insurance companies be treated the same as dividends received by other corporations (see recommendations no. XV).

SCHEDULE V

CORPORATIONS IN RECEIVERSHIP

It is recommended that corporations in receivership be exempt from the plan proposed under recommendation no. II and be subject to a tax of 15 percent in lieu of the graduated rates under existing law.

Dividends received by such corporations shall be included in net income, and dividends paid by them shall be subject to tax in the hands of the shareholder as in the case of dividends paid by other corporations.

SCHEDULE VI

FOREIGN CORPORATIONS

It is recommended that foreign corporations be exempt from the plan proposed under recommendation no. II and be subject to a tax of 22½ percent instead of the rate under existing law, accompanied by a change in the rate on withholding under existing law to 22½ percent.

SCHEDULE VII

RAILROADS

It is recommended that railroads be subject to the plan proposed under recommendation no. II and the privilege of filing consolidated returns be continued as to them; the rate of tax to be the same as in the case of other corporations under recommendation no. II; but with the right to make a new election, whether or not to file a consolidated return for their first taxable year under the new law.

If in the affiliated group the parent corporation is in receivership the entire group shall be taxed as other corporations in receivership (see recommendation no. V). If any other member of the group is in receivership it does not gain the exemption referred to in recommendation no. V.

SCHEDULE VIII

EXEMPT CORPORATIONS GENERALLY

It is recommended that corporations now exempt from income tax under section 101 of the Revenue Act of 1934 (labor, agricultural, charitable, and other nonprofit corporations), be exempt from the new plan and from the corporation tax under existing law.

SCHEDULE IX

CAPITAL STOCK TAX

The rate of capital stock tax imposed by section 105 of the Revenue Act of 1935 is proposed to be reduced to 70 cents per $1,000 of the adjusted declared value for the capital stock tax year ending June 30, 1936. This constitutes a substitution of a 70-cent rate for a $1.40 rate. The tax is proposed to be terminated for all later years.

SCHEDULE X

EXCESS-PROFITS TAX

The excess-profits tax imposed by section 106 of the Revenue Act of 1935 is proposed to be terminated at the end of the first income tax taxable year of the taxpayer which ends after June 30, 1936. The rate is not changed. Corporations whose income tax taxable years are on a calendar year basis will be subject to this tax for the calendar year 1936.

These schedules exempt certain business institutions. For instance, they exempt banks. They claim in this bill that the new tax proposal is too drastic for banks, but I am not arguing that point at all. Therefore, they say banks and insurance companies shall be assessed a tax of 15 percent, instead of the rates applying under these schedules. They say to a foreign insurance company, "We will not assess you 15 percent, we will not assess you the rates applying under this bill, but we will assess you 22½ percent." They say to corporations in receiverships, "We cannot assess you the rates applying under this bill, but we will assess you a rate of 15 percent." They say to all other foreign corporations, 22½ percent. They exempt certain corporations, such as labor, agricultural, and other nonprofit corporations. In fact, in this bill they do not treat all alike. I claim that any tax bill that is not good for the banks and other financial institutions of this country is not good for business generally. Why should we exempt one corporation and make a certain rate apply to it and say to all other corporations that are not in this particular selective group, "Your rate is higher; we make it 42½ percent, we make it 25 percent, we make it 15 percent, or we make it 13 percent, but we cannot apply this drastic law to the banks and insurance companies because it might destroy confidence, it might destroy the depositors' chances to get their money back, it might destroy the possibility of the banks and the insurance companies staying on a sound financial basis?"

Mr. Speaker, the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, whose duty it is to prepare all tax bills for the consideration of the House of Representatives, begin hearings today.

You are all more or less familiar with the various proposals under consideration. To refresh your memory, I might say that the proposed measure consists principally of a tax on corporation surpluses and the so-called "windfall tax", which is an attempt to recover the taxes due the Federal Government when the A. A. A. was declared unconstitutional.

Everyone who has given any thought to the matter realizes that we must have additional taxes or cut down expenses; and since there is no apparent intention to reduce expenditures, the only recourse left for us is to increase revenue. I have no objection whatsoever to this procedure, because, as I have said before in addressing the members of the committee, no individual, no group of individuals, no business organization, no governmental organization, can continue to spend more than its income without sooner or later facing disastrous results.

Under the present law we tax corporation incomes on a graduated basis ranging from 12½ to 15 percent. After the corporation pays these taxes it has a right to handle its earnings in any way it sees fit. The corporation can pay out its earnings in dividends; it can retain them in surplus, to be used for a rainy day; it can make plant improvements; it can retire existing debt; it can use the money for banking purposes if it wants to; it can invest the surplus in securities, or, in fact, do anything it deems necessary.

We are not satisfied with the enormous taxes now being paid by the corporations but are proposing a radical departure from the existing order. What I have been trying to determine since the proposal was originally made is: What is the motive? Who are we trying to get? In other words, are we singling out certain business institutions that we propose to destroy by this method of taxation? If so, we should be frank about it and let the Congress determine whether we should go along with such a proposal or whether we should continue the policies that we have followed in the past. It is a rather difficult matter to act intelligently on any proposal unless we have all the facts.

The next tax suggested provides that a corporation can no longer run its own affairs, and unless the corporation complies by distributing its corporate earnings in line with the provisions of the law we immediately proceed to penalize. If a corporation should desire to retain all its earnings for any one year, no matter for what purpose, we automatically assess a tax which would be almost equal to half of its corporate earnings. The theory back of such a revolutionary piece of legislation is that we are going to force the corporations to do what Congress says. This is not the first time that we have attempted to compel business of this country to follow our bidding or suffer a penalty tax. I only need refer to the Guffey Coal Act to illustrate my point. In this act we assessed a penalty tax of 15 percent to compel the coal operators to adopt a lot of rules and regulations provided for under the act.

Under the new tax proposal we say to a corporation whose earnings are in excess of $10,000 a year: "If you want to retain 10 percent of your earnings, we will tax you 4 percent on your total earnings, or a rate of 40 percent of the amount retained. If you desire to keep 20 percent of your earnings, we shall tax you 9 percent of your total earnings, or a rate of 45 percent of the amount retained. If you desire to retain 30 percent, we shall assess a tax of 15 percent of the total earnings, or a rate of 50 percent of the amount retained. Should you want to retain 40 percent of your earnings, a tax of 25 percent is assessed against your total earnings, which would mean a rate of 62½ percent of the amount retained. If you desire to retain 50 percent of your earnings, a tax is assessed of 35 percent of the total amount earned, or a rate of 70 percent of the amount retained. If you desire to retain all of your earnings, as soon as the amount retained equals 57½ percent the balance would have to be paid in taxes and the stockholders would receive nothing."

In the latter illustration, and roughly speaking, if a corporation desired to retain all of its earnings it was possible to retain, the Government would take about half of the money and the corporation could retain the other half. If this is not a revolutionary proposal, then I miss my guess. The highest rate ever assessed against industry in England, I understand, was about 22½ percent, and here we are assessing all industrial organizations at a rate of 42½ percent if they retain all their earnings. Ladies and gentlemen, I warn you that if this tax bill is passed it will destroy every small incorporated business institution of the country, and will so impair the credit, the earning power, and the stability of large corporations that it will result in their being unable to continue on a profitable basis.

During the consideration of the tax bill by the subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee and the experts from the Treasury Department, it developed that the new measure was too drastic and too revolutionary when applied to banks, life-insurance companies, and mutual fire-insurance companies. The group, after due consideration, decided that the above classes of business should be exempt from the application of the new bill because it would probably create in the minds of the public a lack of confidence in these institutions. It would probably impair their financial standing and cause other results too horrible to contemplate. I agree with them in their conclusions.

Under the present law these institutions are in the same class, paying the same tax that any other business institution would pay, and I humbly submit that if this law is not of such a nature as to permit its application to the institutions above mentioned, then it should not be applied to any other business institution, and for the same reason.

Sometime ago we passed the Social Security Act, and the method of raising the revenue to pay for this activity was a tax on pay rolls. To provide for the unemployment insurance, a pay-roll tax will finally be assessed of 3 percent. To provide funds for the old-age annuity, another tax on pay rolls of 3 percent will be assessed, and in the latter group the employee will have to pay 3 percent of his earnings also. We have also passed a Railroad Pension Act, which provides for an assessment against the employees of 3½ percent of the pay roll and an assessment against the railroad of 3½ percent on the pay roll.

How will the new tax bill affect the above legislation? I claim that if the tax bill impairs the credit and financial standing of the corporations that pay the unemployment tax, the old-age annuity tax, and the railroad-pension tax, we threaten the very foundation of the Social Security Act and the Railroad Pensions Act, and in addition we may seriously affect the employment possibilities in all these corporations. As far as I am concerned, I do not feel like going on a bill that is almost certain to put men and women out of jobs. Information from my district, which is a railroad center, is that railroad taxes under the so-called corporate surplus-tax legislation will be increased over 100 percent. I claim they cannot withstand this and continue to pay good wages, continue employment, and keep their property in good condition. Perhaps the proponents want Government ownership.

Why should corporations have a surplus? The reasons are many. First, corporations should have surplus earnings to make them sound financially. A small corporation, in order to grow, must absolutely keep all its earnings in its surplus in order to get anywhere. A corporation should have a surplus for a rainy day, to permit them to operate during periods of depression and keep people employed. A corporation should have a surplus to make plant improvements. It should have a surplus for expansion. It should have a surplus to run the plant during depression periods when earnings are low. It should have a surplus to pay its stockholders dividends during depression years. It should have a surplus to keep men employed during depression years, even at a loss. I heard of a plan the other day that claimed if they had shut down when the depression started they could have saved $7,000,000 a year, and the only reason they could operate was because they had a surplus. I know of a concern in my home city that has not made a cent since 1929, and yet has never failed to pay a dividend each year and has never failed to keep hundreds of men employed at good salaries, all because they had a surplus.

I want to quote at this point an editorial appearing in a Columbus, Ohio, paper, which expresses my position exactly, and which I think expresses the opinion of every sound business executive in the United States. I quote:

"RAINY DAY" RESERVES

The need which corporations have for adequate "rainy day" reserves has been expressed often and eloquently since Congress began work on the new plan to tax corporate surpluses. Even friends of the proposal have warned that it would be a mistake to force a too extravagant distribution of dividends. If any proof were needed of the validity of this warning, the floods have provided it, and in a spectacular fashion. In their wake are the ruins of hundreds of industrial plants, through which the waters swept, driving thousands of men from their jobs.

"Corporations will have to dip into their reserves for millions of dollars to repair and rebuild these plants before the men can go back to work. It is not hard to visualize what would happen if all of these corporations had to raise money for this necessary reconstruction.

"Probably it will be found that some of these corporations are in that unfortunate position, which means that the jobs of their employees will have to wait while terms are made with investment bankers.

"Congressmen working on the tax bill might well study these specific examples. The experience of the corporations whose properties were damaged by the floods should provide valuable testimony on the uses, needs, and sufficiency of corporate cushions."

Now, the tax experts come along with a proposal and say to us that that sort of a plan is no good—out of date. Do we want the word to go out to the country that the Democratic Party and its responsible leaders are against business in one breath, and then appeal to them in another breath that we want them to assist us with all their might and main to put the unemployed back to work? I said the other day, and I repeat it now, that if we are ever to put the unemployed back to work on a sound basis it must be through productive industry.

By our tax program we penalize initiative, we penalize frugality, and we penalize all other business virtues that tend to build and not to destroy. The only reason I am making these remarks in the consideration of this bill is because I want the Members of the House to consider the radical departure from the existing order in the new tax program. I want them to study the proposal, to contact their constituents in business and otherwise, so that when the bill does come up we will have an opportunity to consider it on its merits and not pass it simply because somebody requested it.

Another feature of the tax bill is the so-called windfall tax, which is intended as a tax to reclaim the processing taxes returned to the taxpayer because of the Supreme Court decision. I have no quarrel with the idea of reclaiming these taxes, provided it was handed down to the consumer and collected by the processor; but I know as a proven fact that there are some industries in my congressional district who were not able to pass the taxes on to the consumer for a long time after the bill's enactment. At the time the Supreme Court decided the A. A. A. unconstitutional, most of the meat packers of my district were in a position where the Internal Revenue Department was considering taking them over and selling their property to collect the taxes, and if this windfall tax is assessed I predict that the Government of the United States will own every small pork-packing plant in the United States. I know nothing about the conditions in the textile industry or in the milling industry and other industries, but I do know something about the situation as it applies to the small pork packers.

Are we, by legislative act, going to put out of business those classes of industries to which I have referred, located in my congressional district and all other districts, put out of employment all of the employees now working for these institutions, and place the large packers in a position where they will monopolize this industry in the future? As far as I am concerned, ladies and gentlemen, I am not going to be a party to it. There is also a serious constitutional question involved.

It is an easy matter to criticize, I know, and I have always felt that when one has an objection to a proposal he should have a substitute, because I believe we are all agreed we must have increased taxes under the circumstances. I am offering for your serious consideration a substitute. I will attempt to have the committee adopt it, and if the committee will not adopt it, I expect to offer it on the floor of the House as an amendment to this bill. My substitute is to increase the corporation taxes now existing to raise at least $500,000,000 in additional taxes. In addition, I suggest the repeal of the present law which exempts corporation dividends from the application of the normal tax rate. This change will raise about $270,000,000. These two changes will raise as much revenue as is being requested by the administration.

I further suggest that no windfall taxes be assessed against any processor whose profits for the period that the tax was in effect was less than 6 percent of invested capital plus depreciation, depletion, and other charges now permitted by the Internal Revenue Department. I am offering these suggestions in all sincerity and for your serious consideration.

I know of no other way to protect them; I know of no other way to preserve them to their rightful owners; and I am offering these suggestions in all sincerity. There are two or three things wrong with the way in which we operate here. In the first place, we do not know enough about legislation when it comes before us; and I submit, without criticism, that that is the fact. Many bills come before us that we do not know the A B C of, and I predict when this bill comes up there will not be 20 percent of both sides of the aisle, Republicans and Democrats, who will know very much about the bill. How do we know—I do not know—what effect this is going to have on business; what the final effect will be? It is impossible to know. If you considered this tax bill for 60 days, you could not determine what the final result on the country would be.

I claim you can never have a prosperous America unless you have a prosperous business. Do not forget that. If we have some other scheme in mind, if we do not want private individuals and corporations to run the business of this country, that is one issue. If that is the issue, I want to know it. It would not take me very long to determine what side I would be on when it comes to that proposition. [Applause.]

I yield now to my colleague from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether he does not know that the report thus far drawn and presented to the full committee includes the allowance of such statutory exemptions as are now in existence?

Mr. LAMNECK. I know that.

Mr. DINGELL. That has nothing to do with what the gentleman contends at the present time, of what depreciation reserve or other reserve, as at the present time in existence, will remain untouched?

Mr. LAMNECK. I was not discussing reserves for various reasons. I was discussing the bill and the rates applying. I know there has been no change in the provision in the existing law, which provides that a business institution can set aside a reserve for depreciation, depletion, and things like that. I was not discussing that feature of the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMNECK. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. As I understand the facts, the gentleman from Ohio is, of course, anticipating what will be the result of the deliberations on the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee on this question. It may be that he is correctly anticipating the conclusion at which they will arrive, but the fact is, is it not, that the gentleman is criticizing and attacking a bill, even before a hearing is had, and before the advocates, or opponents, have been heard before the full committee, and before any decisions have been reached with reference to what the bill will be?

Mr. LAMNECK. I will answer the gentleman. I want to tell you the facts as I see them. If I have any criticism of the work of the subcommittee it would be that that committee would not consider any other proposal except the recommendations that were sent to it by somebody. You could no more get a consideration for my proposal, or any other proposal, in that subcommittee than you could jump over this building. They confined their activities entirely to the recommendations that were submitted to them for consideration. I am of the opinion, and I want to make the prediction, that no bill will come out of that committee except the one that has been proposed. I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but that is my individual opinion.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMNECK. I yield.

Mr. PETTENGILL. What is the situation with reference to a corporation that has an outstanding bond issue and the mortgage provides that no dividends may be paid until a sinking fund has been built up to retire the bonds or to meet a profit and loss deficit?

Mr. LAMNECK. There is a provision made in this bill for such a thing as that. To my surprise, instead of our making that kind of a corporation pay the tax now existing, we come along and say, "That tax is not high enough. You are crippled. You are about out of business and we are going to give you another sock and raise your rates 50 percent over the existing rate. We are going to charge you 22½ percent." We raise their rates 50 percent and we will be sure, when we do that, to give them a knockout blow.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMNECK. I yield.

Mr. MARSHALL. Is there any provision in the bill to meet a situation where a company has already distributed back the processing taxes which it has collected? I have a letter from an industry in the gentleman's own district, in which they say they have passed this money back to the people to whom it belonged, and they are willing to furnish an affidavit to that effect?

Mr. LAMNECK. That is past earnings?

Mr. MARSHALL. Processing taxes.

Mr. LAMNECK. I do not think the bill applies.

Mr. MARSHALL. I refer to the processing taxes which have already been collected.

Mr. LAMNECK. Oh, the gentleman will have to answer that, because I cannot answer it. I have not been able to answer it.

Mr. MARSHALL. This gentleman says in his letter that if another tax is assessed against them it will mean bankruptcy for that institution. It is in the gentleman's own district.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMNECK. I yield.

Mr. RICH. If a corporation wishes to improve its property by the construction of new buildings or the purchase of new equipment, under the law, as I understand it, they will have to pay the Federal Government a large percentage on this improvement or this equipment because of the fact that it must take its surplus and pay it to its stockholders, and will be unable to invest it in new improvements and new equipment?

Mr. LAMNECK. If it keeps all of its earnings, it is assessed 42½ percent.

Mr. RICH. And that would necessarily retard new improvements and the purchase of new equipment?

Mr. LAMNECK. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LAMNECK. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Do I understand the gentleman to say that regardless of any circumstances that might exist, regardless of how tremendous or extravagant the surplus accumulated may be, the gentleman is opposed to any legislation seeking in any way to tax the undistributed surplus of any corporation?

Mr. LAMNECK. I have not given that much consideration.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is that not consistent with the gentleman's attitude?

Mr. LAMNECK. I do not think so. Now, just for the information of the House, I want to call attention to the fact that in this country of 127,000,000 people we only have 9,000 whose earnings are in excess of $100,000 a year.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAMNECK] has expired.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1937

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 11418) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman from Missouri tell us by how much the bill has been increased since it left the House?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. As I recall it, approximately $39,000,000. I do not remember the exact amount.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, until we find out what the increase is I think it is necessary to object. We increased this year's appropriation $14,000,000 over last year's appropriation. The gentleman says he does not know what the amount is. This is the trouble with the House of Representatives, we do not know what we are doing in making these appropriations. Mr. Speaker, I must object.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, no one keeps in mind these astronomical figures added by the Senate to House appropriation bills. The amount is approximately $39,000,000. Whether it is $39,887,944.42 or $39,887,944.43 is immaterial. Any increase over the amounts provided by the House bill is unwarranted, and I am now asking the House to disagree to every penny that has been added.

Mr. RICH. Then it is our obligation to support the gentleman. I think it is our business to stand up here and support the gentleman in his objection to the increase. The gentleman should ask the majority leader to stand up and support him, too, because it is necessary that we cut down these appropriations.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the gentleman that I will support him.

Mr. RICH. Then, let us do it. Let us say, as the House of Representatives and to the Senate, that it is time for them to stop.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I am in fullest accord with everything the gentleman says. The bill was generous as it passed the House and certainly nothing should be added. I trust the House will agree to the request to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. RICH. I am saying these things only because I think it is my duty. I want to say to the majority leader and to the other Members of the House of Representatives that the appropriation bills we have passed carry an increase of $245,000,000 over what the same bills carried last year. This is an astounding figure, but the Senate is going to add another $200,000,000 to appropriation bills yet to be passed by them and I think it is time to begin if we are ever going to get this country out of its position of debt. The worst is ahead of us. It is your duty and it is my duty to say we are going to stop these increases. If we cannot stop the Senate, then it is too late. We ought to do it, and I hope the majority leader will help the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, there is no difference of opinion whatever between the gentleman and myself on that score. I am asking unanimous consent to disagree to every amendment and object to every increase.

Mr. RICH. Let us put up a little fight and try to cut it down. I hope the gentleman succeeds. I will back him to the limit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. CANNON of Missouri, TARVER, UMSTEAD, THOM, BUCHANAN, THURSTON, and BUCKBEE.

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration House Resolution 446.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 3998, "A bill to enable the Commodity Credit Corporation to better serve the farmers in orderly marketing, and to provide credit and facilities for carrying surpluses from season to season." That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to make in order the consideration of the bill S. 3998, reported to the House by the Committee on Banking and Currency, which bill has for its purpose to increase the capital of the Commodity Credit Corporation, an organization created under Executive order in October of 1933 to stabilize the value of farm products through the advance of money to producers of farm commodities. At that time the capital stock of the Commodity Credit Corporation was fixed at $3,000,000, all of which was advanced by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purpose of its creation. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has advanced to the Commodity Credit Corporation during the course of its operation multiplied millions of dollars on farm commodities. Today this corporation has outstanding as a debt $311,000,000, which was loaned on cotton, wheat, corn, naval stores, and tobacco. Of the amounts loaned practically 90 percent had been repaid, but $280,000,000 has been on cotton. The Commodity Credit Corporation today is disposing in a careful way of its accumulations of cotton stocks. They have about 4,500,000 bales of cotton on which they have advanced 12 cents per pound.

On the cotton disposed of from that accumulation they have lost no money, notwithstanding the fact the carrying charges in the way of insurance, interest, and storage amounts to about 1 cent per pound on pledged cotton; but the superior grades of cotton that has been disposed of has enabled the Commodity Credit Corporation to sell this amount at the market value for a sufficient sum to cover the additional amount above the loan. However, the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation makes the statement that if he disposed of this accumulation of cotton today there will be sustained a loss of possibly $31,000,000 because of the fact that much of the 4,500,000 bales is not of the high-grade staple that has been disposed of heretofore.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill, according to the statement of the chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, is to take $97,000,000 of the amount of money already loaned and add it to the $3,000,000 existing capital of the Commodity Credit Corporation, giving a total capital of $100,000,000. This will be accomplished without the necessity of taking $1 from the Treasury of the United States to add to the capital stock now utilized by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It is a mere bookkeeping transaction brought about by transferring the money that has been advanced on the commodities and making an increase in the capital of the Commodity Credit Corporation. The purpose of bringing about this increase is to enable the Commodity Credit Corporation to place this business in the hands of private bankers. The statement is made that there is a demand for this class of security at a lower rate of interest than that which is being paid now by the producers and owners of these commodities which they have pledged. In other words, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation today is paying 2¾ percent to the Treasury for the money which they lend to the Commodity Credit Corporation. They charge for carriage one-quarter of a cent, or 3 percent, on the money they advance to this corporation, which in turn lends the money to the producers of these commodities at a rate of 4 percent.

Mr. Jones made the statement to the Banking and Currency Committee that this class of paper, backed by a capital of $100,000,000, could find investment in private banking channels at possibly 1½ percent, in his opinion, and not to exceed 2 percent. The rule is an open rule.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRIVER. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Jones stated that the Commodity Credit Corporation could borrow from the banks at 1 percent and lend to the farmers at a rate of 2 percent to 2½ percent.

Mr. DRIVER. From Mr. Jones' statement I do not think there is any doubt but what an advantageous position could be secured with this addition to the capital stock and without the use of additional money.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, this legislation affects one of the liberal government Delaware organizations which were once more popular in Washington than at the present time. If the smoke around this bill was brushed away, we would find there is only one real object sought in this measure. That is to cover up the losses the organization has sustained in the last 2 or 3 years.

The pretense is made of lower interest rates. Why, you cannot tell Members of Congress the securities of this corporation, with its huge holdings of cotton, on which they have advanced money and on which they will ultimately take a tremendous loss, will obtain lower interest rates than the securities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I submit this is not reasonable, and I do not believe it will materialize.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat, this legislation is offered for the purpose of concealing for the present, until after election, the fact that this corporation has sustained great losses in connection with cotton. Today there are over 6,000,000 bales of cotton under the control of this organization. Some day there is going to be a big loss. According to present market prices, it would be over $50,000,000, and it will be much larger when the day of adjustment arrives.

I sympathize with the Roosevelt administration. They have a bear by the tail and they do not dare let go. If they let go, they are afraid the cotton market might be demoralized, or go lower than it is at the present time. This, of course, on the eve of election would be most disturbing. If the corporation continues to advance more money and acquire more cotton, they are only aggravating conditions and inviting a greater crash than would happen if they commenced to unload in an orderly way at the present time. From a political viewpoint, the strategic thing to do is to create the larger corporation and make it possible to acquire more surplus cotton and then wait until after election for the loss to become evident. If somebody gets disturbed at that time, it will not mean anything. But right now there is only one thing to do, and that is to promote the political cause of the Roosevelt administration, regardless of the cost in public moneys. To be sure, eventually the taxpayers are going to lose a large amount of money by carrying these huge burdens. But what of that? By this time the taxpayers are so insensible as a result of the punishment they have taken that another fifty or hundred million dollars will mean nothing. We can, in my judgment, anticipate huge losses.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In the committee report it is cited that the Corporation is now without adequate capital with which to carry on its operations. It is also stated that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can make additional loans to the Commodity Credit Corporation without increase of borrowing power of the R. F. C. What is there to prevent the R. F. C. from making loans on the basis of the present capital structure of the Commodity Credit Corporation?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The R. F. C. can make loans indefinitely, if they wish.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is not necessary to increase the capital?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is not essential that they do that.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Has the gentleman had an opportunity to compare the efficient way in which the Commodity Credit Corporation has been operated with the inefficient way in which the old Farm Board was operated?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. No. But if a comparison is made, I think the gentleman would find that the end would be the same. The old Farm Board losses were great, and this Corporation will also be a tremendous loser when we finally balance the sheet.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Is it not a fact that under the operations of the Federal Farm Board 69 cents of every dollar appropriated to that fund by Congress was finally lost?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I think this concern is going to have a terrific loss; and let me say to the gentleman that, while I do not know whether his statement is accurate or not, I am not disputing the statement, but I believe this corporation is going to show a tremendous loss before we get through with it. The loss will come next year.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Would the gentleman be agreeably surprised if the losses were less than 5 cents on the dollar?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I would be astounded.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In that respect, is it not true that ownership carries risk and that efficiency of operation cannot be determined until the inventories are finally liquidated?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And this is the real answer to that question.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. It might help the gentleman to suggest that under the Republican administration of the Farm Board we forgot to guarantee the farmer 12 cents a pound on cotton and hold the cotton. This would be efficiency in the mind of the gentleman from North Carolina. We also forgot to subsidize the farmer on what he exported and, in fact, we forgot to do a lot of things in the way of artificially holding up the price and making guaranties to the farmers. We did not throw the entire Government credit behind the proposition, as is usual in this administration.

COMPARISON OF FEDERAL TAX CONTRIBUTIONS WITH EMERGENCY RELIEF EXPENDITURES—BY STATES

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain tables which I myself have prepared.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a table which I am herewith inserting in the RECORD, which will show that for the year 1935 the Federal Government paid 74.4 percent of all expenditures for emergency relief. The State governments paid 12.3 percent and the local governments contributed 13.3 percent.

These figures will show that in 14 States the Federal contribution was over 90 percent of all money spent for relief. These States are Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Montana, New Mexico, North Carolina, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Virginia, and Wyoming.

There were 13 States where the Federal contribution was between 80 percent and 90 percent, as follows: Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Kentucky, Maryland, Nebraska, Nevada, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Texas, and West Virginia.

It will be noted that the average contribution of the Federal Government was 74.4 percent. In addition to the 27 above-mentioned States in the 90-percent and 80-percent class, there were 8 States that received contributions greater than the average, as follows: Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Utah, and Washington.

We now come to those States that received less than the average contribution from the Federal Government. Those ¹ Exclusive of processing taxes.² Includes obligations incurred for relief extended under the general relief program, under all special programs, and for administration; these figures also include purchases of materials, supplies, and equipment, rentals of equipment (such as team and truck hire), earnings of nonrelief persons employed and other expenses incident to the emergency work-relief program.³ Less than half of 1 percent.

NOTE.—Statistics on population compiled from Census figures; data on Internal Revenue collections from Bureau of Internal Revenue; Emergency Relief obligation statistics from release of Mar. 18, 1936, by Federal Emergency Relief Administration.

States where the Federal contribution was between 60 and 74.4 percent are as follows: California, Indiana, Iowa, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Vermont, and Wisconsin.

The final category includes those States which received less than 60 percent from the Federal Government of all money spent in those States for relief. There are but six of them, as follows: Connecticut, Delaware, Maine, New Hampshire, New York, and Rhode Island.

Expenditures for the Public Works Administration, the Civilian Conservation Corps, the Civil Works Administration and all other forms of public works expenditures are not included in these tables. If they had been included—Federal loans excepted—the Federal Government's contribution to unemployment relief would have been substantially greater.

Touching the question of the contribution by the States to the Federal Treasury in the form of Federal taxes, we find that there are 26 States whose total Federal taxes, excluding processing taxes, are less than the amount they received from the Federal Government for emergency relief expenditures alone. These States are: Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Minnesota, Mississippi, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, Washington, West Virginia, and Wyoming. There are many other expenditures by the Federal Government in these States covering various lines of activity, and if these were added to the total of the relief expenditures the comparison between Federal taxes paid and Federal expenditures would, of course, be sharper.

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, it has been said that this bill merely authorizes a bookkeeping operation by which the R. F. C. transfers $97,000,000 from loans to the C. C. C. to capital investment.

In order to understand this we must review the set-up of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the investments of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in that Corporation. First let it be understood that the Commodity Credit Corporation is managed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation office and is virtually a part of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. So during these debates let us not imagine the Commodity Credit Corporation in one building, with a directorate and a staff, far removed from the building and the directorate and the staff of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, because for all practical purposes they are one and the same.

The Commodity Credit Corporation was set up under an Executive order signed by the President on October 17, 1933. It is a Delaware corporation and it has a capital of $3,000,000. We gave the President general authority to set up a corporation having these powers, and he did so. Understand that until the Reconstruction Finance Corporation extension bill was enacted by the Congress last year, the Congress of the United States had never at any time directly approved the organization of the Commodity Credit Corporation. When we extended the life of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation last year, we extended the effective life, but not the corporate life, of the C. C. C. until April 1, 1937. The Corporation is chartered under Delaware law for an indeterminate period of years, but its life is limited to April 1, 1937, by section 7 of Public, No. 1, Seventy-fourth Congress, or such earlier date as may be fixed by the President by Executive order.

The Corporation borrows its money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and pays 3 percent for it. It makes loans to cotton farmers and charges 4 percent for it. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation gets its money from the Treasury of the United States at 2½ percent. There is one-fourth of 1 percent spread between what the Reconstruction Finance Corporation pays for its money and that for which it lends it to the C. C. C. There is a 1 percent spread between what the Reconstruction Finance Corporation receives from the C. C. C. and that for which the farmer pays for it.

We should not fool ourselves at all about this legislation. As I said in the beginning, we were told that it was purely and simply a little bookkeeping operation, whereby the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would credit itself with the purchase of $97,000,000 worth of capital stock of the C. C. C. and reduce the loans which it held against cotton and corn and resin and turpentine that much.

Against a capitalization of $3,000,000, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has a total debt outstanding against cotton loans of $288,300,977.77, according to the daily report of the loans of the Commodity Credit Corporation as of March 9, 1936. Against this $3,000,000 capitalization the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, on that date, had loaned the Commodity Credit Corporation, or there was outstanding on that date on loans, $311,607,614.29. We might as well meet this thing and understand it and not try to fool ourselves or our constituents about the purpose of this bill. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has got itself into a very bad banking bargain. It has got itself in a hole, and hold some very bad loans. It is bad banking for any bank to loan over $311,000,000, against a capitalization of $3,000,000.

So they come to Congress and ask us to bail them out.

Now, this is not so bad. Simply because they have made this mistake in the past is no reason in itself why we should not help them out of this hole and increase the capitalization of the C. C. C., but, Mr. Speaker, one of the purposes of this bill is to delay the day of reckoning and allow the Commodity Credit Corporation to charge against its capital the loss in cotton, whatever it is, instead of compelling the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to call its loans and sell the cotton on the market.

Now, Mr. Jones says that he would not call the loans, and there is no danger whatever of demoralizing the market by the sale of C. C. C. cotton holdings. So there is absolutely no reason why the bill is before Congress, except that the President is doubtful about the policy he established in pegging the price of cotton at 12 cents, and wants Congress to put its stamp of approval on that policy.

This is the first time you have been called upon to put your stamp of approval on the methods of the Commodity Credit Corporation whereby they try to peg the price of a commodity at any figure.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. As a matter of fact, what difference is there between the Commodity Credit Corporation and the old Farm Board?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I was coming to that. These gentlemen on the Democratic side may be all right and sincere, but at their convention in 1932 they denounced the Farm Board of the Republican Party because of its attempt to stabilize agricultural prices by taking the surplus off the market. They did it in these words:

We condemn the extravagance of the Farm Board, its disastrous action which made the Government a speculator of farm products and the unsound policy of restricting agricultural products to the demands of domestic markets.

You condemned it, and when I read it in your platform I said:

Could the Republican Party be so vile, so low, as to jeopardize the interests of the taxpayers of the United States by putting into operation such a destructive machine as the Farm Board?

I was not here at that time, so I do not know what I would have done.

Now, we have your party, your President, and the Department of Agriculture advocating for cotton what the Republican Party in the Farm Board tried to do for wheat. There is no denying that. I call attention that at the present time your President has created another Farm Board and called it the Commodity Credit Corporation, and the only distinction between the Farm Board and the Commodity Credit Corporation is in the name and the fact that now you deal in cotton instead of wheat. The Commodity Credit Corporation loans 12 cents a pound on cotton.

There is a carrying charge, a warehouse charge, a storage charge, and so forth, of a cent and a half a pound, and there is 1 cent a year interest charge which it has to pay, so at the present time it has invested 14½ cents in every pound of cotton it holds, and there are over 4,500,000 bales of it in the warehouses of the Commodity Credit Corporation. It is pyramiding from year to year. Do you know what four and a half million bales of cotton amount to? With the 800,000 bales of futures which they also control, it is just about one-half of 1 year's production of cotton in the United States, and about 25 percent of the world production of cotton for 1 year. In 1934 we produced in the United States a little over 9,000,000 bales of cotton, and we took off the market through the Commodity Credit Corporation more than half of the year's yield of cotton in the United States. Are you going to continue to do that? If you are going to continue to do that, you not only are pyramiding the expenses, the cost of carrying this, but the carry-over last year was between three and four million bales of cotton above the average carry-over, so it is going to necessitate a continuation of this Commodity Credit Corporation beyond April 1937, unless you dump it on the market. You have one of two alternatives with respect to this hole you have gotten yourselves into. You may either dump this cotton and demoralize the market, and take your loss, or you can hold it and take your loss.

You are going to lose, because the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in their good judgment, do not want to and they will not dump this cotton on the market, and each year you are increasing the carrying charges by 1 cent a pound. If you hold it you will take a loss, because by reason of the false dollar value which you have given cotton, you are constantly decreasing the amount of cotton exported, which has constituted 50 percent of the cotton crop of the United States from the time that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, and you are pyramiding not only the amount of cotton held but also the carrying charges against that cotton to the extent that you have to take either one of two ways out, as I have said—by dumping it on the market and depreciating the price of cotton, or holding it and taking your loss in the manner which I have said. The point I make is this: In 1930 would any of you on the Democratic side have voted to institute the Farm Board? Did you do so? If you did, then with consistency you can put your stamp of approval upon the Commodity Credit Corporation, but if you were against the Farm Board, as you said in your platform, then you cannot with consistency put your stamp of approval on the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Now, I am going to speak politically for a moment. Every time we have criticized the Agricultural Adjustment Act you gentlemen have come back at us and said, "Farm Board." You have thrown the Farm Board in our faces, but henceforth when the Republican side of the House denounces the farm policies of the administration, do not say anything to us about the Farm Board, because we are going to say that you have approved the Farm Board by the institution of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. REILLY. Is it not a fact that this Commodity Corporation loaned millions and hundreds of millions on cotton and corn in 1934 and got it all back without the loss of a dollar?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I shall have to answer the gentleman by saying that upon the basis of the 1934 crop the loans or total holdings of the Commodity Credit Corporation of cotton amounted to 49 percent of the crop. The loans on the corn crop amounted to eight one-thousandths of a cent as against 49 percent of the cotton crop, and when you tell us about the Commodity Credit Corporation loaning on corn for the purpose of helping the corn farmer, be reminded that the total the Commodity Credit Corporation invested is eight-thousandths of a cent on every dollar of corn, whereas it has 49 cents on every dollar of cotton.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. It is true, is it not, that the Commodity Credit Corporation has made $128,-000,000 in corn loans?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The reason for getting their corn loans back is the fact that they had an entirely different policy for corn than for cotton. They did not try to peg the price of corn, but they did peg the price of cotton, and now, with cotton down to 11½ cents, you have a paper loss there below what you pegged your price at, with an actual loss of about 3 cents a pound at the present time on every pound of cotton. I think the figures are somewhere between $34,000,000 and $38,000,000, which you have already taken as a paper loss on cotton, which is increasing with every drop in the cotton market and increasing every month that you have to carry this four and a half million bales of cotton.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Is it not a fact that, with the exception of a few loans made in 1933, pending the enactment of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, the Commodity Credit Corporation has never made a loan of a dollar against any commodity except below the market price of that commodity?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think probably that, unless we analyze that much further, the gentleman's question in the main may be answered in the affirmative; but they should have anticipated, as we all anticipated, that cotton would drop in price, even if they made a 12-cent loan when cotton was 12½ or 13 cents, because that loan was made for the express purpose of pegging cotton at 12 cents. You did not loan against corn with the idea of pegging the price at any given level; and because you loaned underneath the market price of corn, they could repay their loans. You have to take the loss on cotton because you loaned on a false value and not upon a true market value. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, on several occasions during this session of Congress I have taken the floor and criticized what I considered to be legislation inimical to the best interests of the dairy industry of this country. A few weeks ago when this House passed the new agricultural program—the soil-conservation bill—we had before us the so-called La Follette amendment, an amendment that was put in the bill in the Senate and brought to this body. It was offered on the floor by my distinguished colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. HULL] in identical terms with the La Follette amendment offered in the Senate, and that amendment was rejected on the floor of the House. That amendment was intended for the purpose of stabilizing the dairy industry. One of the reasons why that amendment was objected to was that it was carrying on activities similar to the activities of the old Farm Board. At that time, when we were considering stabilization for dairying, the House thought it was wrong to consider stabilization activities. It is always wrong to do these things for the dairy industry, but today we find ourselves perpetuating and continuing a policy of stabilization, primarily in the interest of cotton—but it is fundamentally wrong to do so for the dairy industry.

The La Follette amendment provided permissive authority to the Secretary of Agriculture to carry on operations almost identical with the operations carried on by the Commodity Credit Corporation, activities similar to those that will be carried on in the future. It is all right for cotton, but it is fundamentally wrong when it comes to dairying.

I want to say this for the Record. At the very time when that La Follette amendment was being considered in conference, the Senate having put it in and the House having turned it down, at the very time the conferees from this House and the Senate kicked the La Follette amendment out of the window, the Senate passed this bill which is primarily for cotton. It was turned down because it is fundamentally wrong to carry on this stabilization for the dairy industry. I want to warn the majority Members of this House, the present party in power, against what has been going on in the past with reference to the dairy industry. The dairy industry is becoming pretty well convinced, I want to say to my Democratic friends, that they are getting a dirty deal from this administration. I want to say to you that if you expect the support of dairymen in the coming election, you had better change your tactics. You have to recognize that if a proposition is fair for cotton, that the dairy industry ought to get a fair deal out of it. We have as much right to expect fair treatment as any other group of agriculturists.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. All time has expired.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3998) to enable the Commodity Credit Corporation to better serve the farmers in orderly marketing, and to provide credit and facilities for carrying surpluses from season to season.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3998, with Mr. Cox in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, this seems to have become something of a discussion as to the relative merits and demerits of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Farm Board. Despite everything said on either side, I do not think any fair-minded individual can say there is any essential difference in the operations of the Federal Farm Board and the Commodity Credit Corporation. They were both organized for the purpose of stabilizing prices, and anyone now praising the Commodity Credit Corporation and making the claim it has been a great success cannot very consistently condemn the Farm Board policies. Anyone who condemns the Farm Board policies cannot consistently defend the policies of the Commodity Credit Corporation. Their objectives and purposes were essentially the same, and likewise the administration of one was no different from the other. The Commodity Credit Corporation was more fortunate than the Farm Board in that it began its operations during a time of rising prices. As to its corn loans, it was particularly fortunate because the drought and a short corn crop in the succeeding year brought corn prices to a high point which had not been attained for a number of years.

Mr. THOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. THOM. I know the gentleman from Kansas is always fair in his discussions on the floor of the House, and I should like to ask him a question. Under the Farm Board system there was no control of crops and no effort made to avoid a surplus, whereas during the life of the Commodity Credit Corporation there has been in existence crop-control programs which have made less possible the piling up of surpluses. It therefore seems to me that the Commodity Credit Corporation has operated under a different set of circumstances and more favorable circumstances.

Mr. HOPE. That has been given as a reason and an excuse for the operations of the Commodity Credit Corporation, and it has been used as a reason for distinguishing its operations from those of the Farm Board. As a matter of fact, I do not believe it is a valid distinction, because had it not been for the 1934 drought we would have had, even with the reduction in effect, at normal yields a corn crop of a size sufficient to have caused a loss so far as the stabilization efforts of the Commodity Credit Corporation were concerned. As far as cotton is concerned, although there has been a reduction in the domestic production, there has been an increase in world production which has to a large extent acted as an offset to domestic reductions. Cotton being a world crop, the efforts to reduce production have been quite ineffective. So that I do not believe, except in theory, there is the great distinction which the gentleman has just mentioned.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. While the Cotton Control Act was in effect the statistics show, and the experts tell us, that the carry-over for last year was between three and four million bales above the average.

Mr. HOPE. That is true.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Is it not true that since 1933 the surplus in cotton has been reduced from 13,000,000 bales to a little less than 9,000,000 bales?

Mr. HOPE. The surplus in American cotton?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. American cotton.

Mr. HOPE. Yes; that is true. That was due, of course, to the reduction under the Bankhead Act.

Mr. Chairman, I want this afternoon to particularly discuss the cotton situation and the operations of the Commodity Credit Corporation as far as cotton is concerned. I expect to vote for the pending bill, because I do not consider that a vote on this measure is a vote on the merits or the demerits of the Commodity Credit Corporation. I think this bill provides for a better financial set-up and one under which the Commodity Credit Corporation can better conduct its operations; therefore I expect to vote for it. But I do want to point out some of the results of the operations of this measure and its effect upon the cotton industry in this country.

It does seem strange perhaps that after the experience we had with cotton under the Farm Board Act, whereby we suffered a loss of something like $145,000,000, that we would enter into cotton-stabilization operations such as the Commodity Credit Corporation has undertaken. Particularly is it strange that it should be done by an administration which so thoroughly condemned the Farm Board. The reason given is that which was stated by the gentleman from Ohio a few moments ago, namely, that there was a reduction campaign in effect as far as cotton was concerned, and that under those circumstances it was perfectly safe to attempt to stabilize prices. That might have been all right if cotton were purely a domestic commodity, but when it is considered that half of our cotton must be exported, and that our total production during the last 2 years was about two-fifths of the world production, it can be seen that a domestic reduction might have very little bearing. Cotton prices are made in the world market and are based on world production.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak particularly in reference to the policy that was adopted in 1934 of lending 12 cents per pound on cotton, which was so much above the market price that the Government succeeded in acquiring 4,500,000 bales of cotton, or approximately half of the crop grown in the United States in 1934. It still has this cotton on its hands. In addition to this it has in spot cotton and in futures something like 1,100,000 bales of additional cotton owned by other Government agencies. So that today the Government of the United States has under its control considerably more than one-half of the crop of cotton that we have grown in either of the last 2 years.

These cotton loans of 1934 have done considerable injury, I think, to every producer of cotton in the country. What have been the results of these loans which were made at higher than the market price of cotton? In the first place they have done more than anything else to lose us our export market. Our exports of cotton for the marketing year 1934-35, when this policy was in effect, were only 4,799,000 bales, which is the lowest for many, many years. I do not have the figures all the way back, but this was lower than any year since 1920, and I think for a good many years prior to that time unless during the war period.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question in that connection?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is it not true that during the same period there was a tremendous reduction in the exports of other raw materials and manufactured good from this country?

Mr. HOPE. I think that is true.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And it did not apply particularly to cotton exports the gentleman will admit.

Mr. HOPE. The gentleman does not think that it helped the cotton situation any because our exports of other raw materials were down at the same time? It did do a definite damage to the cotton industry of this country to lose our export markets as we did, mainly as a result of this abnormally high loan value placed on cotton.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. However, the gentleman will admit that the statistics show that the reduction in the exportation of cotton was smaller in percentage than in any other commodity of foreign export, will he not?

Mr. HOPE. No; I do not have any figures that show that. I can simply say I do not know whether that is true or not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I can say that that is true.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What the figures also show is that while our exports of cotton and cotton goods dropped off, the exports of Japan picked up by thousands of percents of increase, the exports of cotton goods from Japan replacing our markets.

Mr. HOPE. I think that is true, and I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Now, the unfortunate part of this matter was that while we were reducing our production of cotton in this country and while our exports were falling off as a result of this unwise policy, other countries were increasing their production, and in the crop year 1934-35 the world production of cotton outside of the United States was the greatest ever known, and this year, 1935-36, the world production of cotton outside the United States has still further increased above that for the year 1934-35, in spite of the reduction which American farmers made last year.

There was an increase in world acreage of over 3 percent and an increase in production of over 10 percent during that time, so that whatever benefits we may have acquired in this country by reducing our cotton acreage have been nullified and neutralized by this increase in cotton production in other countries. In other words, every bale of cotton that the American farmer has failed to produce has been produced by some foreign farmer, and he is sending it today into the world market, where American cotton formerly went.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I cannot yield right now. If I get more time, I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman.

This brings us to this situation: Irrespective of having lost part of our world cotton market, we have the problem on our hands of disposing of 4,500,000 bales of cotton, in addition to the 1,100,000 bales which are still left over from the Farm Board operations. It has been 5 years since the Farm Board bought any cotton, and we still have 1,100,000 bales of Farm Board cotton, owned by the Government. How long, at this rate, is it going to take us to dispose of this 4,500,000 bales that the Government has acquired through the Commodity Credit Corporation?

Everyone knows we are going to produce a larger cotton crop this year, weather conditions being the same, than we did last year or the previous year, and everyone knows that world cotton production is increasing. So how are we going to dispose of this 4,500,000 bales of cotton which the Government now has on hand? If we sell it today at the going market price of spot cotton, which was 11.70 in New York on Saturday, we stand to lose practically $40,000,000, because the Government has in this cotton today something like 13½ cents a pound. This means a loss of practically 2 cents a pound on 4,500,000 bales of cotton.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. HOPE. So this is the loss which would accrue to the Government if this cotton could be sold at today's prices.

But this cotton cannot be sold this year and all the time charges and expenses are going on and piling up against this cotton at the rate of about two-thirds of a cent per pound per year.

If we should sell this cotton, we know what effect it would have on the cotton market. It would absolutely demoralize it, and the Government will not adopt that policy.

So we have today as the result of this ill-advised policy of loaning more than cotton was worth—we have as a result of this policy on our hands 4,500,000,000 bales of cotton, which is going to be a deadweight on the cotton market and will result in all probability in lower prices for cotton for a number of years to come. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK].

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion there are many material differences between the Commodity Credit Corporation and the old Farm Board. Any man who has read the report filed by this Corporation is obliged to take a great deal of pride in it. It would be difficult to measure its accomplishments. It has been of great benefit to the producers of many products in our country, especially the cotton and corn farmers. Whereas, the old Farm Board's operations brought the price from a high point to a lower point, the Commodity Credit Corporation's operations have resulted in bringing the commodity prices from a low point to a high point.

This bill should be quite easily understood by all who want to understand it.

Mr. Jones, in his statement before the committee, outlined four major points involved in this legislation:

(1) No new Government funds will be required, the bill merely transferring a portion of the funds heretofore advanced by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to an investment in capital stock of Commodity Credit Corporation.

(2) The bill will not affect the Budget, is not objectionable to the Secretary of the Treasury, and has been approved by the Secretary of Agriculture and Administrator of Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

(3) It will enable the Corporation to meet its obligations to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and place it in a position to margin its loans and borrow from private sources on the security of commodities at very low interest rates and without Government guarantee.

(4) It will assist the Corporation in the orderly liquidation of its stock of cotton and other commodities without adversely affecting prices.

The hearings before the House committee set out in detail the origin of this Corporation. I call the attention of the House to a letter from the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the President, recommending that this legislation be enacted, which recommendation was approved by the President.

Under section 201-d, title II, of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, as amended, the following authority is given to the Corporation: To make loans to bona-fide institutions organized under the laws of any State or the United States, and having resources adequate for their undertaking.

I call attention to that last clause which authorizes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to any bona-fide institution "having resources adequate for their undertaking."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Yes. I yield to my friend.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is there any reason why the President by Executive order should not direct that the charter of the Commodity Credit Corporation be amended and its capitalization increased from $3,000,000 to $100,000,000?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I know of no particular reason except that probably this is the quicker way of doing it. Of course only Congress can authorize the investment by the R. F. C. in the capital stock of the Commodity Credit Corporation. That is the main reason this bill is before us.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The charter has to be amended, anyway, and would it not be quicker for the President, as he did in the first place, to provide for that by Executive order; and is there not authority under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to invest in this capital stock without further authorization by the Congress?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I think from a legal standpoint the gentleman's statement is absolutely correct, but I believe that the Members of the Congress welcome the opportunity to give this legislation his or her approval.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman tell us why this legislation is before us, except that the administration wants us to put our stamp of approval upon the Commodity Credit Corporation?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I think practically every Member of the House, and I hope the gentleman will join with us, desires this opportunity of expressing his appreciation for this legislation because of the wonderful good it has done the producers and the country in general.

So much has been said about the relationship between the Commodity Credit Corporation and the old Farm Board that some of us on the committee had anticipated this issue would be raised. I think anyone who fully understands the philosophy behind the Commodity Credit Corporation could not under any fair and rational construction, say that it was even distantly akin to the old Federal Farm Board. It is true that both corporations were born in America, and that is about the only similarity of any consequence that one can correctly relate as between these two institutions.

Although it has nothing whatever to do with the merits of this bill, it was anticipated that, for partisan reasons, advantage would be taken of the opportunity afforded by its consideration to criticize this administration by attempting to compare the Commodity Credit Corporation and its operations to the late and lamented Federal Farm Board and its operations under the Hoover administration.

The Federal Farm Board was created by the Agricultural Marketing Act, approved June 15, 1929. It should be remembered that that act constituted the entire agricultural program of the Hoover administration and that the Farm Board was the sole agency for its administration. Its record and the tremendous losses sustained, in its futile effort to stabilize prices, are still fresh in the minds of most of us. This administration, which could not help but profit by the mistakes of its predecessor, attempted to meet the situation by a carefully considered program, based upon the voluntary participation and cooperation of the farmers. I refer to the Agricultural Adjustment Act approved May 12, 1933, as amended.

Aside from the objectives sought to be achieved, this program is fundamentally different from that embodied in the Agricultural Marketing Act, administered by the Farm Board, as is immediately perceptible from the declaration of policy of the Congress as stated in the two acts.

The policy declared in the Agricultural Marketing Act is—

To promote the effective merchandising of agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce, so that the industry of agriculture will be placed on a basis of economic equality with other industries, and to that end to protect, control, and stabilize the currents of interstate and foreign commerce in the marketing of agricultural commodities and their products.

The policy declared in the Agricultural Adjustment Act is to—Establish and maintain such balance between the production and consumption of agricultural commodities, and such marketing conditions therefor, as will reestablish prices to farmers at a level that will give agricultural commodities a purchasing power with respect to articles that farmers buy equivalent to the purchasing power of agricultural commodities in a certain base period fixed by the act.

You are all familiar with the means by which this administration sought to carry out this policy and achieve these results under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, prior to the much-discussed decision of the Supreme Court invalidating the processing taxes levied under the act. You are also familiar with the means by which this administration now, and as the result of the Supreme Court decision, seeks to carry out this policy and achieve these objectives under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, approved February 29, 1936. I shall refer to the means by which the Hoover administration vainly attempted to carry out the policy and achieve the objectives of the Agricultural Marketing Act later in distinguishing the nature and character of the loans made by Commodity Credit Corporation from the stabilization loans and operations of the Federal Farm Board.

As indicated by the statements of policy just quoted from the two acts, the Agricultural Marketing Act approached the problem from the standpoint of removing and controlling surpluses of agricultural commodities, and the Agricultural Adjustment Act approached the problem from the standpoint of preventing the creation of surpluses of agricultural commodities. Commodity Credit Corporation was created to assist in carrying out the policy and achieving the objectives of the Agricultural Adjustment Act by making loans to farmers cooperating in the program, upon the security of agricultural commodities, in order that such farmers might orderly market their commodities.

Only the original loans made by the Corporation upon the 1933 corn and cotton crops were made in an amount in excess of the market value of such commodities at the time the loans were approved and might be, in a sense, regarded as price-pegging loans.

In this connection it should be recalled that there was a considerable carry-over from the 1932 crop, and that the agricultural adjustment programs, which were then just beginning to function, could hardly become effective for almost a year. The prices of agricultural commodities were greatly depressed, and loans of the character made by Commodity Credit Corporation were deemed necessary to permit the farmers to carry these commodities and orderly market same in order to reap the benefits of the increased values anticipated as the result of the agricultural adjustment programs.

The loan on the 1933 corn crop was paid in full, including 4 percent interest, by producers. Loans on the 1933 cotton crop, with the exception of a negligible amount, have been paid by the producers, and no loss on these loans will be suffered.

With the exception of the original loans made by the Corporation on the 1933 cotton and corn crops, all loans made by the Corporation have been for less than the market value of such commodities at the time the loans were approved. There has been much discussion within the past few months concerning the 12-cent cotton loans made by the Corporation during the 1934-35 season. While cotton prices are now slightly less than the amount of such loans, with carrying charges added, when the loan was arranged the price was approximately 13½ cents.

The loans of 55 cents per bushel on the 1934 corn crop were paid in full, with interest, and without loss to the Government.

The Corporation is loaning 45 cents per bushel on the 1935 corn crop, and 10 cents per pound on the 1935 cotton crop, both amounts being considerably less than the present market values of such commodities, and no losses are anticipated.

There will be some loss in connection with present loans on gum resin and gum turpentine, but not a great deal. These loans were made in connection with a program of market adjustment, under a license and marketing agreement of processors under the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The gentleman mentions that the loss on gum resin would not be very great. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the only investment the Commodity Credit Corporation has in gum resin is $5,839,185.64, so that the loss, if it lost all of it, would not be tremendous.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. No; and I think more than a million dollars of that amount has been collected.

The chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, in explaining the nature and purposes of the bill, has given a comprehensive summary of the organization, loan policy, source of funds, and record of the Commodity Credit Corporation. It is my purpose to show wherein the operations of this agency differ from those of the Federal Farm Board.

First. The affairs of the Federal Farm Board were managed by a board of eight directors, each of whom drew a salary of $12,000 a year. Commodity Credit Corporation is managed by a board of nine directors composed of officials of several other departments or agencies of the Government experienced in commodity financing, and who serve without additional compensation, including the Secretary of Agriculture, the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, and the Administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. The Corporation's president is the Honorable Lynn P. Talley, assistant to the directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, former Governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas, and generally recognized as one of the best qualified bankers in the United States.

Second. The Federal Farm Board was authorized to make loans only to cooperative marketing associations and to stabilization corporations, in which all of the voting stock was held by cooperative marketing associations. The futile efforts of the Board to stabilize prices were made by loans both to cooperative marketing associations and to stabilization corporations. It will be recalled that both the stabilization corporations and the cooperatives through which these efforts were made were completely dominated and controlled by the Board, and in most instances their organization was suggested and supervised by the Board.

Prior to the Supreme Court decision the Commodity Credit Corporation, as previously stated, made loans only to the actual producers of commodities, each of whom had cooperated in the adjustment program in the past and had agreed to so cooperate in the future. This requirement had a definite relationship to the success of the program. The stabilization loans and purchases of the Farm Board were made without reference to any program of production or market adjustment to prevent the accumulation of succeeding surpluses. Commodity Credit Corporation has made loans only upon commodities with respect to which there was in effect a program of production or market adjustment under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended.

Third. The next distinction between the operations of the Federal Farm Board and Commodity Credit Corporation is very important. Loans of the character made by the Federal Farm Board resulted in the physical concentration usually in or near merchandising centers of large stocks of agricultural commodities. This in and of itself had an adverse effect on the markets. The transaction between the producer and the Cooperative or Stabilization Corporation was one of purchase, the producer having no further direct interest in the commodity. Because of the control of these cooperatives and the stabilization corporations by the Federal Farm Board, the effect was that a board of eight men in Washington had the determination of when to sell, the quantity to sell, and the prices at which sales would be made. Many of you will, doubtless, recall the many announcements made by the Chairman of the Federal Farm Board as to what was or was not to be done in order to dispel the numerous uncertainties and rumors concerning the disposition of the large stocks held by the Board.

Fourth. Commodity Credit Corporation makes its loans to the farmer at his nearest or most convenient point of storage, and, in the case of corn, this is on the farm where it is sealed under State law. The farmer gets no greater loan if he pays freight and transportation costs. Hence, there is no large concentration of commodities in or near market centers. Notwithstanding the fact that, under the terms of the note and loan agreement, the producer is not personally liable on a loan from Commodity Credit Corporation except in cases of fraud or breach of contract; the transaction is one of pledge and not of sale. The producer's full equity is thus preserved, and he may obtain the release of the collateral at any time upon payment. Until a loan matures, the producer alone determines when to sell. A number of producers scattered over the entire Cotton Belt can sell locally, through the customary channels, a tremendous amount of cotton, in a single day, without adversely affecting the market. While it is well known that an offering, even of a nominal amount, by an agency owned or controlled by the Government and carrying a large stock, will immediately have the effect of depressing prices.

Fifth. In order to make its revolving fund of $500,000,000 go as far as possible, the Farm Board used private funds by subordinating its lien and borrowing a portion of its loan on commodities from large metropolitan banks, or groups of banks. This aggravated the depressing effect of its large stocks on the market, since the banks could and would, necessarily, have to sell if their calls for additional margin were not promptly met by the Farm Board. Commodity Credit Corporation loans to producers are made under an arrangement whereby banks and other local lending agencies may make the loans to producers in the first instance, on forms furnished by the Corporation, such of them as meet the requirements of the Corporation being acceptable to it for purchase, at par with accrued interest at 1 percent less than the rate of interest applicable to the producer's note, if tendered on or before a fixed date. Banks serving the locality in which the commodity is produced have proven they are not only anxious to serve the farmers but are eager for the investment of surplus funds in these loans. In making them they render a valuable service to the producers and to the Government. More than 50 percent of all loans made to producers have been made by and carried by local banks and other lending agencies, and many of such loans were repaid by producers while still held by such banks and other lending agencies.

Commodity Credit Corporation has no appropriation for administrative expenses, and its operations are financed entirely from its earnings. On March 15, 1936, Commodity Credit Corporation had collected income of $594,069.09 in excess of all administrative expenses. On accrued basis, the Corporation on the same date showed a net profit of $4,093,294.32. This, of course, does not take into account any losses which may ultimately be sustained from its operations.

Although no comparison can be made at this time between the losses of the Federal Farm Board and the possible losses of Commodity Credit Corporation, since any losses of the latter Corporation will be established only by the ultimate liquidation of its affairs, attention is called to the following statement with reference to the Federal Farm Board, included in the report filed by the committee selected from the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, under the provisions of Senate Resolution 42, Seventy-second Congress, to investigate the activities and operations of the Federal Farm Board (S. Rept. 1456, 74th Cong., 1st sess.):

The losses actually sustained on June 30, 1935, were equivalent to 50 percent of the amount of the revolving fund, and the loan balances estimated as uncollectible amounted to 17 percent of the fund.

Actual or prospective losses—a total of $344,911,021.26—therefore, were equivalent to 67 percent of the amount of the fund and to 69 cents out of every dollar originally appropriated to the fund by the Congress of the United States.

I therefore trust our good friends who are merely talking for the RECORD will join with us and make the vote unanimous on the passage of the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I am hoping to clear up one or two things which, to my mind, have not been mentioned. First, I want to compare as the others have compared the Federal Farm Board with this Commodity Credit Corporation and its methods. The only difference between the Republican Party and the Democratic Party has been like that of pledging the Government credit. The Democratic Party provided a billion dollars to the banks for the purchase of preferred stock, and then threw the whole Government after it by guaranteeing bank deposits. Here they were smart enough to guarantee the price of cotton at 12 cents, which at least temporarily stabilized the price. Cotton could remain about that, because our people knew they could not buy it any cheaper and they had to pay 12 cents because if they did not the Government would take it. This, however, does not square with what the Democrats promised in 1932 when they criticized our method. Well do we remember those days when the farmers of this country pleaded with the Hoover administration to come to their aid, and do so to the amount of several hundred million dollars. This little Commodity Credit Corporation owes about $300,000,000 to the R. F. C., and it has a capitalization of only $3,000,000. The R. F. C. states that those notes came due February 14 of this year, and they hesitate to renew them. They have renewed them twice. The R. F. C. does not want to renew them again.

They prefer to raise this capitalization so that the Commodity Credit Corporation can go to the banks of the country for loans, which they can do, on this cotton, at as low as 1 percent. Thus the farmers can save money. But if they renew the loans and hold them indefinitely, as Mr. Jones says he must hold them, and pay insurance, storage, interest, and other expenses, you will note that there will be a loss of perhaps 3 cents a pound on some 6,000,000 bales of cotton now controlled by the Government. We may lose 5 cents a pound, under that word "indefinite", and the probabilities are that we will lose $300,000,000 before the entire transactions are liquidated. Take your pencil and figure it out. Five hundred pounds to the bale, 6,000,000 bales; a loss of perhaps 5 cents per pound. Temporarily we may use this scheme to unload it on the banks at 1 percent, with the guaranty of the Government to take over the loans if necessary. Temporarily, I say, the farmers may be benefited, because the banks know that they can bring those loans in later and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation must take them up.

Have you forgotten the Reconstruction Finance Corporation statement of a year ago? How much did they tell you they were obligated to take back in loans from banks that have already loaned on cotton, besides the Commodity Credit Corporation? I forget the exact amount, but, as I recall, it was some $800,000,000. Figure this plan out, if they are forced to hold cotton off the market, as they must do under this plan of constantly renewing of notes. In reply to questions, Mr. Jones, of the R. F. C., said they would have to hold it indefinitely.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GIFFORD. I hope it is made clear to you that this is only a temporary adjustment. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation desires that the Commodity Credit Corporation place their loans with banks. It might help the farmer temporarily, but in the end it may all have to come back again, if it has to be indefinitely held. You are talking only about the $280,000,000 owed to the Corporation, but the banks have advanced a lot of money besides this to the farmers. The Government has not only loaned and practically guaranteed all other loans and the whole Government credit is thrown back of this cotton because of the guaranteed price of 12 cents. Of course, they cannot sell it abroad at the world price except for the subsidy paid to the farmers. Currency troubles also prevent selling it abroad. This is explained by Mr. Jones' testimony at the hearing. It appears that we must hold it indefinitely for home consumption. Even now there is a carry-over of some 4,000,000 bales. Do not only look back at the Farm Board and make comparison, but also look back and examine your Democratic platform of June 17, 1932.

Mr. Roosevelt said:

We must at once take the Farm Board out of speculation in wheat and cotton and try out a new plan to get surplus crops out of the country without putting the Government into business.

May I emphasize the words "to get surplus crops out of the country"?

When President Hoover suggested to the farmers that they plow under every third row of cotton, do you remember the howl of rage that went up from all over the country? But immediately when you came into power, you went much further and said to the farmer, "Plow it up and we will pay you for doing so." "We will throw the full Government credit back of the farmer no matter what the loss!"

We did not attempt to pledge the whole Government credit in all sorts of schemes, as A. A. A. guaranties and subsidies. We promised the farmers merely cooperation, which we could not get. Neither could you until you baited them and paid them liberally to give it.

All of your criticisms of the Farm Board fall flat today in view of the many costly experiments you are making. But, as I have often said, "You have built the house. You have pledged the Government. We have to live in it with you." Some of us will vote for the bill. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, this bill only seeks to increase the capital stock of the Commodity Credit Corporation from $3,000,000 to $100,000,000. I do not see why anyone should oppose it.

The purpose of the bill is to enable the Commodity Credit Corporation to secure money at a small rate of interest. It can obtain money from private sources probably as low as 1 or 1½ percent. Many bankers who are unable to obtain good security for their funds are willing to loan to the Commodity Credit Corporation at this low rate of interest because they are protected and the security is adequate. Should the Corporation obtain loans for 1½ percent, with a spread of 1 percent for operation, it could then make loans to the farmers for something like 2½ percent, whereas under the present law the farmers have to pay 4-percent interest to the Corporation.

Heretofore the Reconstruction Finance Corporation made loans to the Commodity Credit Corporation at the rate of 3 percent, and the Commodity Credit Corporation made loans direct to the farmers at the rate of 4 percent.

The Commodity Credit Corporation was established as a governmental agency for the purpose of making loans on agricultural commodities and to finance the carrying and orderly marketing of such commodities. The Corporation loaned the corn farmers in 1933 and 1934, 45 cents per bushel when the market price was around 18 cents per bushel. It loaned on cotton 10 cents per pound in 1933 when cotton was being marketed for more than 10 cents per pound. The corn farmers paid back all their loans and the Commodity Credit Corporation lost nothing. In 1934 this Corporation loaned to cotton growers 12 cents per pound on cotton. At that time it was bringing a little more than 12 cents per pound. Unfortunately cotton declined to some extent. The Corporation has on four and one-half million bales of cotton a loan of 12 cents per pound. With warehouse and carrying charges, the Corporation has something like 13½ cents per pound on the 12-cent cotton. To dump this cotton on the market at this particular time would certainly depress the market and probably the price of cotton would decrease 2 or 3 or perhaps 4 cents per pound.

By orderly marketing of cotton we can sell the surplus without depressing the market, and the Government will not lose on the loans, but if we dump a large amount on the market at this time the Government will probably lose a very large sum. So long as a threat exists that cotton may be dumped on the market without warning, it places both the buyer and the seller in the position of being frightened and therefore has a tendency to depress the market.

I hope and believe that by the passage of this bill and the orderly marketing of this cotton the Government will not lose anything.

Cotton does not deteriorate in the Government warehouses of the Nation, and therefore all the surplus cotton can be safely carried without any damage in grades. I know of no other commodity which can be carried for such a length of time without deteriorating. It is claimed by some that cotton would not deteriorate for half a century in our well-built Government warehouses.

None of the cotton farmers asked for loans on their corn in the cotton area.

I know of no other governmental agency which has been as beneficial to the farmers in stabilizing the prices of commodities as the Commodity Credit Corporation.

It is absolutely necessary that some method should be provided so that all the Government-owned cotton will not be forced on the market at one time, and I therefore cannot understand why anyone would oppose this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. CITRON. Can the gentleman tell us whether or not with the increased capitalization as provided in this bill the tobacco farmers of the Connecticut River Valley may hope for help? I have heard a great deal about cotton, but I am interested particularly in tobacco.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. It certainly will. This Corporation can lend on any commodity. Last year and this year it lent about $7,000,000 to the tobacco growers of this country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, that is too much. Five minutes will be enough.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I feel it would be trespassing on the indulgence and sufferance of the Members of the House at this late hour in the afternoon to talk for 20 minutes when it is not necessary, but like Ishmael of old, I want to raise my voice in the wilderness on this matter, since the issue of the old Farm Board has been injected into the discussion.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK] a few moments ago undertook to state the essentials of this difference. If I were asked to state the difference between the old Farm Board and the Commodity Credit Corporation I would say it is a difference only in alphabetical arrangement. One would be the F. F. B., and the other would be the C. C. C. Back in 1928, of course, we had not learned how to ravish the alphabet, so we called it the Federal Farm Board. I feel this is the essential difference between the two. As one traces out the operations and functions of the Farm Board and of the Commodity Credit Corporation, the similarity is very manifest.

By way of history I feel this charitable and good-natured political bantering that is taking place this afternoon is rather informative, because it gives us a chance to revise and extend history. We can revise and extend our remarks in 20 minutes, but sometimes it takes 4 years to revise and extend history so that it will accord with the record. What impresses me out of history, of course, is what was written in the Democratic platform in Chicago in 1932 when they recited:

We condemn the extravagance of the Farm Board, its disastrous action which made the Government a speculator of farm products and the unsound policy of restricting agricultural products to the demands of domestic markets.

This was one of the solemn covenants made with the people in the platform of 1932.

Pursuant to that platform the candidate for the highest office within the gift of the people addressed himself to the country on the 14th of September at Topeka, and said:

When the futility of maintaining the price of wheat and cotton through so-called stabilization became apparent, the President's Farm Board, of which his Secretary of Agriculture was a member, invented the cruel joke of advising the farmers to allow 20 percent of their wheat land to lie idle, to plow up every third row of cotton, and to shoot every tenth dairy cow.

And at last, after practically all the harm that could possibly be done had been done, the President's acceptance speech of 1932 fully recognizes the futility of the stabilizing experiment and merely apologizes for the result.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a further quotation at this point?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. In the speech of Candidate Roosevelt on June 17 he said:

We must at once take the Farm Board out of speculation in wheat and cotton, try out a new plan to insure getting crop surpluses out of the country without putting the Government in business.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Quite true.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 additional minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I just wanted to know from the gentleman if he is going to vote for the bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; I will say to my good friend from Colorado I fully intend to vote for the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The reason I asked is because the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE] and I have made an agreement to applaud every Member who talks against the bill and votes for it. I just want to know in advance so we can get ready, you know.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I deeply appreciate the vagaries of the mind of the gentleman from Colorado, but I simply cannot overlook this opportunity to call the kettle black in view of the experience we have had since 1932, but I assure the gentleman we do it in the most charitable fashion in the hope of keeping the historic record straight. But as we talk about the Farm Board my good friend from Colorado doubtless will remember something about it having been a tallow-pot tiller of the soil, or a farmer, himself out there in Colorado. As late as 1931 they had about 247,000,000 bushels of wheat and something like $208,000,000 of direct advances to cotton. Then it became necessary to liquidate the holdings. We swapped 25,000,000 bushels of wheat for 1,050,000 of Brazilian coffee, and I think we still have several thousand bags of that coffee left. It is being marketed in an orderly fashion at the present time.

We sold 15,000,000 bushels of wheat to China. We have received the interest on the note, but not the money. We sold 7,500,000 bushels of wheat to Germany. We have received the interest on the note, but we have not received any of the principal sum. We gave 844,000 bales of cotton and 85,000,000 bushels of wheat to the Red Cross. So by the time the whole score was settled it cost us $371,000,000.

If what the gentleman from Massachusetts who preceded me said is pathetically true that ultimately the loss of the Commodity Credit Corporation may run as high as $300,000,000 then both of the major parties have proved to their own satisfaction, after painful experiment, that stabilization is not all it is cracked up to be.

The gentleman from Georgia stated that the Government ultimately would not lose money on this venture, but that is only half of the story. The other half is what is the cotton farmer going to lose? Let me tell you a little experience I had back in the days of the Farm Board when I used to go into the bake shop with a white cap and suit on and help make doughnuts, tea rolls, bread, and all that sort of thing. A flour salesman would come in to sell flour. I remember distinctly on one occasion I said, "What kind of quotation can you give me on 5,000 barrels of good spring-wheat flour?" He said, "If you can tell me what the Farm Board is going to do with the great backlog of surplus that is piled up at the present time, I will tell you what I can do by way of a future quotation on flour."

There is the difficulty in a stabilization program. It is the fact that you set up an enormous surplus of some basic commodity and it hovers as a sinister influence over the market so that it begins to destroy prices. It begins to inspire a species of fear in the minds of purchasers. They begin to buy from hand to mouth, whether it is the small-town baker or one who goes into the market and buys a million barrels of flour at a time. I am not so sure, as we accumulate these surpluses in the warehouses, in spite of the efforts of the Commodity Credit Corporation, that the cotton farmer is not going to ultimately have to pay the bill. As you pile up these surpluses you cannot help but have fear and apprehension over the consuming market. Ultimately it will be reflected in the form of lower prices.

Mr. Chairman, it must be patent that the philosophy of the Commodity Credit Corporation is not different from the Federal Farm Board. It is simply a question of stabilization. You do it by advancing money, whether it be on turpentine or resin, cotton or corn, wheat, peanuts, or tobacco. It makes no difference. You pile up a surplus. You advance the money so that the producer can hold it awhile in the hope that there will be an appreciation in the price; but it is essentially a stabilization operation, whether it be the Farm Board or the Commodity Credit Corporation, and as soon as we pile up enough we cannot get away from this deflection in price which sets in and the producer pays the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit another interruption?

Mr. DIRKSEN. It will be the rarest kind of pleasure.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I may say to the gentleman it may be that we appear to be criticizing the former administration for doing in one form what we are undertaking to do in another, but it looks like there is one thing that we can agree on in this country. We have a problem of excess production. Apparently we cannot agree on the remedy, but we ought to agree on the fact that we are faced with a permanent problem of excess production in agriculture, the same as in industry. The question is, How are we going to meet this problem? We are undertaking to meet it here perhaps by methods that may ultimately fail. However, the problem is there, and it has to be faced, and it has to be solved before we will have stability and prosperity in either agriculture or industry in this country. In other words, we no longer need the number of farmers and we no longer need the number of workers to produce what the people of this country can consume.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will say that in large part I think the gentleman is right.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I believe your party can be criticized in one respect. You criticized us for a stabilization operation in 1932 and then you turn around and make the same identical mistake. The result, foresooth, must be the same result.

The wind-up is a headache. We lost $371,000,000 on the Farm Board. You are going to lose money on the Commodity Credit Corporation. The only difference is you lose the money more efficiently than we did, because we have been charged with the dereliction, shall I say, of indifference to the task. You are doing it much more efficiently.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I do not believe we were losing money on the A. A. A. The sugar bill, so far as I know, was working perfectly in the West. The sugar companies had accepted it, the growers had accepted it, and the workers had accepted it. They were all making more money than before; the industry was prospering. There was no complaint from the consumer, and the plan was at the same time financing itself.

Mr. DIRKSEN. There was some excuse for the Farm Board losing money in its wheat operations. It started to finance wheat when wheat was selling at $1.15 per bushel for No. 2 at Kansas City. Wheat finally went down to 45 cents a bushel. Let me point out, however, that at no time in the history of its operations from 1929 until 1932 was there more of a spread in wheat than from 7 to 15 cents between Winnipeg, Liverpool, Kansas City, and Chicago. You had a deflection in the wheat price everywhere in the world, so the price of wheat in this country was simply going down corresponding to the depression in price in Liverpool, Winnipeg, and other places of the world. They could not help it, as a matter of course; but now you have had the extra advantage of having taken 40,000,000 acres out of cultivation and having had an agricultural act that, according to the last record that came to your office this morning, cost $1,480,000,000. Having taken 40,000,000 acres out of cultivation, the Commodity Credit Corporation should have a far better record than it does at the present time; but the brutal and stark fact remains, when you get through with the stabilization operation you will have made the same identical mistake for which we were criticized in 1932. You will wind up with a financial loss and a great big hangover.

For practical purposes the Commodity Credit Corporation now owns about 5,000,000 bales of cotton. This cotton was pledged for loans of 12 cents a pound. The market price is about 11½ cents. Insurance, warehousing, and other charges have brought the C. C. C.'s investment to 13½ cents a pound. It will probably cost a cent per pound per year to carry this cotton. In a brief while another crop will go to market. Invariably there is a price recession as we go from the old into the new crop. What assurance is there, therefore, that the C. C. C.'s losses, in spite of all the financing skill that can be brought to bear, will not go to two hundred or three hundred millions before this venture ends?

Nobody will deny that it has brought relief. That, however, could be said of the Farm Board. It, too, brought momentary relief. But sooner or later it had to reckon with the overhanging visible supply, and when apparent oversupply and sluggish demand began to operate, seven-eighths Middling cotton went from 18 cents to 6 cents. That is where the real problem began. It will therefore be interesting, and perhaps a bit painful, to see what the ultimate outcome will be. We may have to fight this battle all over again before we find durable relief.

Mr. Jones' testimony is most illuminating on this whole matter, and I quote some fragments of what he stated to the committee. At one point he said: "This cotton will not bring 13½ cents * * *." Again he stated, "The market is now around 11½ cents." Later he stated that, "There is still a substantial surplus." At still another point he stated that, "At the end of the current market year the carry-over of American cotton will be between eight and nine million bales, which is three or four million bales above the average normal carry-over." That statement of fact is fraught with significance for the future. At another time he said, "We could move a good deal of this cotton now if the countries that need it had anything to buy it with." And, finally, he said, "We have the cotton and cannot do much else except hold it and feed it out to the market as the market will take it." Meanwhile there will be another cotton crop, and then what?

I shall support the bill, however, because we cannot leave the C. C. C. suspended in midair with 5,000,000 bales of cotton and a paper loss of $50,000,000. We are in the position of Macbeth, who having committed the crime, said:

I am in blood, stepped in so deep
That should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go o'er.

There is little to do except go "oe'r"; but it is only fair to remind the hosts of democracy that what they so glibly condemned in 1932 as extravagance and speculation on the part of the Farm Board now takes on the habiliments of sacred policy. Funny what a difference a few years make.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BUCKLER].

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, since you have been discussing the Farm Board and the Commodity Credit Corporation here this afternoon, I would like to explain to you the difference between the Farm Board and the Commodity Credit Corporation.

As I understand from the information that has been given us on this floor, the Commodity Corporation lends the money direct to the farmers, and if you have had a loss of $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 the farmers have received that money, but I would like for any of you to show me any farmer in the United States who ever received any benefit from the Farm Board. [Applause.]

When the Farm Board started its operations, wheat out in my country was selling at $1.35 a bushel. Mr. Legge, chairman of the Farm Board, whom I happen to know personally, and who has been on my farm, was a very nice gentleman and had good intentions, but somebody down in Washington pulled the props out from under Legge and he fell down with the whole proposition.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. I cannot yield, as I have only 5 minutes. I hope the gentleman will excuse me.

As I was saying, wheat was worth $1.35 a bushel in my country and I was one of the farmers who had 10,000 bushels at that time. Mr. Legge went over the Northwest and told the farmers that $1.35 was too cheap. He said, "Don't sell your wheat, hold it. He pegged the price at $1.25", and we expected, of course, we would never have to take any less than $1.25 and we thought we might perhaps get more and therefore we held our wheat. What happened? The gamblers and speculators in Minneapolis and other markets of this Nation went to work and unloaded their wheat on the Farm Board. Then the powers down in Washington told Mr. Legge to drop the price, stating he could not hold it at $1.25, and he dropped it to 75 cents before the farmers had a chance to sell their wheat. The farmers still thought perhaps they would get 75 cents but in a very short time the 75-cent price was withdrawn and a great many of the farmers in the Northwest held their wheat until it went down to 50 or 60 cents. The Farm Board gathered all of this surplus up from the speculators and the gamblers and held the wheat for years.

The farmers thereafter sold their wheat as low as 30 cents a bushel. Therefore, this 370,000,000 lost by the Farm Board went to the speculators and elevator companies.

This is the history of the Farm Board. These speculators and gamblers not only sold the wheat to the Farm Board, but they went on the market and sold millions of bushels of wheat they did not have—in other words, "hot air"—in order to depress the price, because if they could force the price down, they could collect the difference between $1.25 and 50 cents a bushel. Legge had the actual wheat and was in a good position to break the gamblers, which no doubt he intended to do, but Hoover or somebody down in Washington told him not to do it. As you will remember, Mr. Legge resigned and only lived a few years thereafter. Pegging the price of cotton is a step in the right direction. Before we get out of this depression I believe the Government will have to set a minimum price on all farm commodities. Farmers are the only class of people in the United States that produce their crops for less than cost and allow the gamblers to set the price. They have only been able to do this by denying themselves of all the luxuries, a great deal of the necessities of life, and working themselves and children long hours.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, after this full discussion I hesitate to ask time to say a few words on this bill, and would not do so were it not for the fact that the constituency which I represent is vitally interested in the matter of commodity loans, especially corn raisers of the Middle West and in the district which I represent.

I have listened this afternoon to a discussion of the comparative merits and demerits of the Farm Board and the Commodity Credit Corporation. I have heard the men on our majority side defend the Commodity Credit Corporation as against the Farm Board, and vice versa.

I think there is a vital distinction between the two. The distinction I have in mind is the fact that during the time when the Commodity Credit Corporation was in operation we had a program of control, which had the effect of raising the price of farm products.

My distinguished friend the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPKINS] credited the drought with the raise in farm prices. This is a matter of controversy, but it will be very difficult for us to satisfy the farmers of the Middle West that the farm-relief program of this administration has not had a very beneficial effect on the prices of farm commodities.

Now, let us not lose sight of the fact that this is a bill merely to increase the capitalization of the Commodity Credit Corporation. I have read the report. I am interested in it because I am a member of the group known as the agricultural group or the prairie group—I was appointed chairman of the committee on commodity loans of the prairie group, and this committee has done much work on the subject.

We discussed this matter with Mr. Davis, of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, and he said that in his opinion such a bill would bring about the result desired; in other words, continue the loans on corn which have been made up to this time.

On March 2 I introduced a bill—H. R. 11556—to increase the capital stock of the Commodity Credit Corporation, just as it is increased by the bill under discussion. The Senate passed S. 3998, the bill now before the committee, and the Banking and Currency Committee reported that bill favorably. That action of the committee will insure speedier passage than if H. R. 11556 were reported out, and I heartily approve the committee's action.

I can say, without fear of contradiction, that of all the acts of this administration looking to farm relief, that which permitted the loan of 45 cents a bushel on corn has met with the highest approval throughout the agricultural sections of this country.

So I say that I am interested in this bill and the continuance of these loans, and I trust the bill will pass. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. REILLY].

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the pending bill is to permit an increase of from $3,000,000 to $100,000,000 of the capital stock of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

The Commodity Credit Corporation was organized in October 1933 by an Executive order for the purpose of stabilizing the value of farm products, through the advancing of money to farmers so that they could hold their crops and market the same in an orderly manner.

The capital stock of the Commodity Credit Corporation is $3,000,000, and it is proposed in the pending bill to grant permission to this Corporation to increase its capital stock to $100,000,000. The increase of $97,000,000 of capital stock is to be taken up by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and is to be paid for in loans already outstanding from the Finance Corporation to the Commodity Credit Corporation. The passage of this bill will call for no further expenditure of money on the part of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The purpose of this bill is to put the Commodity Credit Corporation on a better financial basis so that it might be able to borrow money at a lower rate from private interests.

The Commodity Credit Corporation has loaned hundreds of millions of dollars to farmers on their crops, and of the sum loaned practically all has been repaid except the loans made on the crops for 1934, particularly the cotton crop of 1934.

In 1933 the Government loaned to the farmers 10 cents a pound on their cotton. This loan has been repaid, so also the loans made on corn and other agricultural products for that year.

In 1934 the Government loaned 12 cents a pound on cotton. At the time the said loans were made cotton was selling at 13½ cents a pound. Since that time the price of cotton has fallen off about one-half cent a pound, and the 12-cents-a-pound loan to the farmers for their cotton, together with the interest on the loans and storage charges, take up more than the difference between the 12-cents-a-pound loan on the cotton and the selling price of 13 cents a pound.

It would appear from the facts of the workings of this Corporation that the loan of 12 cents a pound on the cotton crop of 1934 was too high, and that the Corporation very likely will have to take a substantial loss. However, the object and aim of all agricultural legislation has been to put purchasing power in the hands of the farmer. There can be no doubt at all but that as a result of loans made to farmers by this Corporation the farmers in general have received hundreds of millions of dollars more for their crops than they would have received if they had not secured such loans.

One great difficulty with the farmer and his prices is that too many farmers have to sell their products immediately after being harvested, with the result that the market is glutted and prices fall. The Commodity Credit Corporation may cost the Government some money, but it has been of great benefit to the farmers, and, again, it may point the way to a proper set-up that will make it possible for the farmer to be relieved of the necessity of putting his crops on the market at a time when the market is overloaded. In other words, some kind of a set-up is sought that will enable the farmer to borrow on his crops and to hold the same until he can get reasonable prices.

I regret very much that my genial friend from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], and a valuable member of the Banking and Currency Committee, did not see fit to stay in the Hall after his own speech and listen to the very instructive speech of our colleague from Minnesota [Mr. BUCKLER] on the workings of the old Hoover Farm Board. Mr. BUCKLER is what is known as a dirt farmer, and I take it knew what he was talking about when he told the story of the Farm Board and the wheat farmer, a story of ruin to the farmer.

There has been much said in this debate about the criticisms that the Democratic Party heaped on the old Farm Board and the fact that in its Commodity Credit Corporation it had set up the same kind of machinery for helping the farmer. I am not prepared to go into the history of the old Farm Board, but I think it is quite generally understood that the Farm Board cost the Government several hundred million dollars and that during its existence the trend of farm prices was downward, and I do know that during the existence of the Commodity Credit Corporation the trend of prices has been upward. To my mind, the most significant thing about the Farm Board legislation of the Republican Party and the Commodity Credit Corporation set-up of the Democratic Party is that it indicates that both parties have recognized that we have a serious farm price problem. Both parties have tried to set up machinery, through legislative enactment, that would bring about a parity of agricultural prices with other prices, particularly the prices that farmers have to pay for the products of the factory.

The old Farm Board attempted to help the farmer in two ways: One, through pegging operations on the stock market; and, two, through setting up corporations for the purchase of surplus farm products. Under the old Farm Board the farmer dealt with these corporations. Under the Commodity Credit Corporation loans have been made, and are being made, directly to the farmer on his corn, his wheat, and his cotton, and so forth.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But what the Farm Board did was to finance a stabilization of cotton through a threefold program: First, it held 1,300,000 bales; second, it financed 2,100,000 bales through the cotton cooperatives; and, third, it financed 2,000,000 bales through the banks of the South. Is not that orderly marketing?

Mr. REILLY. No; it does not appear to have worked that way. The accumulated surpluses had a depressing effect upon the market, and, as I have stated, under the Farm Board agricultural prices tended downward, while under the Commodity Credit Corporation agricultural prices have tended upward.

My good friend from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] is much concerned about the Democratic platform of 1932 and the failure of the Democratic Party to pay any attention to its platform pledges. The Democratic platform was written in July 1932. It was almost 8 months thereafter that Mr. Roosevelt took office—March 4, 1933. At the time the Democratic platform was written Mr. Hoover and his associates in the management of the Republican Party were telling the people that prosperity was just around the corner and that all the country had to do was to wait a little while longer. During the period from July 1932 to March 1933 the promised prosperity did not appear from around the corner. Instead, conditions got worse economically every day until, when Mr. Roosevelt was sworn in as President of the United States, industry and agriculture were on the verge of a collapse. The fact of the matter is, as it has often been stated, at that time our country was on the operating table. Mr. Roosevelt was confronted with a condition and not a theory when he took office and it was not what the makers of the Democratic platform had pledged the party to do in July 1932, but rather what had to be done on March 4, 1933, in order to save our industrial democracy.

Mr. Roosevelt was elected President of the United States because the country was tired of the watchful-waiting tactics of Mr. Hoover's administration. The people wanted action. They wanted the Government to do something affirmatively to aid industry and agriculture, to prevent the banks from failing. In other words, they wanted the Government to stay the rush of the panic. They wanted action, as I have stated, and they got it under the New Deal program to save the industry and agriculture of this country.

When Mr. Roosevelt came to Washington the leaders of the agricultural world were there to meet him and to beg of him to do something to save the farmer from ruin. Awaiting him also were the leaders of the industrial world begging him to do something to save industry, and there also came to him an appeal from the bankers to save the banks of the country from wrack and ruin.

The much condemned N. R. A. was not the product of Mr. Roosevelt's brain, but rather the program of the leaders of industry to save themselves. The A. A. A. was not Mr. Roosevelt's mental child, but rather the program of the great majority of the leaders of agriculture as their plan for saving the farmers of the country from wrack and ruin.

Notwithstanding the fact that much criticism has been hurled at these two pieces of legislation, I am of the opinion that the N. R. A. saved our industrial and that the A. A. A. was a godsend to our agricultural world.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, certainly the world moves. As the distinguished gentleman just preceding me has so eloquently claimed as the excuse for the failure of the President to keep his political promises.

It moves in more ways than one and, even though the reasons and the excuses just given by this distinguished gentleman were all true, there is no excuse for either the administration, or the underlings of this administration, condoning violations of the Federal law by confirming certain acting postmasters and refusing to confirm certain other acting postmasters, when the latter refused to purchase a confirmation, as it is claimed by a well-known Democrat the first group did.

I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to insert in the RECORD certain letters and an extract form of an application for postmaster under civil service.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Here is a letter received from a Democratic acting postmaster, the same gentleman having served as a Democratic county chairman for 20 years, having contributed from his own funds to the Democratic organization and to Democratic campaigns, a man who, if there be any such thing as party reward, had certainly earned from his party an acknowledgment of his services and the appointment and confirmation to this minor position, which pays a compensation of but $2,800, small reward certainly for all those long years of faithful service; a gentleman whose father, for almost 50 years, served in the like capacity—as chairman of the Allegan County Democratic committee.

This acting postmaster refused to pay for his confirmation as postmaster, after he had been appointed acting postmaster. He recognized the request for campaign funds for what it was and, true to his standards, he refused to be a party to the violation of the Federal statute, and the result you have in his own language. Let me read his letter:

My political enemies had the Postmaster General call the local office "vacant" so that they would be enabled to get me out. I cannot understand on what theory this office could possibly be classed as "vacant" as long as there is an eligible Democrat.

You will remember, too, that I was thoroughly investigated, and was cleared of any wrongdoing. That report is on file in the Post Office Department.

The fact of the matter is that I am to be punished because I would not violate the law regarding the purchase of Government positions. Those who did buy their confirmations (which the jury found was the fact), have been, or are being confirmed. That puts this administration in the position of approving of such illegal acts. And I cannot understand how they can afford to be put in that position. The inspectors called on the Democratic postmasters in this district with the result that they had damaging statements from all of them, and as a result, they had the Government subpoena 46 of them to give testimony in that trial in Grand Rapids. The special district attorney only used about 15 of them and then informed the court that he had a total of 46 witnesses on hand but that the testimony of the others would only be a repetition, and therefore he would rest his case without calling them. Of the 15 or so that did take the witness stand, about 11 of them testified that they were approached to give the ex-Congressman 10 percent of a year's salary for the confirmation. The others of us testified that we did not pay because we knew that it was against the law.

I am enclosing a copy of a letter to Mr. Sadowski, and a copy of a letter to Horatio Abbott. Also, I am enclosing one of the civil-service instruction sheets, and I call your attention to the last paragraph which concerns the paying for Government positions.

Sincerely,

EDMUND M. COOK.

The facts speak for themselves. This man, as were others, was appointed as acting postmaster in the Fourth Congressional District. Certain of them were approached by a Government official, who has since been convicted and is now confined in prison, and were asked to pay a certain percentage of their salaries, and were told, in substance, according to this gentleman's letter, that if they did pay they would be confirmed; that if they did not pay, they would be kicked out.

But it is not for me to criticize. The foregoing letter from this Democratic county chairman gives a fair bird's-eye view of the situation. The letters to which he makes reference were written to a Democratic Congressman and to the Democratic national committeeman from the State of Michigan. They are as follows:

ALLEGAN, MICH., March 23, 1936.

HON. GEORGE C. SADOWSKI,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SADOWSKI: I am enclosing a copy of a letter to Mr. Abbott, which will explain itself.

Kindly use your efforts to prevent the giving of the patronage in this county to and through men who voted the Republican primary ballot in 1932 and prior thereto.

The gentleman who is attempting to secure this post office away from me voted a Republican primary ballot in 1934.

I have been acting postmaster since November 1, 1933, and I was thoroughly investigated by two inspectors from the Postal Department. They interviewed 70 of our citizens, and they all complimented me.

I am the chairman of the Democratic county committee, and I am the chairman of our Democratic county executive committee. I was regularly elected to each position.

If men who illegally bought postmaster confirmations are to be condoned and their illegal acts approved by this administration, I want to know it. I have always contributed generously to our party; in fact, I have paid all of the costs for 20 years. Please bear in mind that we were not asked to contribute. On the contrary, we were asked to buy confirmations, and the jury so found the fact to be.

I shall be pleased to hear from you regarding this matter, and I trust that I may have your assistance.

Respectfully,

EDMUND M. COOK.

ALLEGAN, MICH., March 22, 1936.

HON. HORATIO J. ABBOTT,
Democratic National Committeeman,
Ann Arbor, Mich.

DEAR MR. ABBOTT: We, the presidents of the Young Peoples and the Women's Democratic Clubs, of Allegan County, respectfully call your attention to the patronage question in this county.

Naturally we are very familiar with political conditions here, and we desire to inform you that W. R. Vaughan has no legitimate claim to the chairmanship of our Democratic county committee. He was made "temporary chairman until election" 10 days prior to the November election in 1934. He has never called a meeting of our county committee.

Our chairman Edmund M. Cook was unanimously elected to fill the vacancy in the chairmanship, and he is also the chairman of our executive committee, being unanimously elected to that position also.

Mr. Cook has been our county chairman for 20 years and has officiated as acting postmaster at Allegan since November 1, 1933. He passed the examination and stood a very rigid investigation after charges had been preferred by the then Democratic Congressman in 1934. There is now an attempt to crucify him for the reason that he knew the law and refused to purchase a confirmation. Others who did violate that law have been, and are being, confirmed, and we do not think that this great Roosevelt administration will be placed in the position of condoning these illegal purchases of confirmations.

We earnestly beg of you to prevent this crucifixion of the best standing Democrat in this county.

Only the best interests of the party have prompted us to take this matter up with you, and we think that we are entitled to consideration, and, we respectfully ask that you take this matter up with us if there is any further information you may desire.

Very respectfully,

DOUGLAS NASH,
President, Allegan County Young Peoples Club (Democratic).
AIMEE EARLEY COOK,
President, Allegan County Women's Democratic Club.

The extract from the application for postmaster, which declared this office vacant, is as follows:

Warning: All persons are warned against offering, promising, paying, soliciting, or receiving any money or other valuable thing as a political contribution, or otherwise, for use of influence, support, or promise of support, in obtaining appointment. Any such act is a violation of law and offenders will be prosecuted.

This Democratic county chairman who has been refused confirmation has long been a loyal Democrat, accepting the party's candidates, the party's platform, believing in the party's principles. He has given far more than he was able of both time and money to the Democratic organization and the furtherance of its purposes. He is respected, as is his family. His mother still lives in this community, where her husband for so many years, without political reward of any kind, served as county chairman, and where he, too, gave both time and money to—and in fact for many years was—the Democratic organization.

This refusal to confirm him is this man's reward for resisting temptation, for refusing to pay a bribe. Is it strange that he, his family, his mother, his relatives, and his friends should have come to believe that virtue must be its own reward, for certainly no other is given him by the Democratic organization?

On the contrary, it would appear as though those in control of patronage desired to discourage the giving of information which would tend to expose crookedness and violation of law, if such exposure resulted in discredit to the party's candidates.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, as frequently occurs in some of the bills we have recently had before us, there has been a great deal said which has been beside the point. In connection with this bill there has been a great deal of discussion of the relative merits of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Federal Farm Board. There is not any difference, and no matter how hard you work you cannot find any difference.

The world has not changed any, either, notwithstanding what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. REILLY] said about today being a different world from the world of 1932. The same people are striving, with the same ideas, trying to bring about the same results, and unfortunately making very much the same mistakes.

I doubt the advisability of having ever organized the Commodity Credit Corporation. I question the wisdom and judgment with which it has been carried on, as to the amount of the margin on the loans it has made. I dread a continuation of the work of the Commodity Credit Corporation, in the event it still talks about making additional loans. On the other hand, we have it here before us. The question presented is not whether it shall be put out of existence or extended, because that question was passed on last year by the Congress, and the Corporation was extended until a period about a year from now.

The only problem is whether or not we should permit this refinancing set-up which Mr. Jones assures us will enable the Commodity Credit Corporation to secure cheaper money, that it may in turn pass it on to the borrower, and put itself in such financial position that it may be able to do some of its financing in the outside market, instead of all of its financing through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

I appreciate very clearly, as has been pointed out, and I think it should be pointed out again, that in a way the passing of this bill gives an opportunity to those in charge of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to conceal, perhaps, the undoubted loss which will occur with respect to the Commodity Credit Corporation. Manifestly a corporation with $3,000,000 capital and some $300,000,000 of loans, if there is a slight loss at all on the loans, its capital will be completely wiped out and it will show a considerable loss over and above that, whereas if you shift it to a corporation with a capital of $100,000,000 and approximately $200,000,000 of loans you can have a very substantial loss which only appears as impairment of capital. But anybody who can read a statement and who knows figures can take a pencil and put it down on a piece of paper and see that the same loss is there.

If it is true that there are certain advantages to be achieved from the point of view of permitting the Corporation to reduce its activities and to secure outside money, rather than Reconstruction Finance Corporation money, I am willing to go along, notwithstanding the possibility it gives to have a kind of concealment of the loss which we know is going to occur.

I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

REPORT OF FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION WITH RESPECT TO AGRICULTURAL INCOME AND ECONOMIC CONDITION OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCERS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 553, extending the time for the Federal Trade Commission to make an investigation and file final report with respect to agricultural income and the financial and economic condition of agricultural producers generally, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the House joint resolution, as follows:

House Joint Resolution 553

Joint resolution extending the time for the Federal Trade Commission to make an investigation and file final report with respect to agricultural income and the financial and economic condition of agricultural producers generally

Whereas the Federal Trade Commission was authorized under the provisions of Public Resolution No. 61 (74th Cong., 1st sess.), approved August 27, 1935, to make an investigation with respect to agricultural income and the financial and economic condition of agricultural producers generally; and

Whereas the said Commission was directed to present an interim report to the Congress on January 1, 1936, describing the progress made and the status of its work under said public resolution, and a final report with recommendations for legislation not later than July 1, 1936; and

Whereas it appears that the appropriation for conducting this investigation carried in the deficiency appropriation bill failed of passage in the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress, and was not actually made until February 11, 1936, although the resolution authorizing the investigation was introduced some 18 months prior to the date specified for the completion of the investigation and report, and was approved August 27, 1935; and

Whereas the extensive information called for under the terms of the said public resolution has caused frequent and numerous requests for extension of time upon the part of persons from whom such information has had to be obtained, such extensions amounting to from 1 to 3 months in addition to 30 days' time originally allowed by the Commission; and

Whereas it is learned that such of the necessary information cannot be secured by July 1, 1936; and

Whereas it appears that it will be possible for the Commission to secure and present much more comprehensive data and to present a much more thorough and accurate study and report upon the same if the time within which it is directed to complete its investigation and submit its final report thereon with recommendations for legislation be extended: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Federal Trade Commission be, and it hereby is, authorized and directed to proceed under the public resolution aforesaid and is directed to complete the investigation thereunder and to submit a final report to the Congress with recommendations for legislation not later than October 1, 1936.

It is hereby further provided that any unexpended balance of the appropriation of the $150,000 made in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1936 in accordance with the authority contained in Public Resolution No. 61, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, is hereby made available for like purpose to and including October 1, 1936.

THE SPEAKER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

MR. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, this resolution simply gives them additional time to conclude the investigation and file a report, and it does not ask for any additional money?

MR. WARREN. That is correct. They were to file their report on July 1. This is to give them until October.

THE SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

MR. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday may be dispensed with this week.

THE SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SIROVICH, for 1 week, on account of illness.

To Mr. HILL of Alabama (at the request of Mr. STARNES), indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

MR. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the unfinished business tomorrow after the reading of the Journal will be the vote on the bill we just concluded?

THE SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

AVERTING THE FLOOD PERIL—ADDRESS BY SENATOR GUFFEY

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address on the subject Averting the Flood Peril, delivered over the radio last night by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY].

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Today thousands of Americans are laboring to repair the ravages of flood. The subsiding waters have left a trail of muck and slime, of pestilence and debris, of poverty and terror. Tragically but grimly people turn to the task of rebuilding. After a national disaster such reconstruction as is possible must proceed. Yet shall we do no more than merely repair and replace and await another flood? Shall we not resolve to take such measures as will prevent these disasters in the future?

Within the past fortnight devastating floods raged through 12 States. Every one of the New England States suffered acutely. Power houses were swept away and bridges toppled over like rows of dominoes. In my own State of Pennsylvania flood waters reached an all-time high and the loss to homes and to industries is estimated at several hundred millions of dollars. At Pittsburgh, one of the greatest and busiest industrial centers in the world, the flood barricaded every highway and railroad leading into the city, submerged homes and factories, halted transit lines, and by wrecking electric, gas, and steam systems left people without heat, light, or cooking facilities.

The losses in rural areas were less dramatic but perhaps even more tragic, for there was a loss to farm lands in the State of $100,000,000 through the washing away of some of Pennsylvania's most fertile soils. Houses can be replaced, factories rebuilt, but life-giving soil washed down the rivers is gone forever.

Unless we control floods, and control soil erosion at the same time, the Nation faces physical and social bankruptcy. That culmination is just a matter of time, and a relatively short time at that, unless we take action.

The strength of other civilizations has been sapped by letting this disease run its course unchecked, and we can save ourselves only by adopting the preventive methods and cures of modern science. The rapidity with which this country has been populated has been exceeded only by the pace at which this population has stripped it of its natural resources, and in this process great scars have been inflicted on the land itself.

As I watched for a few moments the swollen waters of the Allegheny and the Monongahela Rivers flow through the streets of Pittsburgh, and the waters of the Potomac spread out over Washington's famous parks, I was struck by one common character they possessed—their foreboding color.

The many thousands of you who watched the flood waters or saw the pictures last week were aware of this same ominous quality. It was not alone the swiftness of the current which was foreboding, nor its width which seemed fateful. It was the color. The wreckage of houses, barns, trees, and bridges was spectacular, but within the water there was a greater wreckage—the wreckage of the land.

This loss of soils will remain unrecorded in monetary terms. Yet the Soil Conservation Service has estimated that 250,000,000 tons of topsoil was washed away out of the reach and use of man. It is difficult to comprehend such a gigantic figure. You have seen pictures of the massive liner, Queen Mary, that England is building, and we are told that it will be bigger than any ship now afloat on any ocean. If this huge boat were loaded each trip with all the earth it could carry, it would take over 6,000 trips to carry as much soil as washed down our rivers in a single flood.

We may rebuild the cities, but when we remember that it takes from four to six hundred years for Nature to build a single inch of topsoil, it is obvious that the soil is lost as far as our present civilization is concerned.

About one-third of this quarter billion tons of topsoil was washed into the sea. The other two-thirds was deposited in and near river beds, clogging navigable channels and creating other obstructions. Many of the rivers navigated by our forefathers are today so filled with silt that they cannot be used. Some of this silt is inevitably deposited behind great dams and if unchecked in time destroys their effectiveness.

Since our country was first settled we have ruined 50,000,000 acres of cropland in the United States, seriously injured 50,000,000 more, and are now threatening another 100,000,000 acres. Our earliest Presidents realized the necessity for properly caring for the soil. George Washington ceased raising tobacco at Mount Vernon because it was a clean-tilled crop which he found was causing soil erosion. Thomas Jefferson, at Monticello, introduced contour plowing and terracing to control the erosion of the soil on his plantation. These early leaders of our country recognized the paramount importance of soil conservation.

These problems of flood and erosion control were of great interest to President Roosevelt when he was Governor of the State of New York, for he was concerned with the proper use of the land and waters of the Empire State. When he became President, one of his first acts was to appoint a board to study the natural resources of the United States.

Late in 1934 the Mississippi Valley Committee reported that "planning for the use and control of water is planning for the most basic functions of the life of the Nation. . . . The aggregate losses in the United States from major floods may not be as great as those from certain less dramatic causes, such as soil erosion, nevertheless, flood loss creates a problem which must be squarely faced."

Finding that annual losses due to soil erosion in the watershed of the Mississippi River were at least 20 times greater than the losses caused by floods of the Mississippi and its principal tributaries, this committee reported that control of erosion was vital to the national welfare.

Last week Morris L. Cooke, who was chairman of this Mississippi Valley Committee, and later of the water section of the National Resources Board, testified before a Senate committee as to the urgency of this twin problem of flood control and soil erosion, and made it clear that preventive measures taken upstream together with adequate dams and flood control works downstream are both necessary if we are to obtain the most effective results.

The National Resources Board, after a careful study of the natural resources of our country pointed out the pressing need for a wiser use of our land. Its report stressed the interrelationship between the proper use of our land and success in controlling our waters and emphasized the need for proper flood control.

The conservative and independent New York Times last week appraised the report of the water planning committee of this board as "a document of the highest social importance, prepared by far-seeing engineers. Its water planning committee developed the first comprehensive proposal for the control and utilization of the Nation's streams, from rills to mighty rivers. The committee's survey makes it plain enough that the problem presented cannot be solved by individual communities and States. It is regional. It concerns not merely the Mississippi and its tributaries, but the countless little streams that interlace the country from coast to coast. With it are bound up recurrent droughts, erosion that carries away the topsoil of the upland farms and leaves hardpan almost as impervious to water as a sheet of glass, water-power plants, irrigation projects, pollution of streams, inland navigation, municipal water supply, water conservation, and water utilization in their broadest aspects.

"If the floods have taught us anything, it is the need of something more than a dam here and a storage reservoir there. We must think of drainage areas embracing the whole country—think of small projects which number thousands, but which are necessary, individual pieces in a vast mosaic of definite pattern, think of major engineering undertakings in terms of decades."

I have just seen an attractive small book called "Little Waters." It recently was issued under the joint auspices of three agencies of the Federal Government—the Soil Conservation Service, the Resettlement Administration, and the Rural Electrification Administration. The President sent a copy of this to Congress, and in an accompanying message recommended that consideration be given to procedure for conserving the waters of the "Little Rivers." This book shows by means of pictures and a simple text how vital it is for this Nation to utilize and control small streams if our major rivers are to be of the greatest possible service to us. To those of you who have a real interest in this subject, write me and I will gladly send a copy of this study entitled "Little Waters."

As a result of the work of this administration we have a better knowledge of floods, their causes, and cures. We have an improved understanding of what man must do to work successfully with nature. We know now that successful flood control in the last analysis is dependent upon proper land use. Not only erosion control but reforestation, water storage, irrigation, and drainage are factors in the flood situation which we can ignore only at our peril.

The sum and substance of the lesson pointed out by all of these reports is just this—adequate flood control can only be attained by controlling the raindrops from the time they hit the ground until they reach the ocean.

The administration has not confined its efforts merely to studying the flood problem from Washington and securing expert reports upon it. A program is under way and work has been started in the field that will meet the twin problem of flood and erosion control as the program is expanded to include every drainage basin in the country.

The new farm act has as its no. 1 objective the conservation of the soil itself and its fertility through wise land use.

Until recently the American farmer has been planting 3 acres of soil-depleting crops to 1 acre in soil-building crops. The new legislation will help to replace this destructive practice with a program of soil building through crop selection.

The Department of Agriculture has announced as the national goal of the proposed program an increase of 30,000,000 acres in the area of cropland in soil-conserving and soil-rebuilding crops such as grasses and legumes. Grass roots are doing far more for the country than "grass-root conventions."

The Soil Conservation Service, with several other Government agencies, is making rapid progress in the fight to conserve not only our land but our water resources as well.

Every field an invisible reservoir is one of its major goals. By contour plowing instead of plowing up and down slopes, by terracing, by strip cropping, by planting trees on steep slopes, by building check dams in gullies, by constructing small ponds, and by developing proper crop rotations the Soil Conservation Service has already accomplished much in several regions.

The Forest Service is building for the future by planting trees on millions of acres of hilly and poor lands which have been unproductive for years. The root structures of these trees will hold the soil and the water, both of which are today being wasted on these desolate slopes. In addition the Forest Service is helping the farmer to restore his woodlot and so increase his valuable underground water storage. A considerable portion of the labor for this work is being supplied by the boys in the 2,000 C. C. camps.

In these ways part of our program is being carried out. By holding the rain where it falls and retarding it until it enters the ground, every field becomes an invisible reservoir, and water is saved for productive use instead of wasting itself as part of destructive floods.

The effectiveness of these important measures is shown by the statement of the Director of the Soil Conservation Service "that the volume of run-off water can be reduced 20 to 25 percent—the margin, in most cases, between mere high water and destructive floods."

The T. V. A. is demonstrating how effective an aid to the storage of underground waters would be provided by the proper farming of the 10,000,000 acres of farm land in the Tennessee Valley. Necessary as these undoubtedly are, the storage of water in nature's own reservoirs can be greatly expanded by intelligently readjusting the use of our agricultural lands. Such an operation, while not as spectacular as a large dam of concrete, will provide even greater storage for the rain falling on the earth. In the Tennessee Valley there are about 10,000,000 acres of land which are under cultivation or which have been farmed. While on much of this land about 15 inches of rainfall each year runs off quickly into the streams, it has been found that by changing farming practices this run-off can be reduced to about 5 inches—that is, 10 inches of this water can be saved. Such practices include reforestation and the substitution of cover crops like grass for clean tilled crops like corn and tobacco. This permits the water to soak into the ground. By holding this 10 inches of rainfall on each acre every one of the 10,000,000 acres in the valley would be made a reservoir for an additional 1,130 tons of water.

Thus the 10,000,000 acres would provide an underground storage reservoir for more than eleven thousand million tons of water. The tremendous magnitude of this reservoir is hard to visualize—yet it would be more than three times the storage capacity of the immense lake forming behind the great Norris Dam.

In addition to these measures which we have been discussing there can profitably be constructed many small reservoirs, ponds, and lakes which will aid in controlling floods and in furnishing opportunity for power and increasing facilities for fishing, swimming, and waterfowl. Such recreational facilities should be available in every community.

On the larger rivers these measures will aid, but there will still be great need for retarding basins, large dams, dikes, and levees such as we have been building in this country for over 200 years.

Yet without adequate upstream headwater control the useful life of these dams will be seriously diminished. This is shown by a recent study of a number of major reservoirs in the South, which disclosed that this group had silted up in less than 36 years. The reduction of the silt hazard by modern methods of erosion control is one of the best means of protecting the public's investment in these great projects.

Much of the $500,000,000 of public-works funds which this administration is investing in water-control projects is going into great flood-control works, and their construction is largely in the capable hands of the Army Engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation.

These water-control projects range from the Columbia River to Florida and from California to New England. Many of them are in the early stages of construction, and it will take several years to complete the larger ones.

Two outstanding projects are the navigation and flood-control works in the Tennessee Valley and a comprehensive project for the use and control of waters in the great Central Valley of California.

On the Tennessee Valley flood control is being achieved by a coordinated program involving correct land use, erosion control, reforestation, and the construction of dams on the larger rivers. This unified development of all the natural resources in the valley will be of tremendous benefit to the valley and the Nation in the coming years.

In the Central Valley of California the administration's comprehensive project is designed to utilize to the fullest extent the waters of this fertile region. Great engineering works are under way to provide sufficient water for irrigation, to restore the ground-water levels, and to control the destructive floods that in the past have ruined property and carried millions of tons of fertile soil into the sea. In addition, the program will provide electrical energy to meet the growing demands of agriculture and industry, and will improve navigation of the rivers.

Floods are, of course, no respecter of State boundaries. When there is a flood in West Virginia, the destructive waters of the Monongahela cannot be stopped at the borders of Pennsylvania even by an order of a supreme court. Nor can Ohio protect itself from floods arising in the valleys of Pennsylvania, New York, or West Virginia.

In a very early case the United States Supreme Court decided that the power to regulate interstate commerce embraces the power to keep navigable rivers free from obstructions to navigation. Every step in the water-control program of the administration is a help to the navigation of our rivers. It aims to prevent dangerously high water in certain seasons and dangerously low water in others. It helps to keep silt and other obstructions from our streams.

The law supports the administrative program in its smallest detail, and there is nothing on the statute books to indicate that a project involving navigable streams must be large or spectacular in order to be constitutionally valid.

As Secretary of Agriculture Henry Wallace says, "If the individuals comprising a nation cannot call upon government for help in the battle against forces as wide and deep-lying as the foundations of the nation itself, then neither the individuals nor the nation can have any hope for the future."

Nature has a way of educating both individuals and nations through emergencies. We are well advised to give heed to such warnings. Anyone who has seen the rush and heard the roar of those mighty uncontrolled waters and the wreck and ruin left in their wake will go the limit in bringing relief to the distressed and in aiding the rebuilding of what has been destroyed. This the national administration has done and will continue to do through special congressional appropriations, encouragement of private giving through the Red Cross, and by utilizing the forces of the Federal Housing Administration and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the C. C. C., the W. P. A., and the P. W. A. in the work of rehabilitation. No effort must be spared in easing the burdens of suffering and loss wherever it occurs.

But we are fortunate indeed in having at the head of the Government one who, while wholly conscious of what this immediate emergency means to millions of our people, has for many years been practicing the doctrine of the conservation of our natural resources to the end that such a catastrophe as this might be avoided.

If, out of our recent harrowing experiences and through this leadership in the cause of soil erosion and flood control, this Nation girds itself for a winning struggle against devastating national forces, the floods and the suffering will not have been in vain.

ADDRESS BY HON. JOSEPHUS DANIELS TO DEMOCRATIC CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Hon. Josephus Daniels, American Ambassador to Mexico, before the Democratic Club, Los Angeles, Calif., February 14, 1936.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Aside from its health-giving climate and varied rich resources and a people given to hospitality, California has a rare interest for the political-minded, particularly in the early days of a Presidential year. Those who are now studying the political skies of 1936 are busy trying to observe signs in the heavens to foretell what will be their portent by the "ides of November." For California is as true a barometer as exists when an expert is needed in the knowledge of the political firmament. In ordinary periods, when normal conditions prevail, California voters stick to normality and monotony and vote the Republican ticket; but when normality and monotony have conceived and brought forth their progeny in the shape of booms which enrich a favored few at the expense of the toiling many, and brought depression in their wake, California voters have contracted the habit of voting for a Democrat for President to "clean up the mess."

Let us take a look at the record that history records. In the memory of most men and women now living there have been four periods in which the people of California and the country turned to progressive candidates for President to lift them out of the slough of reactionary despond. The first of those periods was in 1892 after Republican rule had prostrated agriculture and industry and many people thought that only by creating a new party could conditions be improved. But then, as now, new parties made no effective appeal to the bulk of voters. The people chose rather to find the needed change by using the Democratic Party as the agency of recovery. They elected Cleveland in 1892 with his pledge of tariff reform and through a tax on incomes, placing the main cost of government upon those who received the largest benefits and were therefore most able to pay. There is no other sound basis of taxation. When nations or states, except in extreme emergency and then temporarily, impose taxes on the principle of consumption, they are shifting the burdens upon those receiving the least benefits and who must pay out of their little to enable the rich to escape their fair proportion. The ingenuity of man has not invented a more cruel and unjust method of taxation than a tax on consumption. Whenever enacted it ought to be entitled "An act to transfer the cost of government from the backs of the rich to the shoulders of the poor."

Mr. Cleveland was the first candidate for President in the last half century to advocate a graduated income tax. In 1892 California, fired by the pioneer spirit of an equal chance, gave a majority of its votes to Grover Cleveland. However, the inability of that administration to restore prosperity sent the Democratic Party into the wilderness for a long period.

The second time the issue of progress versus reaction influenced the Presidential election was in 1904 when Theodore Roosevelt, then the scourger of "malefactors of great wealth", contested with Alton B. Parker, who vainly sought to chain the Democratic Party to the chariot wheels of ultraconservatism. California by an overwhelming majority voted for Theodore Roosevelt.

By 1912 the people of California, led by HIRAM JOHNSON, a militant Republican progressive, and by Democratic progressives, joined hands, in spirit, with forward-looking men and women of other Commonwealths to make an end of "standpatism." Again, distrusting the utility of a new party, California and virtually the whole country as well, voted to put an end to reaction. Again the decision was to entrust the new freedom to the rejuvenated Democratic Party led by a scholar in politics, Woodrow Wilson, the forerunner of the so-called "brain trust." The people then, as now, preferred the brain to any other part of the anatomy for guidance.

There came in 1916 the crucial test whether progress or reaction should reside in the White House. The Republicans named their ablest and strongest easterner in the person of Justice Charles Evans Hughes. He made a brilliant campaign, but he was tied to the body of death incarnated in his party's domination by privilege and his own opposition to the income-tax amendment to the Constitution. The country was closely divided. California was to cast the deciding vote. In that year, in a sense, the immediate destiny of America and the world rested upon a virtual referendum of the voters of California. Would Californians rise to their great opportunity? Though a large majority of the voters registered as Republicans, in that crisis they rose above partisanship and continued Woodrow Wilson in the White House, a decision which carried historic blessings to the United States and to mankind. No one who lived in those anxious days can forget how all eyes were turned to California as the votes were being counted. The result in 1916 accentuated the truth of the saying, "As goes California so goes the Union."

Again in 1932 America stood at the crossroads. A period of favoritism and ineptness and frenzied finance had brought the country to its lowest depths. Fifteen million willing workers vainly walked the streets looking for a chance to turn honest labor into bread for their families. Farmers could find no markets for their crops and were losing their farms. Factories and mines were shut down or running on short time. Business was at a standstill and at its lowest ebb. Banks were bursting in the faces of hysterical depositors. The country had gone red if the ledgers could be trusted. It was the worst red peril it had ever faced. Manufacturers of red ink could hardly meet the demand, while there was an oversupply of black ink needed in normal bookkeeping.

In the face of the worst panic that had struck the country, what was being done to save a hopeless and despairing people who, through no fault of their own, faced hunger and the destruction of all their possessions? The answer is nothing; and nothing was ever done so meticulously and so consistently, so persistently, and so blatantly as nothing was done to avert or cure the record-breaking disaster. In that crisis, when a man and a party were needed to lift the country out of hopelessness into hope, to what for help and deliverance did the people turn? I know and you know and all the people who have been delivered from want and had their feet placed on the high road of recovery know that their chief debt for being lifted out of the debacle is due to the majestic commonwealth of California. It was then clear to nonpartisan observers that once again the Democratic Party was to be the chosen instrument to "clean up the mess." It was not so clear to some what individual with courage and vision should be chosen as the leader in the crusade to take us out of the red and carry us into restoration. Californians divided. Some said Roosevelt, some said Smith, some said Garner. In the end, thanks chiefly to the wisdom of Californians who put recovery above personalities, Franklin D. Roosevelt and John N. Garner were nominated for President and Vice President. They were given an unprecedented popular and electoral vote. California deserves the largest share of credit for their nomination and election. And every man, woman, and child who lives in more comfort and greater security than in 1929-32, as they send expressions of gratitude to Roosevelt and Garner and their associates, must say, "Hall and honor to California! It led the way out of the desert into the promised land."

I come as one of many, representing an agricultural section which was "broke" and "busted" in 1932, to give you and all Californians thanks for leading in the election of a President whose policies have transformed our country into one of returned and increasing prosperity.

In the presence of a recovery that defied the hopes of the most optimistic in 1932, there are sad evidences that we are a nation of short memories embracing many ingrates. In March 1933, when the poor were starving and the rich felt they were headed for disaster, the interests now organizing for a return to the old order sent their spokesmen to Washington with their appeals, "Save us or we perish." They then told Roosevelt that without strenuous, quick, and even radical action they were doomed. Those who did not go to Washington in person sent SOS messages, "Save our souls and bodies and property." They threw up their hands and admitted impotence. "Do something! Do something quick!" they cried. "Increase the national debt to forty billions, assume large powers, direct business and industry, take over the banking business (over 10,335 banks failed the previous year), be the farmer who will control agriculture, fix dividends (if any) and wages, do anything you think will bring order out of chaos. Be a dictator for salvation. For God's sake, save us! We have tried and failed. Only a puissant and active government can deliver us."

There was ground for these entreaties. In the three preceding years the national income had decreased from eighty-one to forty billion dollars. Government bonds were selling as low as 83.

That was the appeal from a discouraged people to a courageous President. He needed, however, no such hysterical cry for help coming from men who are now organizing Belshazzar's feasts to defeat the man who ventured all and endured all to restore faith and prosperity. He knew that there could come no general recovery without first rescuing agriculture from the depths into which it had been brought by his predecessors.

The first steps were to bring back buying power to the tillers of the soil. The farm income had dropped from ten and a half billion dollars in 1929 to a little over $4,000,000,000. There had been 35,000 foreclosures of farm mortgages in 1 month. Farmers could not pay their taxes nor educate their children. To raise agriculture from the depths was as essential to start the wheels of industry as to aid farmers.

What was the result of that policy? To mention only the leading crops, the price of wheat in 30 months increased from 48 cents a bushel to $1.01, a gain of 111 percent; cotton went up from less than 6 cents to 11½, an increase of 92 percent; corn from 21 to 60 cents a bushel; and tobacco over 100 percent increase, with a decreased production. Nearly all other crops have brought more money to the dirt farmers under the New Deal. Their cash income has increased 86 percent since the spring of 1933, due to the new legislation and to wise policies of the Roosevelt administration.

As soon as the agriculturists received better prices, how did the Roosevelt achievement affect industry and business? In 30 months the national income has increased thirty-seven and one-half billion dollars. Steel production has increased 250 percent. Everybody is riding, and automobile registration has increased 357 percent, while all automobile companies have made money hand over fist; listed stocks are 134 percent higher; bonds, 22 percent; building permits, 20 percent; merchandise sales, over 51 percent; and like improvement is seen in almost every line. Utility companies, which had almost drowned investors by the excess of water, have witnessed increased production of 19 percent. That's the way Roosevelt has "killed" the industry. As it gives rural electrification at lower rates it will steadily increase its business and everybody will be helped, except those who were induced to pay good money for stocks representing nothing but water.

Statistical figures of progress and betterment could be multiplied indefinitely. And yet—and yet—some of the very men whose incomes have been increased most by Roosevelt prosperity are spending some of the wealth they owe to Roosevelt to "gang up" against him and the policies that lifted them out of the ditch. In 1932, when the old order had brought them to the brink of bankruptcy, they cried, "Save us or we perish!" Now that they are on dry land they are biting the hand that fed them.

"When the devil was sick, the devil a saint would be;
When the devil was well, the devil a saint was he."

The men who wear the livery of privilege, masquerading under the name of the Liberty League, organized the forces which annulled the A. A. A., which raised the farmer from the danger of becoming a peon. In their policy of putting nothing, or one of the shams suggested in its place, the only "rugged individualism" and liberty left the farmer will be to sell his products below the cost of production. That was the "liberty" he enjoyed before 1933. And that is the only liberty he would get under the return of the old order.

While getting red in the face denouncing every plan that has lifted the country from the depths, these devotees of liberty (limited) have had no condemnation of the policies of favoritism under which the great bulk of the wealth of the country has been monopolized by the favored few. When these shouters against processing and excise taxes that aid agriculture give up all the subsidies, immunities, and privileges which have made them and their employers rich—when they disgorge such Midas-like incomes, made by manipulation, and give a better division to their employees—when that time comes, they may hope to have their spoutings receive some attention. Until then every citizen, except those who are getting all the cream and their sycophants and hirelings, will turn a deaf ear to their expressed love of liberty and the Constitution.

Why have the prophets of privilege collected a large sum to fight the New Deal? The answer is plain. It is because government has a heart and moves toward social justice. They oppose Roosevelt because he has done much to help the farmer; has put 5,000,000 idle men to work; has taxed excessive wealth; has followed the example of Sweden, Germany, and England in providing security for the old; has sought to put an end to stock jobbing and watered holding companies; has pressed for the right of labor for collective bargaining; and opposed grinding the seed corn by the employment of child labor, and in a score of other ways stood firmly for the rights of the forgotten man, while giving fair play to private initiative and protection to property.

If entrenched privilege mobilizes for a restoration of the old order, what is the plain duty of the businessman and manufacturer who was in the red or near the brink in 1932, or whose business was jeopardized by monopolistic concern? Of the farmer who has been transformed from a near peon to an independent farmer? Of the mechanics and other men dependent on wages or salaries? Of the professional men whose incomes were reduced? Of journalists who were rescued from distress? Of the citizens whose savings were lost or imperilled or decreased, and who now find them more valuable? Of men and women who love their country and wish to be one in which all who now live and those to come will have a fair chance? It is as plain as a pikestaff that to save their souls and protect their interests all these people must present a solid front against the organized minority who declare they will "gang up" against the President.

California led in the nomination and election of the President. Its early settlers braved the heat of the deserts and the cold of the mountains to set up here a new commonwealth. They had faith in themselves and in their future. They were not afraid of experiments. The Californians of today are their descendants in progress and courage. They have turned their backs upon the old order. They welcome the new day of equality, of a fair division of the fruits of labor and skill, of the spirit of justice that fills the air. As they rush forward to greet the new day they will be found as in 1892, 1904, 1912, 1916, and 1932, united and militant for Roosevelt and the New Deal, as they were for Teddy and the square deal, and Wilson and the new freedom. They don't want to go back to the shanty they occupied in 1932. They moved out into better quarters. They know that the only issue in 1936 will be: Shall we restore the old order or solidly stand behind the New Deal and go forward? In the words of Franklin Roosevelt, California will say: "We will not retreat!"

THE CHOICE BEFORE US—ADDRESS BY CHARLES P. CARROLL, JR.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a radio address entitled "The Choice Before Us", delivered by Charles P. Carroll, Jr., student of and speaker on international relations in Yale University, a member of the Yale Political Union, at Waterbury, Conn., February 2, 1936.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The people of our Nation today face the gravest issue to arise in their national existence; an issue which has called, not to one but all; an issue which has brought to you a realization of the world in which it finds itself. War or peace? That is the question we as a nation must solve.

On all sides we find an answer: The League of Nations, international law, neutrality. Of these three answers, which one can we accept?

The League of Nations? No; for it has been proved conclusively that this international government has pitted the strong against the weak in order to preserve an unjust status quo in Europe.

In 1924 the Corfu incident ended in League intervention, and League intervention resulted in a desire for revenue by Benito Mussolini, a revenge which by militarizing a people and a nation he now sees partially achieved in Ethiopia.

In 1932 the League remained silent as Japan invaded Manchuria; in 1933 remained silent as Great Britain led a punitive expedition into Afghanistan; but in 1936, as Great Britain, which virtually is the League, sees Japan penetrate farther and farther south into the British sphere of commercial influence in China, the League tightens its grip on Far Eastern affairs. Also, in 1936, we see a League attempting to halt an African war, a war which greatly threatens England's life line of Empire.

A review of the facts of the case will show even to greater extent the workings of a British league.

First, there is the matter of an oil embargo. When Great Britain realized last year the intense feeling of hatred upon the part of the Italian people because of the possibility of an embargo she immediately, and quite cannily, deflected this enmity upon the people of the United States by making it a question of whether America, unconcerned with League action, would or would not sell oil to Italy.

This embargo which, for peace is imperative to establish, has not been acted upon; and Great Britain, through the Anglo-Persian Oil Co. of Sir Henri Deterding, continues to supply 50 percent of Mussolini's needs in shipments to Italian Somaliland. Are industrial profits or peace the goal of the League? Is it not a pity to find a nation as great as Great Britain striving for both, when, if ever, they can be gained simultaneously?

Second, there is the Hoare-Laval peace pact of last year. It is to be noticed that even in this Britain considered her interests as the paramount issue.

In the division of Ethiopia under this plan of geographical distribution one finds Lake Tana, source of the Nile, very subtly left in Ethiopian possession. Why? Because the waters of Lake Tana which form the Nile have been used for years for irrigational and agricultural purposes in Egypt and the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, and have served as a source of hydroelectric power as well as a source of sweet water for those in the Suez.

Should Italy gain control of this body of water and divert the flow from its usual course for similar purposes in its colonization of Ethiopia the effects on British interests in Africa, needless to say, might prove disastrous.

Lastly, we come to the military alliance of Wednesday, January 22. Turkey, Greece, Czechoslovakia, France, and Great Britain have now banded together in a pledge of mutual cooperation in case of an attack upon any member by Italy. This is the result of sanctions, of League of Nations' actions, which will result in an alignment of powers forming a counteralliance, and this in war. Either the alliance must decay or war will eventuate. Surely any American student of League history should realize that our entrance into such an organization is not essential to the welfare of our people or those of Europe. The scope of possible belligerency would only be extended.

Of the second possibility afforded us for the maintenance of peace, namely, international law, what should be our answer?

Those who uphold international law, such as the eminent authority at Yale University, Prof. Edwin M. Borchard, say that we have come to think of international law more in the breach than in the observance. Dr. Borchard declares also that executive incompetence caused our entrance into the last war and that we never seriously attempted to uphold our rights as a neutral.

To the first argument youth of this generation would have, in my opinion, but one answer. That is that flagrant abuses of international law, because of the desperation of one whom it governs, incite many who are responsible for their neutrality upon strict adherence to law out of their position as a neutral into a position as a belligerent. The results of the breach are more detrimental to mankind than the results of the observance are beneficial. Also it does not seem logical to believe that a man driven to desperation is going to obey a law when, by obeying, he lessens his own chances for survival.

In the second argument, Dr. Borchard implies the necessity of executive competence to a righteous administration of international law. Realizing competence cannot be written into law, would it not be better to enact into law legislation which is not wholly responsible for its administration upon the discretion and competence of an executive? Would it not be better to have built the machine of peace before the need for its use arises when cold and sober fact and experience can be used as guides to its construction, instead of that time when human prejudice, bias, and "group" influence may form the basis of the opinion of the builder?

To prove more conclusively the improbability of the future success of international law should it be resumed by a neutral as its policy in trading with belligerents, it is necessary to review the history of our failure to maintain a real neutrality from 1914-17.

In my opinion, history will record the date of our entrance as that day when our foreign trade first reached belligerent shores.

From that day on we notice a decrease in our trade with the Central Powers, which brings our commercial relations with them to a negligible importance. We notice an allied paper blockade which stops 2,100 out of 2,400 American ships in the first year of the war. We then see our trade with the Allies growing by leaps and bounds and our Nation, by the vacillation of its national administration, subject itself to the dictums of Great Britain in order not to interfere with a prosperous trade, a trade which induced an inflationary economic life into America, bringing us from the debtor to the creditor class, a trade which, if interfered with, might cause a deflationary collapse in America and evict a national administration.

The Chief Executive at the time was a great man, yet a man given too much to an ideal, too little to practical experience. And because of this found himself, not by his own wish but by misfortune, a pawn in the hand of circumstance.

It is entirely fitting that youth should subject itself to a rigid, analytical, and unbiased history of that war; and youth today, unacquainted with the emotions and psychology of the war, is peculiarly fitted to such a task.

Trade, loans and credits, and war psychology—these, in my opinion, caused our entrance. These did not induce an Executive incompetence. These did, however, effect a policy of watchful waiting, a policy of drifting which brought us to the brink of war and then precipitated us into the crisis.

Trade brought us into conflict with the Germans and induced a moral unneutral feeling among our people. Trade brought us into disagreement with England, but we risked our trade in argument. Trade brought us prosperity, a prosperity we felt we could not lose. Loans and credits, the coordination of industrial agencies, allowed our trade to go on. War psychology, pro-Ally propaganda, and a realization of the source of profit brought us upon entrance in alignment with the Allies.

That trade and those loans and credits when endangered brought us into war, not because one man found it to his benefit, but because all America believed it to be her benefit.

André Tardieu, French statesman of the war period, is but one foreigner to realize, after war, the real cause of our entrance. He said:

"Profits had swollen tenfold; the Allies had become the sole customer of the United States. Loans the Allies had obtained from the New York banks swept the gold of Europe into American coffers. From that time on, whether desired or not, the victory of the Allies became essential to the United States."

This is what international law and desire to trade did for us in 1914-17. Some may say, "Yes; but President Wilson refused the use of pressure in order to bring England and Germany into a mutual revocation of their policies effecting United States trade", namely, the blockade and the submarine.

LXXX—294

This was realized by the President and considerable meditation over the possibility of a compromise was undoubtedly made. But was an interference in trade worth the possible disastrous effects on American economic life? For by this time America was much more dependent on foreign trade industrially, commercially, and agriculturally than in a period of normalcy when she is but dependent to 10 percent.

Will not another wartime President find his hands similarly bound? Will not America, should war again come, find her younger generation disgusted at the failure of a President to act with courage, perhaps losing temporary profits, but saving lives and future and greater profits?

Now, there remains but one answer—neutrality. Of neutrality we have two very different types, the discretionary and the mandatory.

Discretionary neutrality leaves to the President the power of execution. "May", instead of "shall", is the reading of the law.

Could such a policy possibly produce the desired results? It is to be doubted; for, if it were Executive incompetence which caused our entry into the last war, there is no reason to believe we might not enter future wars because of the same reason.

If it were the influence of commercial and industrial pressure groups, then the Chief Executive should be guarded against a possible recurrence of such pressure in wartime by a mandatory policy. If it were trade that brought us to war, then the administration should not be given permission to restrain or allow trade, but should—not might—be forced to restrain trade. Sanctionists will say such a policy will put to an end all hopes of American cooperation with the League or similar international organizations supposedly desirous of gaining peace.

This argument is to be refuted; for, although we as a nation are not defining aggression, we are, by restraining trade with both belligerents, acting in cooperation with international government. They trade with one belligerent. We trade with neither belligerent.

Our opponents will say, "But why not trade when we can?" Should we enter into a business contract, if by entering that contract we endanger our neutrality, our economic status quo, and our national psychology, because of a moral sympathy in a financial interest?

If loans and credits caused our entrance into the war, is not a policy which is mandatory upon the President better than one which might enable "interests" to cause, through him, an indiscretion? If the submarine caused our entrance, is not a policy which commands the President to advise citizens that their trade and lives are within their own hands in time of war a better one than that policy which permits the President to advise, which, also, permits argument with belligerents on any interference with trade and permits moral unneutrality and war psychology in case of loss of life?

Some may say that America refuses to protect the trade and lives of its citizens in time of foreign conflict by such a policy.

Perhaps America is beginning to realize that going to war to save $5,000,000,000 in war profits cost in bonuses, pensions, aid and care for the suffering, the disabled, and the dead (to say nothing of the economic consequences of war and war itself), $100,000,000,000.

Should we not realize then, also, that in the past we have through thoughts psychologically stimulated to a high belief in honor gone to war defending the lives of a few Americans by the deaths of thousands of others? Man cannot regulate national psychologies by legislation, but man can attempt to rid the Nation of the stimuli of such psychologies.

So we come to the mandatory policy of neutrality.

Its opponents say that such a drastic policy containing provisions for equally drastic embargoes will disrupt the economic life of the Nation just as it did in 1807, and that it will end just as did that policy in 1812.

Any thorough student of history will realize that the Hartford convention represented the thought of New England and in the infant-industry period of economic existence—New England largely dependent upon shipbuilding and foreign trade. America has progressed greatly since that era in her history until today only 10 percent of her economic life is dependent on foreign trade, and her infant-industry period in all lines of economic existence is gradually giving way to a stabilized, highly industrialized economic society, a society much better equipped to withstand the shocks that others have been unable to weather.

Even more materialistic persons have said, "Perhaps what we need is another war." If lives do not mean anything to them perhaps their realization will. Wartime profits will be more than lost in that economically disastrous period that follows every war known to our generation as a depression.

W. P. A. WORKERS IN THE FLOOD DISTRICTS OF PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD for the information of my colleague the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] two newspaper clippings from the Pittsburgh Press of Sunday, March 29, 1936—one entitled "W. P. A. Workers Unsung Heroes of Big Flood" and the other being an excerpt from an article headed "City's Vital Agencies Win Praise for Activities During Flood Crisis", by Kermit McFarland, dealing with the same subject. If my colleague needs additional information, I might suggest that he interview any one of the Moose lodges in Pennsylvania, or go to his home town of Sharon, where he can get more information concerning the heroic work done by the men working for the W. P. A.

There being no objection, the newspaper articles were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[From the Pittsburgh (Pa.) Press of Mar. 29, 1936]

W. P. A. WORKERS UNSUNG HEROES OF BIG FLOOD—30,000 MEN, 1,000 TRUCKS HELP CITY TO "DIG OUT"

Individual acts of heroism and long hours of labor without rest fell to the lot of Works Progress Administration men throughout Allegheny County during its most disastrous flood, it was revealed yesterday when James E. Kesner, district director for W. P. A., summarized the work of his organization.

The report showed 30,000 men and 1,000 motor trucks were thrown into the job of "digging out" and rehabilitating the county's stricken areas.

"Hours before the crest of the flood was reached," Director Kesner reported, "W. P. A. men in rowboats were assisting in the rescue of persons marooned on the upper floors of their homes and buildings by the rapidly rising waters."

HEROISM COMMON

"Acts of dramatic heroism were common, men risking their lives time and again to carry children and aged persons to safety."

"Thousands of W. P. A. men worked continuously for 16 to 20 hours, refusing rest when additional crews could not get into the districts to relieve them."

One of the more spectacular rescues was in downtown Pittsburgh, but names of individual members of that crew were lost in the rush of work and excitement of the emergency.

The crew built a makeshift raft in Fifth Avenue near Smithfield Street. Attaching 1,000 feet of rope to the improvised craft, the men pulled it by truck to the lower end of the triangle, where refugees were taken aboard and pulled to safety. More than 1,000 lifeguards, assisted by the W. P. A. workers, carried on this work until all those marooned by high water had been removed.

All regular W. P. A. project work was stopped when the flood first came up and W. P. A. employees were either put to work at once or held in readiness to leave for stricken areas at a moment's notice.

WORK LONG HOURS

Radio calls were broadcast by Director Kesner as conditions became critical, and within a half hour crews were organized and dispatched by truck and train. Men living in sections first hit by flood were directed to organize themselves into rescue squads and assist borough and township officials.

The administrative force of the Works Division of W. P. A. in the old post-office building remained on the job 48 hours without relief. These men, in charge of Donald Moore, superintendent of operations, and C. R. McKinney, supervising engineer, were responsible for organizing and directing the various units.

When telephone service was suspended, this crew of men re-established its headquarters in the Telephone Building, Seventh Avenue.

Director Kesner announced yesterday there will be no cessation of activity by W. P. A. as long as there is work to be done. He said he intends to keep his men on the job wherever needed.

[From Pittsburgh (Pa.) Press of Mar. 29, 1936]

(Excerpt from article by Kermit McFarland)

The Works Progress Administration here—maligned by critics, cursed even by its friends, weighted down with red tape—literally leaped to the aid of every agency greedy for its services and proved beyond doubt that, given a free hand, it can function efficiently, economically, and effectively. Waiving formality, the local administrators had 48,000 men at work in jig time.

STOCKYARDS AND MEAT PACKING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1424) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] to the pending bill.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH obtained the floor.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President—

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] desires to ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill. I do not know whether that is in accord with the wishes of the Senator from Washington, who has the floor.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. With the understanding that the legislative appropriation bill will take but a very short time, and that at the conclusion of its consideration I will again be recognized, I will yield to the Senator from Maryland for the purpose indicated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The parliamentary situation is that the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] gave notice last week that he desired to address the Senate today. As the Chair understands, the Senator from Washington is perfectly willing that the unfinished business shall be laid aside temporarily and to yield the floor for the time being so that the legislative appropriation bill may be considered. The Senator from Washington will be recognized at the conclusion of the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, of course, there can be no limit placed on the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill, but the Senator from Washington can take the floor at any time during the consideration of that bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Maryland is about to request consideration of the legislative appropriation bill. I inquire if the bill has been reported and if notice has been given by publication of the report?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. Are there many amendments to the bill?

Mr. TYDINGS. There are only very few amendments, to which I think there will be no objection.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11691, being the legislative appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11691) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will state the first amendment reported by the committee.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Senate—Office of the Secretary", on page 2, line 17, after the word "clerk", to strike out "$4,200" and insert "$4,500", so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Capitol Police", on page 23, line 11, after the word "captain", to strike out "$2,460" and insert "$2,700", and in line 16, after the words "in all", to strike out "$144,440" and insert "$100,680", so as to read:

Salaries: Captain, $2,700; 3 lieutenants, at $1,740 each; 2 special officers, at $1,740 each; 3 sergeants, at $1,680 each; 52 privates, at $1,620 each; one-half of said privates to be selected by the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and one-half by the Sergeant at Arms of the House; in all, $100,680.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Capitol Buildings and Grounds", on page 26, line 24, after the figures "$120,963", to insert a comma and "of which $25,000 shall be immediately available", so as to read:

Capitol Grounds: For care and improvement of grounds surrounding the Capitol, Senate and House Office Buildings; Capitol power plant; personal and other services; care of trees; planting; fertilizers; repairs to pavements, walks, and roadways; purchase of waterproof wearing apparel; maintenance of signal lights; and for snow removal by hire of men and equipment or under contract without compliance with sections 3709 (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5) and 3744 (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 16) of the Revised Statutes, $120,963, of which $25,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Library of Congress—Legislative reference service", on page 32, at the end of line 15, to strike out "$92,990" and insert "$77,990", so as to read:

To enable the Librarian of Congress to employ competent persons to gather, classify, and make available, in translations, indexes, digests, compilations, and bulletins, and otherwise, data for or bearing upon legislation, and to render such data serviceable to Congress and committees and Members thereof, including not to exceed $5,700 for employees engaged on piece work and work by the day or hour at rates to be fixed by the Librarian, $77,990.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Increase of the Library", on page 35, at the end of line 6, to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$7,000", so as to read:

For the purchase of books and periodicals for the Supreme Court, to be a part of the Library of Congress, and purchased by the Marshal of the Supreme Court, under the direction of the Chief Justice, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it seems to me worthy of note that in the legislative general appropriation bill there is only a total net increase in the amount carried in the bill as it passed the House of $4,860. There are some increases in excess of that amount over the amounts approved by the House, but the net result is an increase of only $4,860.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, during the short time I have been a Member of this body I have attempted religiously to give observance to the rule relating to the limitation upon discussion by new Members of the Senate. With the exception of a few questions, or explanations of bills which I have reported from committees, and one instance during the month of January of this year, I have not taken any time of the Senate in discussing any of the matters or affairs before the Senate.

However, last July I was honored by the Senate, through the Vice President as its presiding officer, with appointment upon a committee for the purpose of the investigation of lobbying. During the past 6 weeks this committee has been subjected to very severe and very persistent criticism upon the part of the opposition to the administration, and particularly upon the part of the press of the Nation. I believe it is desirable that some of those charges be considered and fully discussed.

Without in any way deprecating the other individuals and organizations which have attacked the committee, I want to limit my remarks to those attacks which have been made by two. I refer, first, to Mr. Jouett Shouse, of the American Liberty League, and, second, Mr. William Randolph Hearst.

I am not going to waste very much time discussing the radio remarks of Mr. Jouett Shouse. I have two reasons for this. In the first place, the committee has been afforded, by the Columbia Broadcasting Co., an opportunity upon next Thursday evening to reply to Mr. Shouse's latest speech, and, in the second place, I do not believe anyone pays very particular attention to what Mr. Shouse may say. I think the time of the Senate should not be taken needlessly in considering his remarks.

However, I do want to say for Mr. Shouse that he is improving. In his first radio broadcast on March 6, addressing the people of the Nation on behalf of the American Liberty League, Mr. Shouse made this statement:

Let us see just what has happened in the city of Washington, the Capital of our Nation. Every telegram sent by any citizen of the United States to anyone in Washington between February 1 and December 1, 1935, has been subject to examination by employees of the Federal Communications Commission or the Black committee. Every telegram sent out of Washington during those 10 months has been subject to such examination.

Checking up the figures with the telegraph company, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], chairman of our committee, reported to the Senate that the number of telegrams coming into and going out of the city of Washington, to which Mr. Shouse made reference in his speech of March 6, amounted to 14,000,000.

In his speech of last Friday evening, Mr. Shouse has revised the figures and now says that more than 22,000 telegrams sent from or received at the Washington offices between February 1 and December 1, 1935, were copied and turned over to the Black committee. In other words, he has revised the figures from 14,000,000 down to 22,000. We must give credit to Mr. Shouse for his recognition that his first statement was in error to the extent of just 13,978,000 telegrams. If there is anyone in the Senate with ability along mathematical lines, he might estimate the percentage of error in Mr. Shouse's first national broadcast.

But I do not care, Mr. President, thus lightly to dispose of the charges which have been made against this committee. It is my desire, briefly, concisely, and with language so clear that no one can misunderstand it to make a statement in reference to the activities of the committee.

The committee consists of five members, four of whom are lawyers. We believe that we at least have a speaking acquaintance with the Constitution of the United States. We know that every member of our committee has as great love and respect for the Constitution of the United States as any newspaper editor or any member of the opposition who may, because of the fact that he desires to prevent the disclosure of facts such as have been uncovered by the committee, attempt to attack the committee upon the ground that the committee is abusing constitutional rights and privileges.

The committee in its every activity has assiduously attempted to protect the constitutional rights of everyone connected with the investigation. In the subpoenas which we have issued, contrary to the statement or the inference or the innuendo contained in a speech upon the floor of the Senate a few weeks ago, we have followed religiously the forms which have been laid down for us and used by prominent Members of the Senate in the years gone by. The forms we used were used by and approved by such men as Thomas J. Walsh, of Montana, a constitutional lawyer of recognized ability; such men as the conservative Reed Smoot, of Utah; such men as the able James A. Reed, of Missouri. Certainly no one can contend that those three gentlemen or any one of them were crazy radicals such as the papers are inclined to call those of us on the Black investigating committee today. We have followed definitely and religiously the forms which were approved and were used by those Members of this body in the past years.

Further, no telegram sent into or out of Washington by any person, association, or corporation not engaged in lobbying activity was at any time examined by the committee or any member of the committee or any of its agents or employees.

Further, we did not at any time, no matter what any Member of this body may attempt to insinuate or infer, make use of the Federal Communications Commission in an effort to secure information. The telegrams which we secured were secured as a result of the power and authority of the Senate under our own subpoena.

One charge only which has been made against us are we willing to confess. That was the charge delineated here last Friday by the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER], to the effect that we had made a misuse of subpoenas because we had used subpoenas duces tecum, and that a subpoena duces tecum means "to bring with you"; that in certain instances, instead of the telegraph company bringing the telegrams to us, we sent our representatives to the telegraph companies and they brought the telegrams. That technical charge which the junior Senator from Oregon made was correct. If he wants to protect and defend the interests of the country which attempt to taint the legislation of the country by relying upon a technicality of that kind, he may get what comfort he can out of such a technical objection.

Mr. President, I wish now to refer to Mr. William Randolph Hearst. William Randolph Hearst, who has been condemned and criticized by the newspaper fraternity of this country since 1895, when he first appeared in the city of New York, and took over the New York Journal, has today become the plumed knight leader of the newspaper fraternity of the country.

A couple of weeks ago he commenced a suit against your committee. The Washington Times for March 14 sets out the allegations in that suit:

Charging conspiracy against the Black committee and the Federal Communications Commission, William Randolph Hearst yesterday petitioned District Supreme Court to compel them to return private telegrams seized in their wholesale foray.

The publisher, through Attorney Elisha Hanson, asked the court to order the five Senate investigators and the seven Commissioners to appear and answer his charges that their seizure of private correspondence violates constitutional rights.

Jerome D. Barnum, president of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, filed an affidavit in support of the Hearst suit.

The American Newspaper Publishers' Association by resolution condemned the Black committee and the Commission and pledged assistance of its 438 newspapers, representing more than 80 percent of national newspaper circulation, to its members so attacked in the "unwarranted attempt to abridge the constitutional guarantee of a free press."

I say Mr. Hearst, after all the vilification and abuse to which he has been subjected by his fellow newspapermen of this country, has at last reached the position of leadership and is today the plumed knight leading the American newspaper fraternity in the protection of their constitutional rights. He comes down here through the medium of his attorney, a Mr. Elisha Hanson, who parades himself before the public in Washington as being an authority upon constitutional law. Anybody with any information about legal conditions in the city of Washington or about newspaper conditions knows that Elisha Hanson is today, and always has been, just a "stooge" for William Randolph Hearst and the rest of the newspaper fraternity of this country who believe that newspapers should be run upon the basis and theory of a sweatshop.

They make two contentions against us: First, that we have violated the fourth amendment to the Constitution, that we have invaded the private rights of the citizens by seizing private papers; second, that we have violated the first amendment of the Constitution and are threatening the freedom of the press.

Mr. President, when I am considering charges which are made, when I am considering high-sounding phrases put forth by any individual, I always feel that there is only one way by which we may judge or evaluate the sincerity of that individual in the charges he makes. Mr. Hearst contends that it is wrong for the Senate to subpoena telegrams from the telegraph company. He contends that it invades the constitutional rights and privileges of our citizens. I think, therefore, it is pertinent at this time to go back through the record of Mr. Hearst and see what has been his attitude through the years on the question of stealing papers, of securing papers by bribery, of securing papers by intimidation, of securing papers by forgery, if you please, Mr. President.

Before that, however, I desire to pay tribute to Mr. Hearst along one line—that is, his ability as a money maker. I do not believe there is any man in the country today who has exhibited any greater ability in the acquisition of wealth and fortune than Mr. William Randolph Hearst. It is true that as a young man he inherited a fortune from his father; but he has many times multiplied that fortune, and I think it is only proper that we should pay tribute to his ability along that line.

I have before me a copy of the magazine Fortune for October 1935, and I refer only briefly to it.

According to this magazine—and it has not been denied—Hearst means $220,000,000: 28 newspapers, 13 magazines, 8 radio stations, 2 cinema companies, $41,000,000 worth of New York real estate, 14,000 shares of Homestake, and 2,000,000 acres of land—cattle, chicle, and forest. That is the fortune of William Randolph Hearst, the fortune of the man who is today attempting to speak on behalf of the common people of this country.

You know, Mr. Hearst for years lived in the balmy climate of southern California. He may have been attracted by the climate; he may have been attracted by its proximity to the great movie colony at Hollywood; I do not know which. But, at any rate, he had thousands upon thousands of acres, a front which occupied miles upon miles of the Pacific coast; and there, in the balmy climate of southern California, he operated and directed the campaign for amassing and further amassing this fortune. A few years ago, however, he tired of San Simeon, as he has a way of tiring of anything in his life that is most intimate and should be most sacred. He tired of San Simeon, and he decided that he would build for himself a new place up in northern California. So he went up north of Oakland to a place called Wyntoon, and there he has built for himself a Bavarian village, a marvelous Bavarian castle; and there he and his friends gather and loll in luxury, while the men who work for him are working under wage and other conditions which are a disgrace to the newspaper profession of the country.

While Mr. Hearst was spending $15,000,000 to build this Bavarian castle at Wyntoon, while he was getting $500,000 a year in salary, while he was boasting of the fact that never at any time during the depression had he failed to pay dividends to himself and his other stockholders, he was putting into effect three separate and distinct reductions of 10 percent each in the salaries of his employees.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Is it not also true that Mr. Hearst maintains in his organization what the boys in his employ know as a "butcher" who circulates around among his employees, firing men instantaneously? And did not the "butcher" come to Washington recently, and just instantaneously fire about 15 men off the Times and Herald?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes; and at any time any one of his employees or any group of his employees attempt to protest against that sort of action, or attempt to organize under any law that may have been passed, Mr. Hearst and his "stooge", Elisha Hanson, rushed behind the Constitution, and used the Constitution and the freedom of the press to protect them in their right to reduce wages and to reduce the forces of the various Hearst papers.

A survey made a few years ago by the Washington Newspaper Guild showed that the Hearst papers paid the lowest scale to their editorial staffs and to their mechanical staffs of any newspapers in the country; and despite the fact that there were three 10-percent cuts while Mr. Hearst was building his $15,000,000 Bavarian castle at Wyntoon, so that his and his Hollywood movie stars might enjoy themselves. Up in the press gallery now are men who at this minute are writing articles for Mr. Hearst and sending them out over the wire. Those articles will be critical of this committee. Those articles will be critical of the argument I am presenting. These men have to write critical articles. They are forced by the whip of economic necessity to work for Mr. Hearst. They have families which must be fed; yet they know in their inner hearts that there is not any man in the country today more despised by the people who work for him than William Randolph Hearst.

Mr. President, in view of the fact that these remarks involve a rather lengthy discussion of Mr. Hearst's career, there may be some who feel that I am going back too far into history. I wish to open my remarks by reading a brief paragraph from Oswald Garrison Villard in a book entitled "Some Newspapers and Newspapermen":

Undoubtedly it is the shortness of the American public's memory that is Hearst's best ally. People simply do not remember. Every journalist knows that; every journalist knows that he must begin a "story" of past events with a recital of facts which every thoughtful person ought to recall. Who remembers today the wicked and dastardly part which Hearst played in bringing on the War with Spain? Who remembers his strident appeals then to the basest of passions? Who remembers the bitter outcry against him? Only a few; and it is a question, not of years but of months, before even the members of our university clubs will have only a vague idea as to what Hearst did or did not do during the World War. Time is thus the chief ally of Hearst and of his type of journalist. But even time cannot wholly efface certain facts. Hearst the man has recently been called "one of the most melancholy figures of our time." He has done more to degrade the entire American press than anyone else in its history—more than Pulitzer and both the Bennetts combined. He has achieved enormous material success—it is said that his net profit in 1922 amounted to $12,000,000—but he is without popular respect or regard. He is a man dreaded and feared, much sought after by a type of politician, but he has never been personally beloved, never even by those deluded fellow citizens of his who at times made the welkin ring with their cheers for him during campaigns which have almost invariably resulted in his defeat. A man of mystery, he will never be anything else than anathema to great masses of citizens. If at times he is the champion of the poor and oppressed, he has no personal following of the kind that worshipped Roosevelt. Millions will read him, but following him is a different matter.

Men have not stuck to Hearst in great numbers and with enthusiasm always at white heat, because of just doubts as to his sincerity and intellectual honesty. Let it be set down at once that Hearst is as unstable as the winds; like them he can blow hot in Chicago and cold in Atlanta or Boston at the same time. Thus when his newspapers published an appeal to the Governor of Georgia that the life of the unfortunate Frank be spared, it was carefully omitted from Hearst's Atlanta newspaper, where its publication would have made him unpopular. So it constantly happens that his newspapers advocate different policies in different cities. Similar examples of this yielding to expediency, of this moral and political instability, could be multiplied indefinitely.

Mr. President, that is the statement of Mr. Villard in reference to Mr. Hearst, and it is because of the statement of the necessity for reminding people as a result of the shortness of memory that I am going back into the history of Mr. Hearst's newspaper exploits over quite a period of years.

In view of the fact, however, that the newspaper fraternity as a whole has joined with Mr. Hearst in this attack upon the committee, I am going to start with an incident which occurred during the World War.

As Senators know, Mr. Hearst owns and controls the International News Service. During the war, because of the use of the customary "Hearstian" practices in the handling of news out of the nations of Europe, prior to our entry into the war, first England, then France, then Canada, and then several others of the allied countries, denied to Mr. Hearst and the International News Service the use of the wires out of those countries. It appeared at that time that the International News Service had suffered an almost fatal blow, it being impossible for it to secure war news for the users of its service in the United States. Yet, mysteriously the International News Service was able to continue day by day providing the news of war conditions to the people of the United States through the International News Service. It was a mystery that could not be understood, and, finally, the Associated Press took upon itself the task of making an investigation.

The Associated Press attempted, by a process of elimination, to discover from what source this news was coming. They were convinced that some representative of the Associated Press was giving out news to the Hearst service immediately it was received by the Associated Press in this country. Finally, by a process of elimination, they reached a certain telegraph editor in the city of Cleveland, and they decided to test out their fears. So there was given to this telegraph editor in the normal way through the Associated Press wires a story about a battle which had occurred upon the eastern front in which the Russian Army had received a crushing blow. The battle never occurred; there was no such battle; and the Russian Army did not receive the blow. But the Russian general, General "Nelotsky", was killed in this battle. Lo and behold, immediately the story was put through the Cleveland telegraph office, the International News Service throughout the country commenced to print the story of this battle, of the death of General "Nelotsky", and of the fact that the Russians had received this crushing blow.

Then the Associated Press knew the facts, and they started a suit against the International News Service, and the suit was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. The contention upon the part of the Associated Press that Mr. Hearst and his International News Service had secured this news through the medium of bribing an employee of the Associated Press was established. If anyone has any doubt about it, he can read the opinion of the Supreme Court. The title of the case is The International News Service v. The Associated Press (248 U. S. 215).

I do not need to characterize the method by which this news was secured by Mr. Hearst. The Associated Press characterized it. The name of the general was "Nelotsky." Just stop and think of that a moment. It needs the "ky" on the end to make it a Russian name, but the first part of it is the word "stolen" with the letters reversed.

The securing of news by larceny and bribery was the charge which the Associated Press made and sustained against William Randolph Hearst, this man who talks about the sacredness of the press and the sacredness of telegraph wires.

He bribed a telegraph operator and stole the news. And let it be said to the eternal disgrace of the American newspaper profession that the Associated Press did not have the courage to remove Mr. Hearst from membership in that organization.

Mr. President, that occurred during war times, and I think it might well be to think a little about Mr. Hearst's attitude. He is a patriot! Just a few days ago there was disclosed in the House of Representatives a telegram under the terms of which the editor of Hearst's Washington paper was directed to declare that a Member of the other body, an honored Member, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of that body, a man who had twice offered his life in defense of his country, was a traitor to the country. When we made the telegram public, Mr. Hearst and Elisha Hanson raised their hands in holy horror and said that was terrible.

Let us see a little more about Mr. Hearst's papers and their attitude during the World War. On February 25, 1917, a telegram was sent by Mr. Hearst to Mr. S. S. Carvalho, the editor of the New York American. Senators will remember the conditions existing in the spring of 1917. They will remember the severance of diplomatic relations with Germany. They remember the attitude of mind of the American people, and the absolute necessity, if we were to attempt to avoid entrance into that war, that nothing be done to disturb that attitude of mind.

What did Mr. Hearst, the great patriot, do? He sent this telegram to his New York editor:

Please keep standing in American across top of the editorial page the verses of The Star-Spangled Banner as originally written. Please keep standing in evening paper the verses printed in American, reproduced from Harper's Weekly during the Civil War, and referring to shipment of arms by England to South America.

(Signed) HEARST.

That was a very patriotic thing to do, at a time, mind you, when everybody recognized the necessity of maintaining the stability of mind of the American people!

Let us see the real motive behind that telegram. On March 3 he sent another telegram to the same paper:

If situation quiets down please remove color flags from first page and little flags from inside pages, reserving these for special occasions of a warlike or patriotic kind. I think they have been good for this week, giving us a very American character and probably helping to sell papers, but to continue effective they should be reserved for occasions.

(Signed) HEARST.

"They probably have helped to sell papers." This man, with his innate greed and selfishness, with his absolute lack of any regard for the American people, was doing anything "to sell papers", realizing, as he must have realized, that if we got into that war thousands of Americans would go overseas and participate in the war, and all that would remain for their fathers and mothers would be a memory of a white cross upon the poppy covered fields of France; realizing, worse than that, that these men might come back and be in the condition in which have seen them in dozens of American veterans hospitals, their lungs destroyed by gas, coughing, bleeding, gradually disintegrating unto death; or even worse than that, as I have seen them in a number of American psychiatric hospitals, I remember one boy who at regular intervals would take a dive under the bed, because of the fact that the barrage was about to start. That is what William Randolph Hearst was playing with when he put those American flags upon the pages of the New York American.

What did he do? He calmly and blandly said, "It probably helps sell papers." That is the patriot who has the temerity to attack, through his editorial columns, that distinguished and honored patriot, the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, let us go back to the Spanish-American War and consider the matter of patriotism and the matter of using wars for the purpose of selling newspapers. As I indicated a little while ago, when Mr. Hearst's father died he left his son a considerable fortune, and his first newspaper venture was in San Francisco in the form of the San Francisco Examiner. He was very successful with that, and he wanted new fields to conquer, so about 1895 he came back to New York City and picked up a small paper there, which had been very unsuccessful, a paper known as the New York Journal. The name of that paper was later changed to the New York American, and in the discussions about it the names are sometimes used interchangeably.

Mr. Hearst participated in the campaign of 1896 without very much success. Then there came the necessity for making a financial success of the New York Journal or the New York American. I do not ask Senators to take my word for it, but I desire to read just briefly from a story written by the man who at that time was the editor in chief of the New York Journal, in Mr. Hearst's employ.

His name is Willis J. Abbot. He later became the editor of the Christian Science Monitor, and, I believe, is now a member of the editorial staff of the Christian Science Monitor. He wrote a book entitled "Watching the World Go By", and in it he told about Mr. Hearst's activity immediately prior to the Spanish-American War, which deals directly upon this question of sacredness and sanctity of papers, the sacredness and sanctity of telegrams, and the sacredness and sanctity of documents.

On page 213 of this book by Mr. Abbot we find the following language:

"Cuba Libre!" ("Free Cuba!") became the password in the American offices, and our editorial rooms were haunted by dark, undersized men who spoke in whispers and revealed to the very cub reporters secrets which should have made thrones topple. * * * Much of the information which those gentlemen thrust upon us was too easily disproved by the friends of peace, so Hearst sent his own men down to the island to ferret out more convincing evidence of Spanish brutality—and if necessary, to manufacture it. The most distinguished pair thus employed were Richard Harding Davis, novelist, and Frederick Remington, famous as an artist drawing pictures of frontier life. Very zealous indeed were these gentlemen. As a fruit of their observations and collaboration, there appeared in the Journal a three-column drawing by Mr. Remington showing a Cuban girl in a steamer state-room, stripped to the skin, while three brutal and lascivious Spaniards were searching her garments for treasonable documents. The vessel was the American ship Olivette and the Journal cried, "Does our flag protect women?" A resolution of inquiry was straightway introduced into Congress, and the fires of chivalric American manhood had begun to crackle, when the unspeakable World produced the young lady herself, who declared in horror that nothing of the sort had ever happened. She and another young Cuban senorita suspect had indeed been searched, but by a discreet matron in a private cabin, while the officers remained outside. The correspondents hastily produced their alibis. Mr. Davis pointed out that his copy nowhere charged that the search was conducted by men. Mr. Remington averred as the story did not say that women were the officials, he was entitled to suppose that men were involved. It was characteristic of the Hearst methods that no one suffered for what in most papers would have been an unforgivable offense, and I never heard the owner of the paper, in public or in private, express the slightest regret for the scandalous "fake."

I shall read of another incident described by Mr. Abbot:

One incident that disturbed the harmony of our editorial rooms for as much as 48 hours was the publication of a photograph showing, according to its caption, Spanish soldiers driving Cuban patriots into the sea, at the point of the bayonet, to be wretchedly drowned. It was very convincing. The camera, we all knew, could not lie, and a most illuminating editorial on the callous indifference of Spaniards to human life accompanied the picture. All went well for a day or two, when a loathsome contemporary appeared with the same photograph, showing it to have been a picture of a bathing beach in Cuba. The callous Spanish soldiery had been pasted in. Did the responsible editor suffer? Not at all. His whole life has been spent in high places in the Hearst service.

Proceeding, Mr. President, with the quotation from Mr. Abbot, who was, as I reminded the Senate, the editor in chief of the Hearst newspaper at that time:

"Hearst was accustomed to refer to the war, in company with his staff, as 'our war', and his famous cable to Remington, when the artist wearied of life in Cuba and pleaded for recall on the ground that there would be no war, emphasized this sense of personal proprietorship.

"You furnish the pictures; I'll furnish the war" (William Randolph Hearst), cabled the editor, and speedily made good on that promise.

How did he make good? On February 9, 1898, there appeared the following in the New York Journal:

THE WORST INSULT TO THE UNITED STATES IN ITS HISTORY—SPAIN'S MINISTER CALLS PRESIDENT MCKINLEY A "LOW POLITICIAN, CATERING TO THE RABBLE"

Monstrous language used by Dupuy De Lome in a letter to Senor Canalejas, wherein he denounces everything American and exposes the fact that Spain's commercial negotiations are only a blind for effect.

What happened then? Let me refer again to Mr. Abbot:

Early in 1898 the value to the Journal of the crowd of Cuban conspirators who hung about its office was made evident. I was called one night to the office of Sam Chamberlain, the managing editor, who handed me a letter in Spanish with its translation, while the little Cuban insurrecto, Palma, stood by smiling with the air of one who had won a victory. The letter turned out to be a personal one from the Spanish Minister, Dupuy de Lome, to a friend in Cuba. It had been stolen, of course, from the Habana post office by a sympathizer with the revolution—

This is the same William Randolph Hearst who talked about the sacredness of telegrams and of documents—

It had been stolen, of course, from the Habana post office by a sympathizer with the revolution. Compunctions concerning the manner in which it was obtained did not, however, trouble the Hearstian mind. Anyone could see that it made De Lome's continuance at Washington impossible and added another count to the indictment rolling up against Spain.

Within a week after that time, with the destruction of the Maine, we were headed to war, which, as Mr. Abbot said, Mr. Hearst always referred to as "our war." "You furnish the pictures, I'll furnish the war!" And he proceeds to use as the incident a document which had been stolen from the mail in a post office. The sacrosanct, pious individual who now would castigate the Senate because it attempts to use subpoenas to get telegrams did not hesitate to use a letter stolen from a Cuban post office.

But what was the result? The result was perfect. By February 24 the circulation of the New York Sunday Journal had gone up to 200,000. By the same date the circulation of the Evening Journal had increased to 519,032; and by May 2, 1898, the day of Dewey's victory at Manila, the circulation of the New York Journal, as the result of the operation of its war which it incited and which Mr. Hearst called his war—the circulation of the Journal had increased to 1,600,000.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I should like to ask the Senator a question. As I recall, volunteers were called for in that war. May I ask the Senator whether or not the newspapers show that Mr. Hearst volunteered to fight in his war, or did he leave the fighting to be done by other people?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The only participation that Mr. Hearst personally took in the war was of a newspaper nature in an effort to gain scoops upon other newspapers in the city of New York. Mr. Hearst did not volunteer. He never has participated in any military activity. His position is that of using military activities in order that he may increase the circulation of the newspapers in which he has his money invested. What difference did it make to Mr. Hearst if as the result of that war hundreds and thousands of young men were sent down into the tropical country and returned sick and disabled, and even today are suffering as the result of tropical diseases acquired at that time? What difference did it make to him? The circulation of the New York Journal increased to 1,600,000.

Then at the conclusion of the war another Hearstian method of getting news appeared. On the 1st of January 1899 there appeared in the New York Journal the first publication of the Paris protocols and peace treaties. Prior to the time they had been made public, prior to the time the Senate of the United States had any opportunity to know what was in them, prior to the time that even the President of the United States had an opportunity to know what was in them, a representative of William Randolph Hearst went into the offices where the protocols were being prepared, stole them, and sent them to Mr. Hearst, and this man who believes in the sanctity of correspondence and of documents printed them despite the fact that by printing them he might make it impossible for a treaty to be effectually negotiated.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. In France, however, they did not have a constitution containing a fourth amendment which protected persons against unreasonable search and seizure.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I think the Senator's observation is quite pertinent.

It is a peculiar thing, Mr. President, that the leader of the movement in this country today toward fascism, the man who when he returned after a visit with Mr. Hitler in Germany editorially praised Mr. Hitler, the man who more than anybody else is advocating fascism in this country—and under fascism Senators know what remains of personal liberty or freedom of the press—this man is the same William Randolph Hearst who today is so ardent in his protection of the rights of the people under the Constitution.

(At this point the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, resumed its session, and Mr. SCHWELLENBACH yielded the floor for the day.)

IMPEACHMENT OF HALSTED L. RITTER

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, to which yesterday the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, took a recess, the Senate, sitting as a Court, is now in session for the trial of the articles of impeachment against Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida.

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives were announced by the secretary to the majority, and they were conducted to the seats assigned them.

The respondent, Halsted L. Ritter, accompanied by his counsel, Frank P. Walsh, Esq., and Carl T. Hoffman, Esq., entered the Chamber and took the seats assigned them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will make proclamation.

The Deputy Sergeant at Arms made the usual proclamation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will inquire if there are any Senators present who have not taken the oath as members of the Court?

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Barkley	Borah	Byrd
Ashurst	Benson	Brown	Byrnes
Austin	Bilbo	Bulkeley	Capper
Bachman	Black	Bulow	Caraway
Barbour	Bone	Burke	Carey

Chavez	Hale	McNary	Sheppard
Clark	Harrison	Maloney	Shipstead
Connally	Hatch	Metcalf	Smith
Coolidge	Hayden	Minton	Steiwer
Copeland	Holt	Moore	Thomas, Utah
Couzens	Johnson	Murphy	Townsend
Davis	Keyes	Murray	Truman
Donahey	King	Norris	Vandenberg
Duffy	La Follette	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys
Fletcher	Lewis	Overton	Wagner
Frazier	Logan	Pittman	Walsh
George	Loneragan	Pope	Wheeler
Gibson	Long	Radclyffe	White
Glass	McGill	Robinson
Guffey	McKellar	Schwellenbach

Mr. LEWIS. I reannounce the absence of certain Senators for the reasons given on the previous roll call, and ask to have the announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The Chair will now administer the oath to any Senators present who have not taken the oath as members of the Court.

Mr. NYE rose, and the oath was administered to him by the Vice President.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings of the last session of the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, be considered as having been read and approved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

What is the pleasure of the Court?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, this is the appropriate time for the managers on the part of the House and counsel for the respondent to enter finally into an agreement, or for the Senate to make some order as to the pleadings.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the managers on the part of the House to present the amended pleadings.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, on behalf of the managers on the part of the House, I desire to present the amended pleadings, which have been authorized by the House. It has been suggested to the managers on the part of the House by some Members of the Senate that if the substance of the amendments could be stated, instead of having the amendments read, it would comport with the convenience of the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if there be no objection from any Senator and no objection from the managers on the part of the House, and no objection from counsel for the respondent, I ask unanimous consent that the managers on the part of the House be permitted to state the substance of their amendments, and that the amendments be printed for the use of the Senate as a Court, and also that the House be notified of the action taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire, in addition, to ask that the amended pleadings be printed in the Record for the benefit of Senators?

Mr. ASHURST. I make that request, and that, instead of being read, the amended pleadings be formally stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That was the procedure in the cases heretofore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. TYDINGS. Due to serious illness in the home of my mother, which will probably necessitate my absence during a portion of the trial, I ask unanimous consent to be excused from such attendance as may be necessary while I am away, and also from voting upon the evidence produced in this case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator is excused.

The Chair recognizes Mr. Manager SUMNERS.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, as counsel for the respondent have been supplied with copies of the amended pleadings, and as, under the order of the Senate, they are to be printed, I will make the statement just as brief as possible.

There are three new articles which, in the main, make up the amended pleadings.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been suggested to the Chair that he suggest to the manager on the part of the House, in order that he may be better understood, that while speaking he occupy a place at the desk.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS (speaking from the desk in front of the Vice President). Mr. President, two of the articles now presented, incorporated in the amended pleadings, have to do with income-tax matters; one of the provisions has to do with the practice of law.

There are certain alterations in two of the other articles, but I believe it is not necessary for me to indicate what they are, because they are perfectly obvious from an examination of the pleadings.

With this brief statement, Mr. President, unless it is desired that the managers on the part of the House make a more extended statement with regard to the amendments, I have concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the pleasure of the Court?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I inquire how long it would take to read the amendments to the pleadings?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. They are not very short.

Mr. ROBINSON. I fear that the amendments are not fully understood by those who have heard the statement that has been made. Perhaps the manager on the part of the House will elaborate his statement a little, so as to make clearer the nature of the changes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator ask that the pleadings may be read?

Mr. KING. I approve of their being read.

Mr. ROBINSON. I believe that the pleadings should be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the amendments to the articles of impeachment.

During the reading,

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, may I presume to make the statement, with the consent of the Senate, that the next article, which is very long, is identical with the original article, except that the new articles which have been read are referred to in article VII, and there is a change in tense. The next article is a very long one; and I thought possibly that statement might save the reading of that particular article.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACHMAN in the chair). What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in view of the statement made by the manager on the part of the House, I ask that the further reading of the amendments to the articles of impeachment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Have the honorable attorneys for the respondent any objection to that procedure?

Mr. HOFFMAN. They have no objection, Mr. President.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, then, the further reading will be dispensed with.

The amendments to the articles of impeachment are, in full, as follows:

AMENDMENTS TO ARTICLES OF IMPEACHMENT AGAINST HALSTED L. RITTER

(H. Res. 471, 74th Cong., 2d sess.)

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
March 30, 1936.

RESOLUTION

Resolved, That the articles of impeachment heretofore adopted by the House of Representatives in and by House Resolution 422, House Calendar No. 279, be, and they are hereby, amended as follows:

Article III is amended so as to read as follows:

"ARTICLE III

"That the said Halsted L. Ritter, having been nominated by the President of the United States, confirmed by the Senate of the United States, duly qualified and commissioned, and, while acting as a United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, was and is guilty of a high crime and misdemeanor in office in manner and form as follows, to wit:

"That the said Halsted L. Ritter, while such judge, was guilty of a violation of section 258 of the Judicial Code of the United States of America (U. S. C., Annotated, title 28, sec. 373) making it unlawful for any judge appointed under the authority of the United States to exercise the profession or employment of counsel or attorney, or to be engaged in the practice of the law, in that after the employment of the law firm of Ritter & Rankin (which, at the time of the appointment of Halsted L. Ritter to be judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, was composed of Halsted L. Ritter and A. L. Rankin) in the case of Trust Co. of Georgia and Robert G. Stephens, Trustee, v. Brazilian Court Building Corporation et al., no. 5704, in the circuit court of the fifteenth judicial circuit of Florida, and after the fee of $4,000 which had been agreed upon at the outset of said employment had been fully paid to the firm of Ritter & Rankin, and after Halsted L. Ritter had, on, to wit, February 15, 1929, become judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, Judge Ritter, on, to wit, March 11, 1929, wrote a letter to Charles A. Brodek, of counsel for Mulford Realty Corporation (the client which his former law firm had been representing in said litigation), stating that there had been much extra and unanticipated work in the case, that he was then a Federal judge; that his partner, A. L. Rankin, would carry through further proceedings in the case, but that he, Judge Ritter, would be consulted about the matter until the case was all closed up; and that 'this matter is one among very few which I am assuming to continue my interest in until finally closed up'; and stating specifically in said letter:

"I do not know whether any appeal will be taken in the case or not, but, if so, we hope to get Mr. Howard Paschal or some other person as receiver who will be amenable to our directions, and that the hotel can be operated at a profit, of course, pending the appeal. We shall demand a very heavy supersedeas bond, which I doubt whether D'Esterre can give; and further that he was, 'of course, primarily interested in getting some money in the case', and that he thought '$2,000 more by way of attorneys' fees should be allowed'; and asked that he be communicated with direct about the matter, giving his post-office box number. On, to wit, March 13, 1929, said Brodek replied favorably, and on March 30, 1929, a check of Brodek, Raphael & Eisner, a law firm of New York City, representing Mulford Realty Corporation, in which Charles A. Brodek, senior member of the firm of Brodek, Raphael & Eisner, was one of the directors, was drawn, payable to the order of 'Hon. Halsted L. Ritter' for $2,000 and which duly endorsed 'Hon. Halsted L. Ritter—H. L. Ritter', and was paid on, to wit, April 4, 1929, and the proceeds thereof were received and appropriated by Judge Ritter to his own individual use and benefit, without advising his said former partner that said $2,000 had been received, without consulting with his former partner thereabout, and without the knowledge or consent of his said former partner, appropriated the entire amount thus solicited and received to the use and benefit of himself, the said Judge Ritter.

"At the time said letter was written by Judge Ritter and said $2,000 received by him, Mulford Realty Corporation held and owned large interests in Florida real estate and citrus groves, and a large amount of securities of the Olympia Improvement Corporation, which was a company organized to develop and promote Olympia, Fla., said holdings being within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States district court of which Judge Ritter was a judge from, to wit, February 15, 1929.

"After writing said letter of March 11, 1929, Judge Ritter further exercised the profession or employment of counsel or attorney, or engaged in the practice of the law, with relation to said case.

"Which acts of said judge were calculated to bring his office into disrepute, constitute a violation of section 258 of the Judicial Code of the United States of America (U. S. C., Annotated, title 28, sec. 373), and constitute a high crime and misdemeanor within the meaning and intent of section 4 of article II of the Constitution of the United States.

"Wherefore the said Judge Halsted L. Ritter was and is guilty of a high misdemeanor in office."

By adding the following articles immediately after article III, as amended:

"ARTICLE IV

"That the said Halsted L. Ritter, having been nominated by the President of the United States, confirmed by the Senate of the United States, duly qualified and commissioned, and, while acting as a United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, was and is guilty of a high crime and misdemeanor in office in manner and form as follows, to wit:

"That the said Halsted L. Ritter, while such judge, was guilty of a violation of section 258 of the Judicial Code of the United States of America (U. S. C., Annotated, title 28, sec. 373), making it unlawful for any judge appointed under the authority of the United States to exercise the profession or employment of counsel or attorney, or to be engaged in the practice of the law, in that Judge Ritter did exercise the profession or employment of counsel or attorney, or engage in the practice of the law, representing J. R. Francis, with relation to the Boca Raton matter and the segregation and saving of the interest of J. R. Francis therein, or in obtaining a deed or deeds to J. R. Francis from the Spanish River Land Co. to certain pieces of realty, and in the Edgewater Ocean Beach Development Co. matter, for which services the said Judge Ritter received from the said J. R. Francis the sum of $7,500.

"Which acts of said judge were calculated to bring his office into disrepute, constitute a violation of the law above recited, and constitute a high crime and misdemeanor within the meaning and intent of section 4 of article II of the Constitution of the United States.

"Wherefore the said Judge Halsted L. Ritter was and is guilty of a high misdemeanor in office.

"ARTICLE V

"That the said Halsted L. Ritter, having been nominated by the President of the United States, confirmed by the Senate of the United States, duly qualified and commissioned, and, while acting as a United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, was and is guilty of a high crime and misdemeanor in office in manner and form as follows, to wit:

"That the said Halsted L. Ritter, while such judge, was guilty of violation of section 146 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1928, making it unlawful for any person willfully to attempt in any manner to evade or defeat the payment of the income tax levied in and by said Revenue Act of 1928, in that during the year 1929 said Judge Ritter received gross taxable income—over and above his salary as judge—to the amount of some $12,000, yet paid no income tax thereon.

"Among the fees included in said gross taxable income for 1929 were the extra fee of $2,000 solicited and received by Judge Ritter in the Brazilian Court case as described in article III, and the fee of $7,500 received by Judge Ritter from J. R. Francis.

"Wherefore the said Judge Halsted L. Ritter was and is guilty of a high misdemeanor in office.

"ARTICLE VI

"That the said Halsted L. Ritter, having been nominated by the President of the United States, confirmed by the Senate of the United States, duly qualified and commissioned, and, while acting as a United States district judge for the southern district of Florida was and is guilty of a high crime and misdemeanor in office in manner and form as follows, to wit:

"That the said Halsted L. Ritter, while such judge, was guilty of violation of section 146 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1928, making it unlawful for any person willfully to attempt in any manner to evade or defeat the payment of the income tax levied in and by said Revenue Act of 1928, in that during the year 1930 the said Judge Ritter received gross taxable income—over and above his salary as judge—to the amount of, to wit, $5,300, yet failed to report any part thereof in his income-tax return for the year 1930, and paid no income tax thereon.

"Two thousand five hundred dollars of said gross taxable income for 1930 was that amount of cash paid Judge Ritter by A. L. Rankin on December 24, 1930, as described in article I.

"Wherefore the said Judge Halsted L. Ritter was and is guilty of a high misdemeanor in office."

Original article IV is amended so as to read as follows:

"ARTICLE VII

"That the said Halsted L. Ritter, while holding the office of United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, having been nominated by the President of the United States, confirmed by the Senate of the United States, duly qualified and commissioned, and, while acting as a United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, was and is guilty of misbehavior and of high crimes and misdemeanors in office in manner and form as follows, to wit:

"The reasonable and probable consequence of the actions or conduct of Halsted L. Ritter, hereunder specified or indicated in this article, since he became judge of said court, as an individual or as such judge, is to bring his court into scandal and disrepute, to the prejudice of said court and public confidence in the administration of justice therein, and to the prejudice of public respect for and confidence in the Federal judiciary, and to render him unfit to continue to serve as such judge:

"1. In that in the Florida Power Co. case (Florida Power & Light Co. v. City of Miami et al., no. 1183-M-Eq.), which was a case wherein said judge had granted the complainant power company a temporary injunction restraining the enforcement of an ordinance of the city of Miami, which ordinance prescribed a reduction in the rates for electric current being charged in said city, said judge improperly appointed one Cary T. Hutchinson, who had long been associated with and employed by power and utility interests, special master in chancery in said suit, and refused to revoke his order so appointing said Hutchinson. Thereafter, when criticism of such action had become current in the city of Miami, and within 2 weeks after a resolution (H. Res. 163, 73d Cong.) had been agreed to in the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, authorizing and directing the Judiciary Committee thereof to investigate the official conduct of said judge and to make a report concerning said conduct to said House of Representatives, an arrangement was entered into with the city commissioners of the city of Miami or with the city attorney of said city by which the said city commissioners were to pass a resolution expressing faith and confidence in the integrity of said judge, and the said judge recuse himself as judge in said power suit. The said agreement was carried out by the parties thereto, and said judge, after the passage of such resolution, recused himself from sitting as judge in said power suit, thereby bartering his judicial authority in said case for a vote of confidence. Nevertheless, the succeeding judge allowed said Hutchinson as special master in chancery in said case a fee of $5,000, although he performed little, if any, service as such, and in the order making such allowance recited: 'And it appearing to the court that a minimum fee of $5,000 was approved by the court for the said Cary T. Hutchinson, special master in this cause.'

"2. In that in the Trust Co. of Florida cases (Illick v. Trust Co. of Florida et al., no. 1043-M-Eq., and Edmunds Committee et al. v. Marion Mortgage Co. et al., no. 1124-M-Eq.) after the State banking department of Florida, through its comptroller, Hon. Ernest Amos, had closed the doors of the Trust Co. of Florida and appointed J. H. Therrell liquidator for said trust company, and had intervened in the said Illick case, said Judge Ritter wrongfully and erroneously refused to recognize the right of said State authority to administer the affairs of the said trust company and appointed Julian S. Eaton and Clark D. Stearns as receivers of the property of said trust company. On appeal, the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit reversed the said order or decree of Judge Ritter and ordered the said property surrendered to the State liquidator. Thereafter, on, to wit, September 12, 1932, there was filed in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida the Edmunds Committee case, supra. Marion Mortgage Co. was a subsidiary of the Trust Co. of Florida. Judge Ritter being absent from his district at the time of the filing of said case, an application for the appointment of receivers therein was presented to another judge of said district, namely, Hon. Alexander Akerman. Judge Ritter, however, prior to the appointment of such receivers, telegraphed Judge Akerman, requesting him to appoint the aforesaid Eaton and Stearns as receivers in said case, which appointments were made by Judge Akerman. Thereafter the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit reversed the order of Judge Akerman, appointing said Eaton and Stearns as receivers in said case. In November 1932, J. H. Therrell, as liquidator, filed a bill of complaint in the Circuit Court of Dade County, Fla.—a court of the State of Florida—alleging that the various trust properties of the Trust Co. of Florida were burdensome to the liquidator to keep, and asking that the court appoint a succeeding trustee. Upon petition for removal of said cause from said State court into the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, Judge Ritter took jurisdiction, notwithstanding the previous rulings of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals above referred to, and again appointed the said Eaton and Stearns as the receivers of the said trust properties. In December 1932 the said Therrell surrendered all of the trust properties to said Eaton and Stearns as receivers, together with all records of the Trust Co. of Florida pertaining thereto. During the time said Eaton and Stearns, as such receivers, were in control of said trust properties, Judge Ritter wrongfully and improperly approved their accounts without notice or opportunity for objection thereto to be heard. With the knowledge of Judge Ritter, said receivers appointed the sister-in-law of Judge Ritter, namely, Mrs. G. M. Wickard, who had had no previous hotel-management experience, to be manager of the Julia Tuttle Hotel and Apartment Building, one of said trust properties. On, to wit, January 1, 1933, Hon. J. M. Lee succeeded Hon. Ernest Amos as comptroller of the State of Florida and appointed M. A. Smith liquidator in said Trust Co. of Florida cases to succeed J. H. Therrell. An appeal was again taken to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit from the then latest order or decree of Judge Ritter, and again the order or decree of Judge Ritter appealed from was reversed by the said circuit court of appeals which held that the State officer was entitled to the custody of the property involved and that said Eaton and Stearns as receivers were not entitled to such custody. Thereafter, and with the knowledge of the decision of the said circuit court of appeals, Judge Ritter wrongfully and improperly allowed said Eaton and Stearns and their attorneys some $26,000 as fees out of said trust-estate properties and endeavored to require, as a condition precedent to releasing said trust properties from the control of his court, a promise from counsel for the said State liquidator not to appeal from his order allowing the said fees to said Eaton and Stearns and their attorneys.

"3. In that the said Halsted L. Ritter, while such Federal judge, accepted, in addition to $4,500 from his former law partner as alleged in article I hereof, other large fees or gratuities, to wit, $7,500 from J. R. Francis, on or about April 19, 1929; J. R. Francis at this said time having large property interests within the territorial jurisdiction of the court of which Judge Ritter was a judge; and on, to wit, the 4th day of April 1929 the said Judge Ritter accepted the sum of $2,000 from Brodek, Raphael & Eisner, representing Mulford Realty Corporation, as its attorneys, through Charles A. Brodek, senior member of said firm and a director of said corporation, as a fee or gratuity, at which time the said Mulford Realty Corporation held and owned large interests in Florida real estate and citrus groves, and a large amount of securities of the Olympia Improvement Corporation, which was a company organized to develop and promote Olympia, Fla., said holdings being within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States district court of which Judge Ritter was a judge from, to wit, February 15, 1929.

"4. By his conduct as detailed in articles I, II, III, and IV hereof, and by his income-tax evasions as set forth in articles V and VI hereof.

"Wherefore, the said Judge Halsted L. Ritter was and is guilty of misbehavior, and was and is guilty of high crimes and misdemeanors in office."

JOSEPH W. BYRNS,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

[SEAL]

SOUTH TRIMBLE, Clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the pleasure of counsel for the respondent with reference to the amendments?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. President, with reference to the amendments, we ask the honorable Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, to grant to us ample time within which to file our response to the amended or new articles. If I may be permitted to do so, I suggest that 48 hours will be ample time. We have no desire to take time that would interfere with the present arrangement for trial on the 6th of April.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel for the respondent has indicated that 48 hours would be ample time. Is there objection to that?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. There is no objection on the part of the managers for the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the pleasure of the Court? Is there objection?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, am I correct in the understanding that the honorable counsel for the respondent are granted 48 hours within which to reply to all the pleadings?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Just the new articles. We are ready to file pleadings this morning directed to articles I, II, III, and the original article IV, which is now article VII.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well, Mr. President; I am sure there will be no objection to counsel for the respondent being granted 48 hours; and now is the appropriate time for counsel for the respondent to exhibit their reply to the various articles heretofore presented.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the 48 hours requested will be allowed, and the Court will now hear counsel for the respondent.

Mr. ASHURST. Would the attorney for the respondent object to taking a place on the rostrum? It would facilitate audition very much, if there is no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. There is no objection, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no objection.

MOTION TO STRIKE CERTAIN ARTICLES

Mr. HOFFMAN (speaking from the desk in front of the Vice President). Mr. President, at this time the respondent presents his motion to strike article I, or, in the alternative, to require of the prosecution election as to whether it will stand upon article I or upon article II, and to strike article VII as it is under the present arrangement of the pleadings. We ask that this motion be filed and read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the motion.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

In the Senate of the United States of America sitting as a Court of Impeachment. The United States of America v. Halsted L. Ritter, respondent

MOTION TO STRIKE ARTICLE I, OR, IN THE ALTERNATIVE, TO REQUIRE ELECTION AS TO ARTICLES I AND II; AND MOTION TO STRIKE ARTICLE VII

The respondent, Halsted L. Ritter, moves the honorable Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, for an order striking and dismissing article I of the articles of impeachment, or, in the alternative, to require the honorable managers on the part of the House of Representatives to elect as to whether they will proceed upon article I or upon article II, and for grounds of such motion respondent says:

1. Article II reiterates and embraces all the charges and allegations of article I, and the respondent is thus and thereby twice charged in separate articles with the same and identical offense, and twice required to defend against the charge presented in article I.

2. The presentation of the same and identical charge in the two articles in question tends to prejudice the respondent in his defense, and tends to oppress the respondent in that the articles are so framed as to collect, or accumulate upon the second article, the adverse votes, if any, upon the first article.

3. The Constitution of the United States contemplates but one vote of the Senate upon the charge contained in each article of impeachment, whereas articles I and II are constructed and arranged in such form and manner as to require and exact of the Senate a second vote upon the subject matter of article I.

MOTION TO STRIKE ARTICLE VII

And the respondent further moves the honorable Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, for an order striking and dismissing article VII, and for grounds of such motion, respondent says:

1. Article VII includes and embraces all the charges set forth in articles I, II, III, IV, V, and VI.

2. Article VII constitutes an accumulation and massing of all charges in preceding articles upon which the Court is to pass judgment prior to the vote on article VII, and the prosecution should be required to abide by the judgment of the Senate rendered upon such prior articles and the Senate ought not to countenance the arrangement of pleading designed to procure a second vote and the collection or accumulation of adverse votes, if any, upon such matters.

3. The presentation in article VII of more than one subject and the charges arising out of a single subject is unjust and prejudicial to respondent.

4. In fairness and justice to respondent, the Court ought to require separation and singleness of the subject matter of the charges in separate and distinct articles, upon which a single and final vote of the Senate upon each article and charge can be had.

(Signed) FRANK P. WALSH,
CARL T. HOFFMAN,
Of Counsel for Respondent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Court will now hear the honorable managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I venture to suggest that the representative of Judge Ritter might desire to make some observations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The presentation will be made. The Chair simply desired from the managers on the part of the House their views with reference to the motion.

Mr. KING. But I had reference to one of the counsel for Judge Ritter. I suggested that it is possible that he might desire to submit something in support of his demurrer, or motion to strike, before the honorable managers on the part of the House desire to respond.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Opportunity for that course will be afforded.

Mr. KING. If counsel does not so desire, I have no objection.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, may the managers on the part of the House inquire as to the procedure in testing the validity of the motion to strike? Counsel for the respondent has read the motion to strike. It has not been supported by argument, except the argument stated in the motion. The managers on the part of the House, of course, desire to resist the motion to strike. Do I understand—and I am inquiring for information—that the managers on the part of the House are at this time to present the reasons why, in their judgment, the motion to strike ought not to be sustained?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair may say this as a ruling, if it meets with the approval of the Court:

Counsel for the respondent will present argument in support of the motion to strike, after which the managers on the part of the House will have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Thank you very much, Mr. President.

Mr. HOFFMAN. May I proceed, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel may proceed.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. President, taking up first the motion insofar as it relates to articles I and II—and I shall be as brief as I possibly can in presenting the motion—article I charges the corrupt receipt by Judge Ritter of $4,500 from a former partner, A. L. Rankin, and alleges the primary source of the fund from which the $4,500 was paid to be a fee allowed to Rankin in what is known as the Whitehall case, a foreclosure proceeding then pending before Judge Ritter.

That is the substance of article I.

Article II elaborates upon the same subject matter contained in article I—namely, the Whitehall case—and charges, first, an arrangement between three others and Judge Ritter to institute and maintain that particular litigation in the court of Judge Ritter; secondly, the allowance of exorbitant fees by Judge Ritter in connection with that litigation; and, third, the corrupt receipt by Judge Ritter of the same $4,500 from Rankin, derived from the same primary source which is charged in article I. So that article II embraces and includes everything that is charged in article I in the identical and same phraseology that is found in article I. Therefore we have moved to strike article I, because article II covers the same and identical subject matter and the same substantive offense. The result is injustice and embarrassment to the defendant, in that he is required twice to defend the charge presented in article I.

Under those circumstances we believe that article I should be stricken and dismissed, or that the prosecution should be required to elect as to whether it will proceed under article I or article II. We believe that the respondent ought not to be required twice to answer and defend the subject matter of article I, and we believe that the prosecution ought not to be permitted by such an arrangement of pleading of that particular offense to receive or exact from the Senate two votes upon the same charge, but that, when once voted upon, the vote of this body should be final upon that particular charge.

As we analyze it, the adoption or reiteration in article II of all that is charged in article I results in a collective or accumulative arrangement of the adverse vote, if any, upon article I to augment the adverse vote, if any, upon article II, which is decidedly unjust to the respondent. So, in justice to the respondent, we ask in this motion that election be required, or that article I be dismissed.

So much for the motion insofar as articles I and II are concerned.

The motion as directed to article VII presents two serious objections to the form and frame of the charges in article VII.

In article VII from six to eight separate and distinct and unrelated offenses are set out in one article. In paragraph numbered 1 of article VII a charge is laid of misconduct in connection with the litigation known as the Power Rate case. In paragraph numbered 2 of article VII, charges of misconduct of the respondent are made with respect to the litigation known as the Trust Co. of Florida litigation. Paragraph 3 of article VII charges the receipt by the respondent of certain fees and gratuities—namely, the $4,500 item made the basis of the charge in article I and in article II; a $7,500 item made the basis of the charge in article IV; and a $2,000 item made the basis of the charge in article III.

Then paragraph 4 of article VII by reference adopts and makes a vital and substantive part of article VII all of the articles preceding, namely, articles I, II, III, IV, V, and VI.

The result of that arrangement, as we see it, is that it is decidedly unjust to the respondent to be required to meet a massed or cumulative charge of that nature.

One vital question which we present in connection with our pleadings as to article VII is the duplicity of the pleadings. No single count of any criminal indictment or information should contain more than one separate and distinct charge. No two charges could be presented in any criminal prosecution in any one count of an indictment. All separate crimes in a criminal proceeding must be made the subjects of separate and distinct counts, for each count is the statement of a separate and distinct offense and stands upon its own footing.

The reason for the rule in criminal procedure is that the verdict must be an entirety, and the jury cannot find a defendant guilty of part of a charge or count or indictment and not guilty of the remainder, but must return the verdict as an entirety upon the whole count or article. So it is here—that the vote, I take it, will be upon the entire article, and that this body sitting as a Court of Impeachment will not vote upon the numbered paragraphs or upon the specific charges, but will vote upon the massed charges of the article.

These charges are all of separate, distinct, substantive offenses. None is dependent upon the other. They are unrelated.

I am not going to take the time of the Senate to quote the authorities upon the subject of duplicity. They are too numerous, and the members of the Court are familiar with those authorities. I am going to leave the question of duplicity with the statement that the general rule in criminal proceedings is that a charge against an accused must be stated in such a manner as to render the indictment not subject to the objection of duplicity, for if there is duplicity, it tends to confuse the issues, creates a multiplicity of issues, and embarrasses the defendant in the preparation and presentation of his defense. There is no better established rule in criminal procedure.

In civil procedure the same method of pleading could not be sustained over objection, for several separate, distinct, and unrelated causes of action could not be pleaded in one count of a declaration in any civil proceeding. They would of necessity have to be stated as separate and distinct actions and defended as separate and distinct actions. The rule of duplicity applies in civil as well as in criminal proceedings. We know of no court in which such a massed, duplicitous pleading could be sustained, and we think that such a pleading ought not to be countenanced by this body.

One other objection which we urge to the frame and form of article VII is its collective, accumulative arrangement. Before the Senate reaches a vote on article VII the Senate will have voted upon articles I, II, III, IV, V, and VI, and it is contemplated by the Constitution, in our judgment, that the votes of the Senate upon articles I, II, III, IV, V, and VI, all the preceding articles, shall be single, definite, and final, and that there shall not be presented again in a massed, cumulative, collective arrangement in the final article, the same matters upon which the Senate will have previously passed judgment by a single and final vote upon those matters separately.

Such an arrangement is decidedly unjust to the respondent. The single, separate, and final vote upon the preceding articles should end those articles, and they should not be voted upon again in the final catch-all arrangement of article VII.

The object and purpose of such an arrangement can be but to cumulate adverse votes, if any, upon prior articles, with the hope that the cumulative or collective arrangement may be sufficient to sustain those articles in the vote upon the final article, which prior articles were not sustained when separately voted upon prior to the vote on article VII.

In a former case tried in this Court a similar arrangement of a pleading in the final article was presented, and, in an opinion filed in that case by Senator BAILEY, of North Carolina, he directed attention to just such a final article as we have here. Senator BAILEY in his opinion with reference to this same subject matter stated:

The final article of the articles of impeachment, in my judgment, ought not to have been considered. It was a summary of the four preceding articles, a sort of catch-all designed to collect all of the votes of "guilty" on the preceding four articles, and so by accumulation to gather two-thirds of the Senate to sustain the impeachment, which could not be sustained on any of the articles or on all four considered separately. In other words, two-thirds of the Senate might have voted "not guilty" on each of the four articles, as was done—these containing the entire case—and yet two-thirds might have voted "guilty" on the fifth article, which was no stronger than the four upon which he had been found not guilty, which, fortunately, did not happen. This course is prejudiced, and it is to be hoped that it will not be repeated. A respondent ought to be tried upon the articles, and, if acquitted on each, he ought not to be convicted on all of them assembled in one article.

In this proceeding the effect of this method is made manifest. A majority of the Senate declared him "not guilty" on each of the four specific articles, but on the fifth, which was only a collection of the four, a majority declared him "guilty." Whereas some voted "guilty" on one article and "not guilty" on others, it appears that all who voted guilty on any article were combined by the fifth. This unsound procedure ought not to be countenanced.

The Senate's power to try impeachments is predicated not only upon protection of the courts, the Government, and the people, but also upon the capacity of the Senate to do justice to respondents.

Mr. President, having by this motion called the attention of the Court to the unjust and prejudicial arrangement of this pleading, which we believe is oppressive to the defendant, we ask that the Court rectify that situation and not countenance the collective and duplicitous pleading in the form of the seventh article.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Court will hear the managers on the part of the House of Representatives.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, Senators will observe from an examination that article I charges the respondent with having corruptly received from his former law partner the sum of $4,500. Article II charges the respondent with having been a party to a conspiracy entered into with his former law partner and two or three other persons mentioned in article II. It charges a champertous proceeding on the part of those who initiated the action in the court of respondent; that the respondent was advised of the fact that that proceeding was born in champerty, and that the respondent made effective that conspiracy by holding jurisdiction in his court of this case over the protest of the owner or the controller of the $50,000 worth of bonds necessary for the attorney who filed the bill to represent in order that the court might hold jurisdiction. I do not desire to amplify that further. I merely call the attention of Senators to those two charges. An examination will show clearly that one is not a repetition of the other, though, of course, in the second there is an inclusion of the statement in the former charge that the respondent corruptly received from his former law partner the sum of $4,500 in cash paid in his office behind closed doors.

With regard to article VII and in connection with the statement of Senator BAILEY, of North Carolina, to which reference has been made, but which I have not had the opportunity to examine, it is evident that the Senate did not agree with Senator BAILEY. His statement was in the nature of a complaint against the Senate for having refused to strike exactly such an article as article VII in our pleadings. I am not advised that there was a motion to strike, but complaint was made by Senator BAILEY that the Senate had given consideration to and voted upon an article which I assume was identical with article VII, with reference to which complaint is here made.

Senators will recall that in the last impeachment case tried in this honorable Court there was such an article included. May I direct attention to just what article VII provides? I think article VII is the most rational, practical, sensible assembling of charges that can be made in an impeachment case. What is it we are attempting to do here? This is not a criminal case. Much of the observation of counsel for the respondent had reference to the practice in criminal cases. I assume that Senators are all familiar with the fact that we in this country drifted into the observance and followed the precedents of the English procedure where an impeachment trial was a criminal proceeding, with the possibility of a judgment involving the death penalty, confiscation of property, and so forth. Having no precedents of our own in the first case, we looked, as frequently occurred in the early days of the Republic, to the English procedure for our precedent. That is evidently how we fell into the application to our impeachment procedure of the procedure usually found to be observed in criminal cases. But the House and the Senate, having examined what is the place and what are the provisions for such action under the impeachment clause of the Constitution, are, I believe, all agreed that appropriate action can be taken only in an ouster suit. When we wrote our Constitution we specifically denied to the Senate the power to punish for crime, and limited the Senate to ouster, with the possibilities of a judgment in bar.

When we look a little further into the place and provisions with respect to impeachment we see that in the exercise of the powers of the Senate there is combined a part of all the powers of Government, and they must be here.

Members of this august body must, however, answer to the people every 6 years, because they are servants of the people. Members of the House of Representatives must answer to the people every 2 years. Every 4 years the people decide who shall be President.

With regard to the judiciary, there is no place where they must answer except in this great body, and the Senate possesses all the powers that a free people enjoy in order to preserve a virtuous, efficient judiciary in America. That power must rest somewhere. It rests nowhere except here.

Mr. President and members of this honorable Court, I am going to conclude in just a very few minutes. I appreciate your interested attention, and I am not going to trespass upon it.

What does article VII charge? Article VII charges that the respondent by specifically alleged conduct has done those things the reasonable and probable consequences of which are to arouse a substantial doubt as to his judicial integrity.

We contend that that is the highest crime which a judge can commit on the bench. It is not whether he did this thing, that thing, or the other thing, but whether or not the sum total of the things he has done has made the people doubt his integrity as a judicial officer.

I beg to make this practical suggestion, that if a judge on the bench, who is in office during good behavior, by his proved acts makes the people doubt whether his court is a court where they are going to get a square deal and whether it is an honest place to go to, the Senate cannot be technical.

That is what the Senate is trying to find out about, I assume. When doubt enters, confidence departs. And when confidence in the man who sits on the bench is gone, confidence in the court is gone. We on the part of the House of Representatives charge, and we assume the responsibility of proving, and we will endeavor to convince the Senate that the sum totals of the specific charges on the part of the House specified in section 7 do in their reasonable probabilities arouse doubt. We ask the opportunity of establishing that fact, and respectfully demand at the hands of the Senate, if we do establish the fact, the judgment which ought to follow.

Mr. ASHURST. Have counsel for respondent any reply to make?

Mr. HOFFMAN. May I briefly respond, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel for the respondent may proceed.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. President, in response to the argument presented by the managers on the part of the House, I wish merely to comment that the question presented by the motion is one of fairness and justice to the respondent in the presentation and in the answer and defense of the articles of impeachment here before the body.

I have no desire to review, as did the managers on the part of the House, the history of impeachments in England and in this country, nor to try to reconcile conflicts of opinion as to what is or what is not an impeachable offense. We present one proposition as to articles I and II, and that is that everything that is embodied within article I, in the same identical phraseology, is embodied in article II, and we ask the judgment of the Senate whether, under such circumstances, we shall be required twice to answer to the charge made in article I, and whether this Court, by that arrangement, will accord to the prosecution two votes upon the charge made in article I, when, in our judgment, the Constitution contemplates that in every court there shall be one judgment and in this Court one vote upon a charge presented against any respondent. That is the sole and only question presented by the motion with respect to articles I and II—whether the respondent shall twice be charged with the same offense, namely, the corrupt receipt of $4,500 from his former law partner, and whether also this body will permit two votes upon that charge.

So we ask that the managers on the part of the House be required to elect as to whether they will stand upon article I, abandoning the elaboration set out in article II, or whether they will stand on article II, the elaborated article, which embraces and includes everything charged in article I.

Now, with respect to article VII, it is true that at the commencement of the article it is stated that the conduct hereinafter specified tends to bring the court into disrespect and reflects upon the integrity of the Federal judiciary. That is the substance of every one of the charges, and that is the reason for the presentation of the charges, namely, the opinion of the prosecution that the acts charged do just that. But it is charged that this conduct constitutes crimes and misdemeanors for which the respondent may be impeached, and then there are numerous paragraphs setting out six or eight definite and specific unrelated charges, all alleged as crimes and misdemeanors.

The rule of duplicity is well known to every lawyer who has practiced in any court for any length of time in civil or criminal law. I say that it is well founded and fastened in criminal procedure, but it is no less the rule of law in civil proceedings. You cannot take unrelated matters in a civil pleading and mass them in one count of a declaration or pleading. You cannot sue for breach of contract upon a promissory note and upon an open account, all in the same one single count of a declaration when they are unrelated and separate and distinct transactions, separate and distinct substantive acts, as is the case here in article VII.

So as to article VII we present, I say again, one question, the question of duplicity—whether duplicity of pleadings shall be permitted in a court of impeachment when they are not permitted in any other tribunal in this country. Secondly, whether or not there shall be permitted a massing or collective arrangement which evades the spirit and purpose of a single, final, ultimate, definite vote upon one specific charge under the Constitution; in other words, whether the duplicity shall prevail in this Court in pleadings, and whether or not adverse votes on previous articles can be accumulated or collected and massed on the final vote, with the hope of sustaining the charges which were not sustained when separately voted upon.

The question, so far as I have been able to ascertain, has never heretofore been presented in any pleading in any impeachment case before this body. It is for the first time, so far as I know, now presented. There was no such motion in the Louderback case.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I assume that the Presiding Officer will desire to take some time to examine all the pleadings and will not be prepared to announce a decision on this point until the next session of the Court?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the opinion of the present occupant of the chair that while the necessity for early decision is apparent, the importance of the matter would justify the occupant of the chair in saying that no decision should be made until the proceedings are printed and every member of the Court has an opportunity to investigate and consider them. Is there objection to that suggestion of the Chair? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ASHURST. Do counsel for the respondent desire to ask any questions at this time?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. President, I want to say that at the proper juncture I wish to file and have read the respondent's answer to article II and amended article III. The motion relates to other articles.

Mr. ASHURST. Do counsel for the respondent now file their complete answer?

Mr. HOFFMAN. To article II and amended article III. The motion is directed to article I, and as to an election between article I and article II, and to article VII.

Mr. ASHURST. Do counsel wish the answer read?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; to dispose of the answer to article II and the amended article III, to suit the convenience of the Court.

Mr. ASHURST. When will the complete answer be made?

Mr. HOFFMAN. We have been granted 48 hours in which to make answer to the new articles. As to articles I and VII, whether we respond to them will depend on the action on the motion which has been made.

Mr. ASHURST. Would it be satisfactory to make a complete answer at one time?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Whatever suits the convenience of the Senate will be agreeable to us.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well. Then, Mr. President, if there be no objection, I shall ask unanimous consent that the entire answer of counsel for the respondent be submitted and read at the next session of the Court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, counsel for the respondent were granted 48 hours to answer the amended articles, which I think is appropriate; but there is a special order set for Thursday next, at 1 o'clock, and if there be no objection, I ask because of the special order that the date be set for Friday of this week, which will be a longer time than 48 hours.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator fix the hour?

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator. I will suggest 1 o'clock.

Mr. ROBINSON. On Friday next at 1 o'clock?

Mr. ASHURST. On Friday next at 1 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the proceedings of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment will be resumed on Friday next at 1 o'clock.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry. If I understand the Senator correctly, we are not to be required to file any pleadings to the articles attacked by the motion until after the Senate has ruled upon the motion?

Mr. ASHURST. The learned counsel is correct.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And we will be apprised of the ruling of the Senate prior to Friday in order that we may be in readiness to file the answer on Friday?

Mr. ASHURST. I cannot give any assurance. The Presiding Officer may need some time to consider the pleadings and look up the precedents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the further pleasure of the Court?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if no Senator has a question to ask and if the managers on the part of the House and counsel for the respondent have no questions to ask or suggestions to make, I move that the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, adjourn until Friday, April 3, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arizona.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, adjourned until Friday, April 3, 1936, at 1 o'clock p. m.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACHMAN in the chair). The Senate is now in legislative session.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 553) extending the time for the Federal Trade Commission to make an investigation and file final report with respect to agricultural income and the financial and economic condition of agricultural producers generally, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11035) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. PARKS, Mr. BLANTON, Mr. McMILLAN, Mr. SNYDER, Mr. DICKWEILER, Mr. BOLTON, and Mr. POWERS were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8372) to authorize the acquisition of lands in the vicinity of Miami, Fla., as a site for a naval air station and to authorize the construction and installation of a naval air station thereon, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. VINSON of Georgia, Mr. DREWRY, and Mr. DARROW were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 553) extending the time for the Federal Trade Commission to make an investigation and file final report with respect to agricultural income and the financial and economic condition of agricultural producers generally was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

ORDER OF BUSINESS—RECESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President—

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator from Washington desire to yield to enable me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. May I inquire of the Senator from Arkansas whether the special order set for this afternoon will be taken up at 2:30?

Mr. ROBINSON. It will be.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Does the Senator know how long the special order will take?

Mr. ROBINSON. I am impressed with the idea that it may take 2 hours. I have no definite way of determining the length of time that will be required, but it probably will require the remainder of the afternoon.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If a quorum should be called, probably it would be 25 minutes after 2 o'clock before it was completed; I would not care to continue in the meantime, and I shall be very glad to hear any suggestion the Senator from Arkansas may make as to whether I should continue now or wait until tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not think that it will be convenient for the Senator to proceed now, in view of the fact that only 15 minutes remain until the special order is to be reached. Therefore, if there is no objection, I move that the Senate take a recess for 15 minutes, or until 2:30 o'clock p. m.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 12 minutes) the Senate took a recess until 2:30 o'clock p. m.

At the expiration of the recess the Senate reassembled.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11035) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. COPELAND, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. NORBECK, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION—LAMAR HARDY

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2:30 o'clock having arrived, under the special order entered on March 27, the Senate is now in executive session for the purpose of considering the nomination of Lamar Hardy to be United States attorney for the southern district of New York.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Chavez	Johnson	Overton

Caraway	Hayden	Nye	Wheeler
Carey	Holt	O'Mahoney	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON in the chair). Eighty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as the Senate probably knows, Mr. Lamar Hardy, an attorney of New York City, was appointed during the last recess of the Congress to fill the vacancy in the office of district attorney in the southern judicial district of New York. When Congress convened his name was sent to the Senate as an appointee for the full term, so that he is now holding the office under the appointment made during the recess.

This nomination was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which committee in turn referred it to a subcommittee. The subcommittee held hearings, reported to the Committee on the Judiciary favorably, and the Judiciary Committee made a favorable report to the Senate, and Mr.

Hardy's nomination, under the unanimous-consent agreement, is now before the Senate for action.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator does not mean to infer, of course, that the report from the Committee on the Judiciary was unanimous?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no.

Mr. KING. I was not at the meeting when the nomination was considered, but if I had been present, with the knowledge I have of the record, I should have voted in the negative.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if every Member of the Senate would read the printed hearings, I would not trespass upon the time of the Senate to say a single word. I have no personal knowledge of or acquaintance with this nominee, and no knowledge, outside of what I have gathered from reading the evidence of this case. I have read all the evidence, and I base my objection to confirmation upon the conclusions I have reached from reading the evidence.

The Bar Association of New York took up this matter, appointed a committee to make an investigation, and that committee reported to the association. At the request of the friends of Mr. Hardy, action was deferred, I think, for a week, and then it was taken up at one of the largest meetings the Bar Association of New York ever held. The accounts in the newspapers stated that in the neighborhood of 800 members of the association were present.

The committee which had been appointed, and which had made its report, submitted a resolution as follows:

Resolved, That, in the opinion of this association, the connection of Lamar Hardy, Esq., with the affairs and management of the State Title & Mortgage Co. and its affiliated companies has disqualified him from holding the office of United States attorney for the southern district of New York.

The resolution was fully debated, and upon a final vote the resolution was adopted by the Bar Association with 321 votes for it and 247 votes against it.

Some of the most eminent attorneys in the city, and of the Nation, for that matter, participated in the debate. Against the resolution and in favor of the confirmation of Mr. Hardy were ex-Governor Miller, Mr. Coudert, and Mr. Colby, who was at one time, as we know, Secretary of State of the United States.

The adoption of the resolution was urged by men of similar ability—Charles C. Burlington, Thomas B. Thacher, and Samuel Seabury. There were others participating, but I mention those names because most of the Members of the Senate are familiar with them.

When the matter was heard by the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary eminent attorneys appeared on each side. The witnesses on each side of the controversy, so far as I could gather from the evidence, were eminently fair, and I have no criticism to offer of what any of the witnesses said on either side of the controversy.

Mr. President, let me say that I do not offer the action of the bar association as conclusive. I realize that that association is entitled to consideration, entitled to more consideration, I believe, than the subcommittee gave it. Its action all through has been highly respectful, and there is no doubt in my mind that the friends of Mr. Hardy had as many members of the association present when the vote was taken as it was possible to get. The meeting was adjourned for a week at the request of his friends, so I take it there was present a full and fair representation of the Bar Association.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I happen to be a member of that association. It contains more than 3,000 members. Only about 500 members participated in the meeting. If it will not interrupt the Senator, I may add that there are three other bar associations in New York having greater membership. For instance, the New York County Lawyers' Association, which is not opposed to Mr. Hardy, has a membership of over 6,000.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator will not claim, will he, that any of those associations have taken any action or adopted any resolution in favor of Mr. Hardy?

Mr. WAGNER. That is not customarily done.

Mr. NORRIS. It was not done in this case.

Mr. WAGNER. There was no disapproval.

Mr. NORRIS. No. No action was taken by any of the bar associations except the one to which I referred.

Mr. WAGNER. So far as I know—and I have served for a number of years on the judiciary committee of the Bar Association of New York—it is only when that committee or the association is requested to approve or disapprove that it takes action. If, however, there is a general disapproval of a nominee for judge, or of a nomination such as that which is now under consideration, the bar associations always deem it their duty to express their views on the disapproval.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has anticipated what I expected to say, because in the questions that were asked of the witnesses representing the bar associations the point the Senator has raised was brought out. I should have reached a discussion of it in due time. I expect to read some of the evidence; but, since the Senator has raised the question, I shall take up the discussion of that point now.

Objection is made to the action of the bar association in question because other bar associations exist, because there are 25,000 lawyers in the city of New York, and because the other bar associations have not acted. Mr. President, it is said also of the association which did act that a large number of its members were not present. Yet I think it is undenied that this association never held a meeting at which there was a greater attendance than at the meeting in question. The New York newspapers had been discussing the nomination. It was a matter of gossip on the streets of New York.

In view of what has been said in the Senate, I shall read some of the news items which appeared at the time of Mr. Hardy's nomination. There was great interest in the subject. The fact that some other bar association did not condemn Mr. Hardy ought to be answered sufficiently, I think, by saying that none of the bar associations—not one of them—ever passed any resolution in favor of Mr. Hardy or took any action, when, as a matter of fact, it was known all over the city of New York that there was wide objection to the confirmation of his nomination.

I shall probably go into that subject a little more fully when I take up the questions which were asked some of the witnesses.

I now read a news item to show that nothing was concealed. Everything was open. I think Mr. Hardy and his friends devoted all their ability and much of their time to an effort to have all Mr. Hardy's friends present at the meeting of the bar association. I think the evidence shows that there was but one other meeting of the bar association at which there was so large an attendance as there was at the meeting in question.

I now read from a news item appearing in the New York Times of January 10, 1936:

Bar asks Senate to reject Hardy.

Association here votes 321 to 247 against his confirmation as United States attorney.

Mortgage case is cited.

I should not read these news items, or some of the letters which I may read, if I had not first read all the evidence. In my judgment, some of the letters I have, some of which I may read, fairly state the facts which must be deduced from the evidence taken by the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary.

After a hot debate in which leading members of the New York bar participated, the Association of the Bar of the City of New York adopted a resolution last night urging the United States Senate to refuse to confirm the appointment of Lamar Hardy as United States attorney. The vote was 321 to 247.

Mr. Hardy's right to serve in the office, which he now holds by an ad-interim appointment, was defended by former Governor Nathan Miller; Bainbridge Colby, former Secretary of State; and Frederick Coudert, former president of the bar association.

Against them in the debate, urging the adoption of the report of the committee on the judiciary, which criticized the appointment of Mr. Hardy on the ground of his prior connection with the State Title & Mortgage Co., were Samuel Seabury; Thomas B. Thatcher, chairman of the charter revision commission; and Charles C. Burlingham, former president of the bar association.

More than 800 members of the association attended the meeting, which was said to be the largest since the association met to place itself on record in opposition to the nomination of Samuel Hofstadter and Aron Stener as supreme court justices at the close of the Hofstadter investigation into New York City affairs.

The committee's objection to his appointment was based upon the findings of Moreland Act Commissioner George Walger and Abraham Halprin, of the State insurance department, in connection with the affairs and management of the State Title & Mortgage Co., with which Mr. Hardy was associated from 1927 to 1931.

I may say that it was the 27th day of October 1931 when Mr. Hardy resigned from the position he held with the company. He was with the company from its beginning. He was one of the organizers of the company.

In that period, it was said, Mr. Hardy's fees from the company amounted to $165,000.

I will say to the Senate that, as I remember the evidence, it shows that $165,000 in fees was paid to Mr. Hardy during the first 2 years. He was with the company about four and a half years altogether. There is no evidence which I remember of any fees paid to him after that, or, if they were, what they were; but that he obtained $165,000 in 2 years from the company is undisputed.

Members of the committee took the position that while there was no suspicion of wrongdoing on Mr. Hardy's part, it might be embarrassing to him and to the Government if he were called as a witness at the trial of the indictment in Federal court charging the company with using the mails to defraud.

Not being a member of the association, Mr. Hardy was not able to attend the closed meeting of the association to defend the propriety of his remaining in office. Influential members of the association, however, were understood to be ready to fight against the adoption of the committee's condemnatory report.

I should like to have the Senate remember that I am reading a news item, and where I think there is anything in the item contrary to what the evidence shows I shall point it out, as I have already done in one or two instances.

The report was presented to the membership and its adoption urged by Alfred A. Cook, chairman of the committee on the judiciary, who was also counsel to Commissioner Alger in the Moreland Act inquiry into the activities of the guaranteed mortgage companies. The report contained the following resolution, about which the debate centered.

I have already read the resolution. I desire to digress at this point to comment upon the chairman of the judiciary committee of the bar association. He had charge of the investigation of Mr. Hardy. He had been appointed by the Governor to take part in an investigation of the various mortgage guaranty companies, of which this company was one. The investigation, I think, was brought about at the instigation of the Governor of New York. Mr. Cook served in that investigation. The investigation of this company, so the testimony shows, lasted for 10 months. Mr. Cook participated in it with great reluctance. The Governor personally asked him to act, and he made this condition to the Governor, that if he went on his services should not be paid for by the State; he accepted the position under those conditions, and after a 10 months' investigation reached the conclusion that this mortgage company in particular was one of the worst of all of them, and he so testified before the committee.

The bar association committee's report was distributed confidentially to members more than a week ago. Last night's meeting, originally scheduled for January 2, was postponed 1 week at the request of friends of Mr. Hardy to give him an opportunity to prepare his side of the case. It said: "The official report of the Moreland Act Commission and the report made to the superintendent of insurance by Mr. Halprin, as well as the civil and criminal proceedings instituted by public officers against the State Title Mortgage Co."—

That is the particular mortgage company to which I have referred—

"and certain of its officers and directors, indicated that the affairs of the State Title & Mortgage Co. were managed in violation of law and, in many respects, in disregard of the normal standards of business morality and of the financial interests of thousands of small, helpless, and uninformed investors whose investments in the State Title Mortgage Co. aggregated millions of dollars."

Continuing, the report said:

"In the opinion of this committee, the appointment of Lamar Hardy, Esq., is contrary to the public interest and would seriously impair public confidence in the administration of justice through the high office of the United States attorney for the southern district of New York."

Calling attention to the Federal indictment against officers and directors of the mortgage company, the report said:

"On the trial of the indictment now pending in the Federal court, charging the use of moneys in a scheme to defraud, the history of the State Title from its inception in all probability will become material.

"One of the principal issues may be whether the defendants acted in good faith and believed in the truth of the representations alleged to have been made. On that issue, and also because two of the overt acts alleged in the conspiracy count of the indictment relate to matters which had their inception before Mr. Hardy's resignation, it is not unlikely that he will be called as a witness by the defendants.

"In that event he would be in the embarrassing and inconsistent position of having to testify against the Government, whose chief law officer in this district he now is.

Another newspaper article—and I could cite nearly as many articles as there are newspapers published in New York City if I wanted to do so—

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. What office did Mr. Hardy hold in the State Title & Mortgage Co.?

Mr. NORRIS. He was a member of the board of directors and he was chairman of the executive committee for a long time. He was a member of the board of directors longer, however, than he was chairman of the executive committee. He was also counsel for the company.

Mr. WALSH. Did he devote his whole time to the active management of the company?

Mr. NORRIS. I cannot say as to that, but I presume he did not. The records show that he was present at nearly all the meetings of the board of directors.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Would not the fact that he received $165,000 in fees in 2 years' time indicate that he must have rendered some alleged service in order to justify such a payment?

Mr. NORRIS. It would seem that he ought to have performed some service, anyway.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think the record will show that he not only was a director, one of the five, but that he organized that company.

Mr. NORRIS. He did. There was a holding company. There were a whole lot of companies, all intermingled. This particular company held other companies, and it itself was held by another company. Mr. Lamar Hardy himself organized this particular mortgage company and became one of its directors and chairman of the executive committee at its inception.

The president of that company has been tried and found guilty. I do not know whether or not his case is pending in the upper courts now, but he has already been tried and found guilty. There are indictments now pending against several of the other members of the board of directors. There is a civil suit pending against all of them, and that civil suit includes Mr. Lamar Hardy. He is a defendant in that suit, which has not been tried as yet, but the evidence before the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee shows that in order to relieve himself of any liability in that civil suit he offered to settle by payment of $16,500.

I cannot give the details as to how this company was tied up. The funds were invested under the law of New York. In its securities were invested the savings of orphan children and of guardians. I am not familiar with the law that governed the case, but someone—I think the insurance commissioner—has sued for $5,000,000 to recover some of the losses which it is alleged were sustained by reason of the fraudulent and disreputable methods which this title and mortgage company pursued in getting rid of its investments to investors.

It is the custom, I understand, under the laws of New York to divide up mortgages. In this instance they were held, rather, in escrow, and certificates were issued of a smaller denomination, similar to debentures. They were sold to the public. They were issued in amounts as low as $10, and millions of them were sold. The suit brought by some officials of the State of New York deeming these investments to be illegal and wrong is to recover damages for the loss of these funds.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, did the Senator state that these securities were recognized as valid investments by the insurance commissioner of the State of New York?

Mr. NORRIS. I would not say that the officers of the State of New York who had to deal with these funds could not themselves be charged with fraud. I am not sufficiently familiar with the law of New York to know as to that; but it would seem to me that they could be. For instance, I suppose, under the law, there are various regulations as to the character of mortgage that may be taken, and if it was in default, it would not come within the rule. Yet millions of dollars of mortgages were in default; some of them were under foreclosure proceedings and were assigned to various organizations that have a right to invest different funds, insurance funds, orphans' funds, and so forth.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. Several million dollars were acquired by the city chamberlain representing widows and orphans?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. And the money was lost?

Mr. NORRIS. I presume the law provides that certain kinds of securities could be invested in by those having funds in their charge. Deception was practiced upon them, and there might have been collusion; but, at least, a lot of these so-called investments that did not measure up to the requirements of the law got into the hands of these various officials.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. MURPHY. The Senator said that some of the officers of the company were indicted and convicted?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. MURPHY. Was there any presentment of facts against Mr. Hardy made to the grand jury or any allegation of fraud committed by him?

Mr. NORRIS. None that I know of. For some reason, he was never indicted, and I do not know that there was any attempt made to indict him.

I started to read, when I was interrupted, a news item, or rather an editorial, from the New York Herald Tribune of January 4, 1936, which is headed "An untimely selection" and which reads:

The published excerpts of the report of the judiciary committee of the Bar Association of the City of New York relating to the proposed appointment of Mr. Lamar Hardy as United States attorney for the southern district do not reflect on the character of Mr. Hardy. They do make it plain that his selection at the present time is open to grave criticism.

The principal reason is his long and intimate association with the State Title & Mortgage Co., whose officers are under indictment on serious charges. Mr. Hardy himself has not been indicted. But he was intimately connected with these officers at a time when many of the acts for which they have been indicted took place. No charge has been made that he was himself involved in these unsavory transactions. But it is certainly clear that this connection would prejudice his usefulness in the event that his former associates came up for trial while he was in office.

The fault appears to be that of the President's associates for not apprising him of all the facts in the case. This is not the first time that Mr. Roosevelt has been imposed on by his political friends. Under the circumstances the wise and proper course for Mr. Hardy is to ask the President not to send his name to the Senate for confirmation. By thus withdrawing he will avoid a possible double embarrassment—to himself and to the President who appointed him.

Mr. President, before I read some of the evidence I am going to invite the attention of the Senate to an extension of remarks appearing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 13, the present month, made by Hon. MARTIN J. KENNEDY, of New York, in the House of Representatives on that day. Mr. KENNEDY is himself a resident of this judicial district. He said:

Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, I attend the hearings of the Senate Judiciary Committee, held in the Capitol on March 9 and 10, in connection with the nomination of Lamar Hardy for the office of United States attorney for the southern district of New York. I am always interested in having appointed to public office men of outstanding ability; but I have a particular interest in the office of the United States attorney for the southern district, because I live in that district. In addition to my personal interest in this appointment, I have an official interest because of my membership on the special committee appointed by the Speaker to investigate real-estate bondholders' reorganizations.

Our congressional committee, in order to accomplish the purpose for which it was created, must have the cooperation and wholehearted support of the United States attorney. In investigating these real-estate reorganizations, I necessarily have become familiar with the sale of real-estate bonds and participating certificates. Unfortunately, in many cases the committee is helpless to aid the poor bondholders, because the underlying security behind the bonds and certificates is absolutely worthless.

Mr. Hardy, the President's nominee for the office of United States attorney, has been closely identified with a mortgage company that sold a great many mortgages and certificates which must be classified as worthless. As an officer and director of this company, the State Title & Mortgage Co., he has naturally been friendly with the other companies engaged in this type of business throughout the greater city of New York.

The president of the company, with which Mr. Hardy was associated, the State Title & Mortgage Co., was indicted and convicted of fraudulent practices. At the present time there are awaiting trial a number of other officers of the same company. As a former colleague, and now as district attorney, Mr. Hardy must necessarily find himself in an embarrassing position.

The district attorney of New York will have a lot of work ahead of him in connection with these mortgage companies, and as many of these are personal friends of Mr. Hardy, he certainly cannot be expected to be an aggressive prosecutor. Mr. Hardy has been in office for nearly 3 months and has never tried a single case. We require an active man; one who will set the pace for his assistants.

More than a quarter of a million families—

Let me read that again. I am reading this because I read the evidence, and in my judgment these statements are fully borne out by the evidence. I am not reading all of this speech, but I believe that everything I do read states the facts as shown by the evidence taken before the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary when they had the nomination before them. I read:

More than a quarter of a million families have lost their life savings in these defaulted mortgages. Due to Mr. Hardy's intimate association with the companies that sold these worthless mortgages, I do not believe that he will have the moral support of the people of New York.

The Bar Association of New York is opposed to the confirmation of Mr. Hardy, as well as practically every newspaper published in the city of New York.

The New York Evening Post of March 12 expresses the situation perfectly as follows:

"It doesn't take a sensitive nose to detect the atmosphere of a biased court. The Senate Judiciary Subcommittee 'judging' the fitness of Lamar Hardy to be United States attorney for the southern New York district gave itself away early in its hearing. Every courtesy was extended to Hardy and to Max D. Steuer, his counsel. But, say the dispatches, 'Alfred A. Cook was interrupted in his answers to questions when he tried to elucidate the objections to Mr. Hardy's confirmation as recorded by the Association of the Bar of New York City. Mr. Cook was forced virtually to defend the standing of the Bar Association.' * * * Was the subcommittee judging Hardy or judging the Bar Association? Is its mind made up in advance to confirm a nominee opposed by the bar, the press, and the public of his own city? Why did the two Senators most concerned, WAGNER and COPELAND, of New York, stay away from the hearing? Were they afraid to offend New York City by helping Hardy, and afraid to offend party leaders by opposing him?"

"Does the Senate realize it is placing in charge of Federal securities law prosecution in the financial heart of the country the man who sat tight as chairman of the executive committee of the defunct State Title & Mortgage Co. while it evolved financial maneuvers that brought losses to thousands? That Hardy is one of the defendants in a $5,000,000 suit brought by the State banking department to recover some of these losses?"

"Does the Senate realize that 10 of Hardy's former associates are under indictment? Does it understand that Hardy will probably be called as witness for the defense in Federal trials of these associates—that the Federal attorney will then be testifying against the Federal Government?"

"Hardy's defense, that he did not know what was going on, is no answer to the Bar Association. We do not want as public prosecutor (even though his character may be white as snow) a man who did not know what was going on under his nose. A United States attorney is supposed to know what happens around him."

I ought to digress now to say—and I do it with some embarrassment and reluctance—that, in my opinion, the reference made by the news item I have just read to the unfair way in which those who are opposed to Mr. Hardy's confirmation were treated by the subcommittee was fully justified. That is one reason why I desired to have every Member of the Senate read that testimony. Mr. Cook, whom I described a while ago as a man who had devoted 10 months of his time, without pay, at the request of the Governor of New York, to getting the facts in these mortgage-fraud cases, was before the subcommittee; and I shall read some of the testimony he gave, or tried to give. In my opinion, there was no reason why this man or the other witnesses who appeared against the confirmation of this nomination were not entitled to all the respect that every fair court and every fair committee always wish to give to their witnesses. I do not believe they received that kind of treatment. On the other hand, the greatest courtesy was shown to Mr. Hardy and his friends when they testified.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator intend to call attention to the examination by the subcommittee of Mr. Shearn, who was sent down by the New York Bar Association to present the matter?

Mr. NORRIS. I intend to read portions of the testimony of Mr. Shearn, and also portions of the testimony of Mr. Cook. I may not have the same points in mind, and it may be that I shall find I am trespassing too long on the time of the Senate; and if the Senator from Utah thinks parts of the testimony which I do not read should be read, I shall be very glad to have him read them.

I have here a letter from Hon. Charles Burlingham, known all over the country. I think, as one of the outstanding lawyers of the country. I should not read what he says if I were not, in my judgment, able to say that I think he states the facts according to the development of the evidence.

In part of this letter Mr. Burlingham says:

The fact that for 4½ years he—had been actively connected with a disreputable title company, not merely as counsel but one of its organizers, a director and chairman of its executive committee, also a director and counsel for some of the subsidiary affiliated companies, taken with the fact that the company and several of its directors are under indictment in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, and its president convicted of a criminal offense, and Mr. Hardy himself sued for negligence and waste by the State superintendent of insurance—all these considerations disqualify him from holding the office of United States attorney, for no man with such connections can command the confidence of a community in which hundreds of thousands of small investors have lost millions of dollars through the mismanagement of his company.

That refers to Mr. Hardy—

Mr. President, that is not exaggerated. Hundreds of thousands of small investors lost millions of dollars. I may not, for lack of time, read all the evidence; but one of the witnesses was questioned by the subcommittee on that point. The member of the subcommittee said, in substance:

"Do not these people, when they invest money, usually have an attorney to advise them? Would you condemn this man if he had advised somebody wrongfully? If these investors made mistakes, they were their mistakes."

The answer was, however:

"The people who made these investments had no attorney. They were saving their pennies. They were answering the advertisements which appeared in the newspapers, and which said, 'You cannot lose your money if you buy these securities. This is a safe investment. It is gilt-edged. You run no risk if you put your savings into the securities of this company.'"

Thousands of persons invested their savings—persons who could not afford to lose even $5. The loss of a small amount of money means poverty to thousands of persons who put into this company the money they had accumulated by saving their pennies, after they had been induced to do it by advertisements in the newspapers, circulated all over, saying that this was the greatest investment on earth and that there was no possibility of loss; and yet they lost every dollar they invested.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Is it not a fact that this company advertised that these certificates were safe, and that they were backed up by a $10,000,000 guaranty fund?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that was one of the advertisements.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And was it not alleged in the advertisement that these funds were under the regulation and supervision of the insurance department of the State of New York?

Mr. NORRIS. Absolutely; that is correct.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. MURPHY. At the time referred to, was Mr. Hardy chairman of the executive committee of the mortgage company?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. I would not say that he was chairman at the time of all the defaults, but, as this letter says and the evidence shows, I have somewhere among the papers the amount of investment made in these certificates and the amount of money handled while Mr. Hardy was in the company and afterward. By far the major portion of the money was handled while he was a member of the board of directors and chairman of the executive committee.

Mr. MURPHY. My mind is not yet clear as to the investments. Presumably the facts as to them will be developed later. I wished to associate Mr. Hardy with the advertisements if it is a fact that he was chairman of the committee at the time the advertisements were published.

Mr. NORRIS. He was chairman of the committee at the time; yes. I cannot say that Mr. Hardy wrote these advertisements or that he ever read them; but I do say that they were put out and circulated among the people while he was connected with the company.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, does not the testimony show that at the very time while Mr. Hardy was still connected with the company, and at the very time these advertisements were being published, the official investigation made by the State of New York indicated that the guarantee fund was impaired?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir; it does show that.

I read further from the letter to which I have referred:

All the title companies were mismanaged, but this was the worst of all.

As I remember the testimony, Mr. Cook, who was the attorney, and spent 10 months on the investigation, stated in effect that while he investigated a great many of the title companies, and they were rotten, they were dishonest, this was the worst of the lot.

Further, it should be borne in mind that Martin Conboy, who preceded Mr. Hardy as United States attorney, was superseded as prosecutor of title companies at his own request merely because he had acted as counsel for one of the companies.

There is an example to set. This man Mr. Conboy, who had been United States attorney for that district, resigned because he had been attorney for one of these companies. That is vastly different from being attorney for the company, member of the board of directors, chairman of the executive committee, and drawing $165,000 for your services. If the same course had been followed by Mr. Hardy, he would not have accepted this appointment under any circumstances.

This writer further says:

The advocates of confirmation avoided the issue and devoted their efforts to show that Mr. Hardy had borne a good reputation at the bar.

I quite appreciate that a candidate who has the approval of the Senators of his own State rarely fails of confirmation. I suspect—

I shall not read that part of the letter, because the Senator from New York is here, and he may speak for himself if he wishes to do so.

The nomination is an affront to New York City. At this moment the administration of criminal justice here is in a lamentable state. Governor Lehman has superseded Mr. Dodge as district attorney for New York County, appointing Thomas E. Dewey to dig into the rackets. He has superseded Mr. Geoghan in Kings County by Hiram Todd to prosecute the Druckman murderers. The appointment of Mr. Hardy as Federal prosecutor would seriously impair public confidence in the administration of justice.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer another interruption?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In connection with the matter of the guarantee fund and the advertisements, I should like to direct the attention of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY] to the testimony of Mr. Spence, found on page 97 of the hearings. He says:

There is one feature about the guarantee fund to which I would like to call the attention of the committee in some detail, which will not take but a moment. I will call your attention to pages 80 and 81 of Mr. Halprint's report.

That is the official report of the investigation conducted by the Governor's investigators.

He shows there that the company purported to have in the guarantee fund $5,573,000 of assets. He finds the only assets listed by the company that fulfilled the requirements of section 16 were the assets entitled "Building Loans and Permanent Mortgages on Hand", in the amount of $1,034,000, in round numbers. He says, therefore, that there was a deficiency in the guarantee fund, as of January 2, 1930, of substantially $4,500,000. He finds there was a deficiency in the guarantee fund at the end of December 1930 of $3,095,077.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. MURPHY. Am I to understand, from what the Senator from Wisconsin has read, that in 1930 Mr. Hardy was the chairman of the executive committee?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I know he was an officer of the company, and it was in June 1930 that the advertisement was printed in the newspapers advising small investors that this was a safe and simple type of investment, because they were fully protected by this guaranty fund, when at that particular time, or at least between January 2, 1930, and December 1930, this advertisement appearing in June, the fund was between three million and four and a half million dollars impaired, so that the advertisement was false on its face.

Mr. MURPHY. It appears from a reading of page 138 of the hearings that Mr. Hardy recites that the last meeting of the executive committee he attended was in September 1931, so the presumption is that he was present at the meetings in 1930 when there was the deficiency in the fund referred to as a guaranty fund.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is correct, and, as I recall, some of those who were protesting against Mr. Hardy's confirmation offered to furnish the subcommittee a list of the times when he was present, and the subcommittee did not care to have it printed in the record, but it was filed with the committee.

Mr. VAN NUYS. O Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin should look at the report of the hearings, and he will find it incorporated in the report.

Mr. HATCH. On page 122.

Mr. VAN NUYS. Together with every other exhibit, every other memorandum, and evidence of the fact that every witness Mr. Cook asked for in the subcommittee hearing was called.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator is no doubt correct about that. I was misled by the statement that the paper was received and filed with the committee.

Mr. VAN NUYS. It appears in the transcript.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. POPE. Does the Senator know when Mr. Hardy severed his connection with the company?

Mr. NORRIS. On the 27th day of October 1931. He resigned as chairman of the executive committee a month or two before that, I believe.

Mr. President, it is doubtful in my own mind whether I ought to take up the time of the Senate to read the evidence showing what happened when the committee from the New York Bar Association appeared before the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate. The subcommittee reported to the full committee, and the full committee reported the nomination before the evidence was printed. I was not present at the meeting when the nomination was voted on by the Judiciary Committee, but there was a synopsis of the evidence furnished by the subcommittee. The evidence had not been printed when the Judiciary Committee acted on the nomination, however.

I am going to read a little of the examination, commencing on page 85.

Mr. Clarence J. Shearn was one of the witnesses. He was chairman of the committee which the bar association sent to Washington to appear before the subcommittee. I think he has shown by his testimony and his demeanor on the stand that he is a remarkably fine gentleman. As I read his testimony, he made a splendid showing. He held back what I think he would have been justified in saying, perhaps, from the way the examination was conducted, and the way he was prevented from giving information which would not have been very friendly or favorable; but he was a perfect gentleman through it all. The same may be said of Mr. Cook, who followed him, and who, as I have said, was intimately connected with this investigation, and knew of his own personal knowledge of the happenings about which he was testifying.

Mr. Shearn started to testify, but he did not get very far before he was interrupted. When he would start on a subject he would be interrupted. The nature of the questions indicated that the members thought he was rather out of place in being there, that he was unnecessarily taking up the time of the committee, that they did not want to hear his testimony, that the facts about which he was testifying were set out in the exhibits.

The first part of the hearings, comprising about 80 pages, I believe, is composed of letters and telegrams of recommendation and congratulation sent to Mr. Hardy, to the Attorney General, to the President, and to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, congratulating him on receiving this nomination. I have never known such thing to happen before, but nearly half the hearings is taken up with the printing of these letters, such letters as usually never appear at a hearing; but they did appear at this point. They are interesting reading, they are all short, they are all about the same. They are to the effect, "I know this man; he is a fine lawyer, he is a fine citizen, he is a patriot." I have no doubt they all tell the truth. I have no doubt that Mr. Hardy is a very able attorney. At least, no one has questioned his ability.

I do not desire to find fault with those who favor the confirmation of Mr. Hardy, because very noted gentlemen in New York do favor it, have favored it, and have advocated confirmation of the nomination. But I must take all the evidence together in forming my judgment, and my conclusion is that it would be a terrible mistake to install this man in the office of district attorney for the southern district of New York.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that he was installed by recess appointment last autumn.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; he was.

Mr. BARKLEY. And has been serving some 6 months.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator know anything about the manner in which he has performed his duties during the 6 months?

Mr. NORRIS. No; the only thing I know about that is from one of the letters, or news items, which I have read, which stated he had not yet tried a lawsuit. I did not pay any attention to that, however. He might be in that office a year and not try a lawsuit, and yet be a perfectly efficient officer. I concede that.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will yield again, my question was prompted by the statement the Senator made a moment ago that in view of certain conditions in New York, which he outlined, the appointment of Mr. Hardy would not be encouraging to those who believed in law enforcement.

Mr. NORRIS. It certainly would not be.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wondered whether his 6 months' tenure in the office had given any color to that fear.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think so. If there is any such feeling in the city of New York, I do not know of it. Of course, there might be.

Now I read from the examination of Mr. Shearn:

Senator DIETERICH. Do you think it would be more proper for the bar association to present its evidence in such manner as might reflect upon the character or integrity or ethics of Mr. Hardy, after these numerous tributes have been paid to him, instead of having us try cases that are absolutely foreign to anything we have a right to consider? Do you expect the committee to try the cases that grew out of all these mortgage companies in New York?

Mr. SHEARN. I do not. If I may answer one of your questions first, we are not asking you to try any of these cases or to try Mr. Hardy on any theory that he is guilty of a violation of law. We make the point and urge upon you that, while he terminated his connection with that company, the fact that he was one of its organizers, the fact that he was a director and a member of its executive committee for 4½ years and chairman of the executive committee, the fact that within 2 years he received $165,000 as legal fees from one of its associated companies, the fact that he had that intimate connection with this company, the fact that thousands of investors suffered great losses through the activities of that company, tends to undermine public confidence in Mr. Hardy.

Senator DIETERICH. Is it not true that a great many concerns of that kind, in passing through that critical period, caused considerable losses to investors? If the intimate connection of an attorney with a client, when that client may have been guilty of some wrongdoing that resulted in losses to investors, would reflect upon the attorney to the extent to disqualify him from holding public office, very few attorneys would be qualified for public office. Is that not true?

Mr. SHEARN. I think there is a very clear distinction between an attorney advising or counseling with a client, and a man sitting as a member and chairman of that client's executive committee.

Senator DIETERICH. You get what I have in mind, do you not? I want to find out whether or not Mr. Hardy's conduct has been such that it would be unsafe to put him in charge of prosecutions or to take charge of the business of the Government as district attorney.

Mr. SHEARN. We feel that he should not be confirmed for that office.

Senator DIETERICH. I understand you do, but is it based entirely on that?

Mr. SHEARN. On what?

Senator DIETERICH. On his association with this mortgage company.

Mr. SHEARN. There is no question about that. That is a concern which has been marked in the report as showing great violations of law, which has been marked by terrible losses on the part of investors.

Senator DIETERICH. Is that not true of most mortgage companies?

Mr. SHEARN. It has been marked by the trial and conviction of its president; by the indictment of the company itself; by the indictment of a number of its directors for misleading advertisements put out while he was chairman of the executive committee.

That answers the question of the Senator from Iowa.

Senator DIETERICH. But there has been no indictment of Mr. Hardy?

Mr. SHEARN. If we have to distinguish or determine, in dealing with the requisites for the office of district attorney, whether the appointee has ever been indicted or convicted of a crime, it would seem rather difficult.

I submit, Mr. President, that as we read all the examinations of the witnesses, it seems that the able attorneys who were examining were going on the theory that unless Mr. Hardy had been indicted, unless he had been convicted of a crime, in view of the fact that he was a good lawyer and could try a lawsuit, he would be all right for district attorney. If that is the theory, if that is what the Senate believes in, it ought to confirm this man. But they went on the theory, and I believe every citizen in the United States knowing anything about the matter will go on the theory, that one of the causes of the terrible depression which overtook this country was the conduct of thousands of dishonorable, dishonest, illegal organizations, just like this mortgage company, which were taking tribute from God's poor, robbing the investors of what they had saved up perhaps in a lifetime, robbing the orphans and the widows. Even though those who robbed these poor people did so under the guise of law, even though they have never been indicted or tried or convicted, if that is the kind of a district attorney we must have, and if we must put such a man in office just because he is a good lawyer and because when Uncle Sam gets into a lawsuit he can try it properly, then I have not any conception of what a district attorney or other officer of the United States ought to be. I submit that he ought to be an example of honesty, of honor, so that those who do not hold office, the rank and file of our citizens, may know that those who wear the emblem of official authority are honest men, honorable men, who have not wrongfully taken anything from anybody.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], a member of the subcommittee, asked Mr. Shearn further:

Do you defend people before the United States district court?

Mr. SHEARN. I have never been engaged in criminal practice.

Senator DIETERICH. Do you ever have any civil practice before the United States district court in which the services of the United States district attorney would be engaged on the other side?

Mr. SHEARN. Not that I am aware of. If I had, I might have sent him a message of congratulation.

I think there is a little irony in that answer which the Senate ought to get. That may explain some of the telegrams and letters of congratulation which are printed in the hearings.

Senator DIETERICH. That might be.

Mr. SHEARN. No; I am in the Federal courts very little.

Senator DIETERICH. How long have you known Mr. Hardy?

Mr. SHEARN. Since about 1913, I think.

Senator DIETERICH. Have you ever heard his integrity questioned?

Mr. SHEARN. Never.

Senator VAN NUYS. Has he ever been guilty of any moral turpitude that you know of?

Mr. SHEARN. Unless you draw that inference from the activities of this company with which he was connected.

Senator VAN NUYS. I am familiar with that. I have read these records. You would not say he was guilty of moral turpitude, would you?

Mr. SHEARN. I would say that these activities of this company with which he was connected during that long period, in view of his important and intimate relationship to them, would certainly be far from creditable to Mr. Hardy.

Senator DIETERICH. Let me ask you a question as between lawyers. You say it has been a long practice that candidates for judicial offices and quasi-judicial offices have been submitted to the bar association and their moral and ethical qualifications vouched for by the association.

Mr. SHEARN. Sometimes.

Senator DIETERICH. That is true, is it not?

Mr. SHEARN. Sometimes.

Senator DIETERICH. Is the reason you are pressing this protest of the bar association because they seem to be drifting away from the practice?

Mr. SHEARN. Senator, you seem to be conducting an inquisition of me.

Senator DIETERICH. You are a witness, and we have the right to know that.

Mr. SHEARN. Senator, it is not. That is not correct. Of course, it would not be becoming in me to offer any criticism of that.

Senator DIETERICH. Do you believe that anybody should delegate its authority, as we have in Congress, which is very limited, to any other body?

Mr. SHEARN. I do not ask you to delegate anything, but I do think you should pay some attention to what an association of over 3,000 members in the city of New York has to say about a man up for confirmation.

Then a Mr. Spence testified before the subcommittee. His examination was much the same as that of the previous witness.

Then came Alfred A. Cook. Senators must remember that Alfred A. Cook is the man whose personal knowledge about this mortgage company is greater than that of any other person whose testimony appears in the record. He is the attorney who worked on this investigation for 10 months. As I said in the beginning, he worked without pay, at the request of the Governor of the State of New York. He tried to testify. He had some difficulty in doing so because of the examination which went on, and from time to time he was diverted from what he was trying to say. I desire to read some of his testimony:

Mr. Cook. Irrespective of all that, I do not see how it is possible—I may be in error and I say this with deference—in the public interest for the Senate to confirm, in a situation such as this, anybody who was actively connected with the affairs of this company, whether he personally did this or that. It is impossible for me to conceive that such is a proper appointment. With this record before you, with the evidence of the fact that Mr. Hardy took an active part in the affairs of this company, because he was present at something like 70 meetings out of 83 of the board of directors and executive committee, I think you must conclude that he either knew what was going on, or, if he did not know what was going on, then, as a director, he should have known.

I submit, Senators, that it ought not to be possible for a man who was paid $165,000 for 2 years' work to cover himself up with the cloak that while he held this office, while he was in this important position, while he organized the company, while he was taking the money which came from widows and orphans and small investors, nevertheless he did not know what was going on in the company. As a matter of law he was chargeable, and he ought morally to be chargeable, with notice of what the board did.

Senator DIETERICH. All these suits and prosecutions that were brought against the company occurred after he had ceased to be a director and had severed his connection with the company.

Mr. Cook. I know; but one of the suits was brought against Mr. Hardy and other directors by reason of waste and negligence.

Senator DIETERICH. For what years?

Mr. Cook. During the time he was there. That was when the waste and the negligence occurred.

Senator DIETERICH. That is a civil action?

Mr. Cook. Yes, sir.

Senator DIETERICH. That is still undetermined?

Mr. Cook. That is still undetermined, but that is the action where the defendant came to court and offered a settlement. Mr. Hardy offered, as I recall it, $16,500 in payment of his liability. I believe Mr. Hardy says he did that in order to get rid of the suit, and it was cheaper to do it that way than otherwise.

A suit against me would have to be a pretty important one before I should think it was cheaper to pay $16,500 than to try the lawsuit.

If I misquote him, I want to be corrected.

Mr. Hardy was right there on the other side of the table. He heard this statement.

If I misquote him, I want to be corrected. There was a suit brought for negligence and waste during the period that he was a director. There are other civil suits against Mr. Hardy, many of more serious nature than that.

Senator DIETERICH. We have plenty of reputable citizens who have civil suits brought against them.

Mr. Cook. Yes.

Senator DIETERICH. You would not disqualify anyone by reason of that?

Mr. Cook. No.

Senator DIETERICH. Those civil suits are all based upon breach of contract of some kind, are they not?

Just note that answer:

Mr. Cook. But these suits for waste and negligence, every one of them alleges fraud.

Senator DIETERICH. They might allege fraud, but it has not yet been proven.

Mr. Cook. No.

Mr. President, the testimony I have just read about Mr. Hardy offering $16,500 to satisfy his liability is not denied. At least he went on the stand after that statement, after he had sat there and heard the testimony of Mr. Cook, and did not deny it; so I take it that he must have felt there was some reason to believe that the suit would go against him when it was finally determined, and he was willing to pay $16,500 to settle it.

Mr. President, although there are several other matters of interest which might well be presented, it would seem that I am wearying Senators by taking up so much time, so for the present, and until and if something is said which I think needs refutation, I shall yield the floor.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4212) to amend section 2 of the National Housing Act, relating to the insurance of loans and advances for improvements upon real property, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, as chairman of the subcommittee which considered the nomination of Mr. Hardy, I think it incumbent upon me to state very briefly the facts as I know them to be, after having listened to every word of the testimony and having read all the exhibits submitted at the hearing. While I have great respect for the conscientious work of the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], yet I feel that he has drawn some unwarranted conclusions from certain excerpts from the evidence.

As to the unfairness of the committee, I may say that at the close of the second day's hearing, which was the end of the hearings, Mr. Cook came to me personally and thanked me for the courteous and fair manner in which the hearings had been conducted. I know of no one more interested in the outcome of the consideration of the nomination than Mr. Cook. I vouch for the truthfulness of that statement.

Mr. Hardy received an ad-interim appointment in November 1935. He is serving as United States attorney under that appointment at this time. The two Senators from New York and the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], Mr. Hardy's native State, can tell more about his honorable lineage than can I; but I say without reservation, after having served as chairman of many subcommittees of the Judiciary Committee to pass upon the question of the confirmation of nominations for United States attorneys, Federal judges, United States marshals, and so forth, that never has a nominee come to the city of Washington and appeared before the Judiciary Committee with such a volume of unqualified endorsements as did Lamar Hardy in this particular instance.

John W. Davis, ex-Governor Miller, Col. "Bill" Donovan, judges of the Supreme Court of New York, judges of the court of appeals, judges of the United States district court, men of the highest type and character in scores of instances unqualifiedly approved this nomination. Nor does Mr. Cook or any member of the small percentage—and it is a very, very small percentage—of the Bar Association of New York opposed to confirmation attack the character or the legal attainments of this nominee.

When Mr. Cook was on the witness stand I asked him what his objection to this man was. He said it was confined solely to his connection with the State Mortgage & Title Co.; that outside of Mr. Hardy's activities with that company he considered Mr. Hardy eminently fit to serve as United States attorney for the southern district of New York.

I wish I had time, but I must be brief, to read to the Senate the long list of distinguished judges, citizens, lawyers, and representative men and women of the State of New York and also of the State of Mississippi who support the confirmation of this nomination.

The distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] makes much of the statement that Mr. Hardy received a total sum of $165,000 as attorney for the company to which reference has been made. The truth of the matter is that Mr. Hardy did not receive $165,000 as attorney for the company. The undisputed evidence shows that he received $165,000 for his work for three or four companies. He received from the State Title & Mortgage Co. $30,000 for four and a half years' work, an average of $7,500 a year, which no lawyer in the Senate would question as unreasonable compensation from a mortgage and title company having investments running into many, many million dollars.

That is just another evidence of the unfairness of the small clique—for that is what it was—in the Bar Association of New York which came down here and opposed this nomination. The records were open to all of them for all the years in question; and yet they made the assertion that Mr. Hardy received $165,000 from this company, when they knew, because the records were accessible to them, that he never received over $7,500 a year for his services to the company during 4½ years.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VAN NUYS. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Do I understand that this man was chairman of the board of directors of this company?

Mr. VAN NUYS. He was chairman of the executive committee.

Mr. WHEELER. And while he was serving as chairman of the executive committee did the company send out advertisements containing false representations with reference to the company?

Mr. VAN NUYS. Does the Senator mean in the official statements of the company to the State of New York?

Mr. WHEELER. In the official statements or in the company's advertisements.

Mr. VAN NUYS. I was coming to that matter directly. The Senator from Nebraska dwells upon the fact that indictments have been returned in the State courts against several of the officers of this company. That is true; but every one of the indictments was based upon activities which took place long after Mr. Hardy had severed his connection with the company.

Mr. WHEELER. What I had reference to was the time while he was chairman of the executive committee. Were any of the false representations sent out during that time or any of the advertisements misrepresenting the actual facts in the case?

Mr. VAN NUYS. No misrepresentations were contained in any official statement to the insurance department of the State of New York or any other department. Advertisements were inserted in the New York newspapers which may or may not be said to be misleading. At that time the company was entirely solvent.

Mr. WHEELER. What I wish to find out is, Were misleading statements sent out while Mr. Hardy was chairman of the executive committee?

Mr. VAN NUYS. If they may be denominated misleading, they were sent out during that period. Of course, Mr. Hardy had nothing whatever to do with that department. The company had over 100 employees, and auditors such as Ernst & Ernst audited every dollar of the assets and liabilities before any dividends were declared or any statements published. Simpson, Thatcher & Bartlett, one of the distinguished law firms of New York City, prepared all the mortgage indentures, and did all that sort of legal work for the company. The company had the highest grade loan committee that it was possible to assemble in the State of New York. The former comptroller for the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., who had passed on more mortgages and appraised the values of more real estate in the city of New York than any other man in that city, was chairman of the loan committee.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VAN NUYS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I understand that in connection with the activities of this company several indictments were brought in, and that no indictment was brought in against Mr. Hardy.

Mr. VAN NUYS. That is correct.

Mr. CLARK. Is it not fair to believe that if Mr. Hardy's activities had been blameworthy, or if there was any ground for any charge against him in connection with the activities of the company, he also would have been indicted?

Mr. VAN NUYS. I think that is a fair presumption; but I have read the indictments word for word, and, as I have told the Senate, they are based on facts and activities of the company which took place long after Mr. Hardy had severed his connection with the company.

Mr. CLARK. The point I desire to make is that a grand-jury investigation of the company, going into the whole subject, if it was an honest investigation, naturally would have included Mr. Hardy. Apparently, the grand jury did not find anything blameworthy in Mr. Hardy's conduct.

Mr. VAN NUYS. That is a proper conclusion. I thank the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. VAN NUYS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I could not hear all of the inquiry of the Senator from Montana; but, as I understood, he asked about something which is claimed to have taken place entirely after Mr. Hardy had left the company.

I find on page 115—and, because I did not hear all that was said, I do not know whether this fits in or not—the following testimony by Mr. Cook:

When the superintendent of insurance examined into that prior to January 2, 1930, he found a deficiency of some $3,000,000 in that so-called guaranty fund.

Mr. VAN NUYS. I shall go to that subject directly.

Mr. NORRIS. It is true that that deficiency was not immediately reported. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] asked when the report was made. The answer was that the report was made December 16, 1935; but, as the evidence showed, there was a deficiency of $3,000,000 in the guaranty fund on January 2, 1930. That, of course, was while Mr. Hardy was connected with the company.

Mr. VAN NUYS. Directing the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to that particular instance—and I shall quote from the record in a few minutes—it was a very serious legal question what securities were eligible for the guaranty fund. The best lawyers of New York were questioned about that matter on the witness stand. One of them said it was a legal fiction, it was a matter of bookkeeping, more than anything else. Later legislation on the subject was passed which was not in existence at the time Mr. Hardy was there; but the attorney for the Superintendent of Insurance, the counsel for that department, passed on the securities and held that they were eligible for the guaranty fund. I do not know what else the company could do. If the counsel for the State superintendent of insurance said, "Here are certain securities, and they are eligible for the guaranty fund", I do not know what further authority a man should require.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield at that point, that may be a technical legal excuse for the kind of case the Senator has put; but if the securities put up were in default, were not up to the standard required by law, the fact that they were approved by the person who was to handle them merely indicates that he, as well as the other fellow, was in on the fraud.

Mr. VAN NUYS. I may say, in answer to that question, that that certainly is the most pertinent and material indictment against this nominee. To me it was a very serious indictment. In answer to it I wish to quote a statement by Hon. Nathan L. Miller, former Republican Governor of New York, known to every Member of the Senate, at least by reputation.

Governor Miller appeared at the hearing on this resolution before the bar association in New York. He appeared on behalf of Mr. Halprin. That was on the 9th of January 1936. Governor Miller said:

I am authorized to say that in an interview with Mr. Halprin—

Mr. Halprin is the man who conducted the examination against the State Title Co. for the superintendent of insurance. He is quoting Mr. Halprin himself:

I am authorized to say that in an interview with Mr. Halprin as late as January 4—

That was 5 days before the hearing of the bar association—he stated that the State Title Co. was one of the two companies in the whole State that did not sell mortgages or certificates with arrears in taxes and that the insurance department never had a complaint from any certificate holder or mortgage holder that a certificate or mortgage sold to him was in default of taxes, interest, or anything else; that the investigation made by the department clearly showed that State Title was the only company operating in New York City against which no complaint was made because of the sale of certificates or mortgages when taxes were in arrears and that he did not find any mortgage or certificate—

This is Halprin himself speaking, I may say to the Senator—that he did not find any mortgage or certificate sold that had any default on it at all.

Mr. NORRIS. That is contrary to the testimony of Mr. Cook, who made the investigation.

Mr. VAN NUYS. It is absolutely contrary to the testimony.

Mr. NORRIS. That there were such cases—and he gives the dates and amounts—and, as far as the guaranty fund is concerned, I have the testimony right before me now where it is shown that they did not comply; that mortgages were sold even after foreclosure; that the interest was not paid; that the taxes were not paid; that they did not comply with any moral obligation of any kind.

Mr. VAN NUYS. It becomes a question of credibility of witnesses, and I would take the appointee of the State, Mr. Halprin, who has spent years in this activity, rather than the statement of the chairman of an investigating committee who goes out to find certain facts and always finds them and does not produce the countervailing facts which may discredit the conclusions.

Mr. NORRIS. The committee of which Mr. Cook was chairman was not appointed for that purpose. It was appointed by the Governor.

Mr. VAN NUYS. I mean the committee of the bar association.

Mr. NORRIS. He had to use the same man who was acting for the Governor in making this investigation. As I remember, he said that this title company was the worst of all; and if it was not bad, if no complaint had ever been made against it, it would follow, I think, that we would expect to find that all of the investors were paid. The Senator will not deny that they all lost, will he?

Mr. VAN NUYS. Oh, the Senator will not deny that there were 16 or 18 companies, of which this was one of the small ones. This one, I think, had $35,000,000 in default at the time of the investigation; others had $800,000,000, $700,000,000, and so on. They were all under the supervision of the superintendent of insurance and are being rehabilitated, and if real-estate values come back, as most of us hope and believe they will, these companies will be solvent within a very short time. Those are the facts in the case.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VAN NUYS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am very much interested in the question concerning the guaranty fund, because, as I understand, there is no denial of the fact that at the time Mr. Hardy was connected with the company it did issue and circulate, through the medium of newspaper advertising, a statement in which the absolute safety of the certificates and the prompt payment of principal and interest were unequivocally, unconditionally guaranteed by a fund. Then, if the Senator will refer to page 97, in the testimony of Mr. Spence, he will find that he refers to the report of Mr. Halprin, whom the Senator has been quoting with favor, and refers to pages 80 and 81 of Mr. Halprin's testimony. Mr. Spence states that pages 80 and 81 of Mr. Halprin's report show that the company purported to have in the guaranty fund $5,573,000 of assets, and he states, "He finds the only assets listed by the company that fulfilled the requirements of section 16 were the assets entitled 'Building Loans and Permanent Mortgages on Hand', in the amount of $1,034,000, in round numbers. He says, therefore, that there was a deficiency in the guaranty fund, as of January 2, 1930, of substantially $4,500,000. He finds there was a deficiency in the guaranty fund at the end of December 1930 of $3,095,077.

Can the Senator state whether or not that statement made by Mr. Spence concerning the facts to be found on pages 80 and 81 of Mr. Halprin's report is correct or incorrect?

Mr. VAN NUYS. I can only quote from Mr. Halprin's report further, where he says that it was the opinion of counsel for all the mortgage companies, 16 or 18 of them, and apparently of counsel for the insurance department, that if mortgages had been at any time in good standing, and counted in the guaranty fund, such mortgages continued to be available to be counted, even though the real estate had depreciated.

It is just a question of the legal interpretation of the statute whether or not the securities deposited in the guaranty fund were eligible. Some of the best lawyers said they were, others said they were not. That is about the only conclusion one can arrive at after giving a good deal of thought to the question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Has the Senator made reference to the particular pages of Mr. Halprin's report referred to by Mr. Spence?

Mr. VAN NUYS. I think that if the Senator from Wisconsin will look at pages 19 and 20, he will find it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In the printed hearings?

Mr. VAN NUYS. Either the printed hearings, or in the report which I hold in my hand; I am not sure which.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As I understand, the Halprin report was not made a part of the committee record.

Mr. VAN NUYS. No; it was just placed on file, subject to examination.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I have found a statement of Governor Miller, in which he says that he is informed that the firm of Simpson, Thacher & Bartlett prepared all of the indentures for group series and certificated mortgages and were the consultants in connection with the problems affecting the issuance and sale of those securities, and that two other lawyers—Mr. Kovin and Mr. Donegan—who were vice presidents of the company, supervised all of the actual details, and that during the entire period referred to in the report, Mr. Hardy was engaged in and maintained an office for the general practice of law. Is that statement correct?

Mr. VAN NUYS. That is correct. Some materiality has been attached to the fact that the city chamberlain of the city of New York invested in these securities and lost a lot of money. The city chamberlain is an official of the court who invests the trust funds of wards of the court, minors, people of unsound mind, that type of people.

The city chamberlain is supposed to be one of the best judges of the value of real estate and of bona-fide securities in the whole city of New York. Most of these investments were made upon order of the court, after investigation as to their value and validity. I think one of the highest compliments that could be paid to the mortgage company in question is that the city chamberlain of the city of New York, under order of court, after petition and hearing, invested millions of dollars in this particular mortgage and title company. Instead of that action being used as an indictment against the company, it seems to me to be one of the most admirable endorsements of the good faith of the company and the value of its securities.

I wish to refer to one other matter. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has criticized the subcommittee somewhat because of its attitude. It also has developed that the investigating committee headed by Mr. Cook may be subjected to similar criticism. The truth is that after the President made the ad-interim appointment of Mr. Hardy, and he took his office, this self-constituted committee of censorship, composed of a small part of the Bar Association of New York, invited Mr. Hardy to appear before it and show reason why he should be appointed United States attorney for the southern district of New York. On that committee of 12 there was 1 prominent lawyer defending a claim brought by the Government against his client for over $6,000,000. There were three other lawyers defending substantial claims brought by the Government. Mr. Hardy said, "I will not put myself under obligation to you gentlemen. I have an undivided loyalty to the Government of the United States."

Mr. President, I glory in Mr. Hardy's independence. As one of the witnesses said, if he had subjected himself to that committee and put himself under obligation to lawyers of that type, he would have disqualified himself, in the witness' opinion, as a nominee for the position of United States attorney, and I am sure the Senator from Nebraska will agree with that statement.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the nominee was so sensitive, he certainly would not let the fact that one member of the bar association committee or two or three members of the bar association committee had cases against the United States make him feel as though he would be disqualified if he went before the committee. If he felt so sensitive, it seems to me he ought to have told the President, as the editorial which I read said he ought to do, that he did not wish to embarrass the President or his administration or the administration of justice in New York, and he ought not to have permitted his name to come before the Senate at all, as a candidate, under all the circumstances.

Mr. VAN NUYS. I suggest to the Senator that it was not a question of being sensitive, but it was a question of a man having fine sensibilities, which this man demonstrated by refusing to attend the committee meeting.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not believe Mr. Hardy would have been subject to criticism had he gone before the committee. In fact, I think he ought to have gone to the meeting of the committee, no matter who was on the committee, if he had any defense to make, and ought to have made it. If he had done so, in my opinion, it would not have put him under any obligation to some attorney who had an action pending against the United States.

Mr. VAN NUYS. That is just a difference of opinion, Mr. President. I think it would; and I think Mr. Hardy is to be complimented upon his undivided loyalty, as I stated previously.

Mr. NORRIS. At least nobody criticized him for not going. The committee desired to be fair. It said, "You may appear here."

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, I desire to say in conclusion that if Mr. Hardy had gone before the committee of the bar association and those gentlemen defending millions of dollars' worth of claims against the United States had endorsed him, we never should have had this difficulty presented to us.

That is all I have to say.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it would be absurd for me to attempt any discussion of the legal aspects of this case. But there is a human side to it which means much to me. I should not be satisfied to have the record terminated without speaking of that side of the problem.

In the beginning of his remarks, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] said that he had no personal knowledge of or acquaintance with Mr. Hardy. I am sorry that the Senator has not had that privilege. It is a privilege, one that I have enjoyed for nearly a quarter of a century. Because of my contacts with Mr. Hardy and my faith in him as a man, my opportunities to know something of his character, and my belief in his integrity, I want to say just a word or two about him.

In the first place, Mr. President, I desire to tell Senators that I was in Mr. Hardy's confidence in the matter of his appointment from the time it was broached to him by the President. Please do not misunderstand me. I do not make recommendations to the President and he never consults me about those he intends to make. But in this particular instance, Mr. Hardy, my friend, came to me to tell me that the President was anxious to have him made United States district attorney for the southern district of New York. He told me of his embarrassment by reason of the fact that he had had this request made of him, embarrassment because of his activities in his profession and in his own office; that it would be a personal and financial loss to him to accept the office. But the President had asked him to do it, and he felt that perhaps, in view of his long-time, close relationship with Mr. Roosevelt, he ought to accede to the request. The matter drifted along for some months, when I learned from Mr. Hardy that the request had been renewed.

It does not seem to me that a man who is drafted for a job could be considered as one who might, by reason of his acceptance of the office, improperly serve former associates. If Mr. Hardy had been an active candidate for this office, if I had had 300 letters from his friends, such letters as we have recorded in the volume of the hearings, that would create quite a different impression. But Mr. Hardy is in this embarrassing position today by reason of the fact that he was commandeered by the President of the United States to take a place he never sought, to undertake this important work in New York.

I can quite understand why the President wanted Mr. Hardy. He has been tested in the fire of public opinion through many years. He was corporation counsel under Mr. Mitchel, a reform mayor, and had a distinguished career in that office. He brought to the position a degree of intelligence, legal training, and efficiency such as that office has rarely had. As an intelligent, well-informed citizen of the State of New York, of course, Mr. Roosevelt, first as a private citizen and afterward as Governor of the State, knew of the achievements of this fine, outstanding character. I was not and am not surprised that the President in looking over the field in New York chose this particular man.

The other day I opposed, and shall continue to oppose certain nominations of the President which I think are uncalled-for nominations. But I am glad to support the nomination of Mr. Hardy, not because of the political endorsement he has from that group of the Democratic Party of New York to which I belong, because he has not that endorsement so far as I know, but because my endorsement, my hearty and sincere endorsement of Mr. Hardy, arises from the fact that I know the man. Doubtless I have made many mistakes in my estimates of men, but after all a doctor learns a lot about people that the layman never grasps, perhaps. In this instance there is no disagreement between the doctor and the multitude of other people who have gladly endorsed this nominee.

It may be unusual, as the Senator from Nebraska said, to include in a senatorial record a list of names such as we find here. Not until this afternoon did I look over that list. I find recorded here the names of men I know personally, and have known for years. For instance, we have the name of Samuel Seabury. Samuel Seabury is anathema to my branch of the Democratic Party. Nevertheless Samuel Seabury is an outstanding character, respected, if not beloved, by all of New York. He has said he is for Mr. Hardy.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Is that the same Seabury who appeared at the meeting of the bar association which considered the nomination and who advocated the adoption of a resolution against Mr. Hardy?

Mr. COPELAND. I am not familiar with what happened at the meeting of the bar association, not being a member of the bar. I do not know whether it is the same Samuel Seabury or not, but I find here a telegram of congratulation and best wishes from Samuel Seabury.

Mr. NORRIS. That would not necessarily be inconsistent with the fact that he did what I have suggested. If I am wrong, I should like to be corrected.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not know whether the Senator is wrong or not, but if Mr. Seabury, the man of whom the Senator from Nebraska speaks, is opposed to Mr. Hardy, then some of my New York friends will be all the more for him.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the Senator is reading some recommendations in which he himself does not believe?

Mr. COPELAND. I question that conclusion, but let me give one or two in which I certainly do believe.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to get the record straight about Mr. Seabury. The record shows that Mr. Seabury was advocating the adoption of a resolution condemning Mr. Hardy and afterwards sent him a letter of congratulation. I suppose that is on the same theory that the defeated candidate for office usually sends a letter of congratulation to the man who beat him.

Mr. COPELAND. It may be, but I hope the Senator has more reason than the one he just alleged for his opposition to Mr. Hardy; and, of course, he has, because he has already recited them.

I shall now refer to some persons who are better known to me than Mr. Seabury. I find a letter of congratulation—and I think I heard the Senator from Nebraska say a little while ago that the gentleman appeared before the committee in behalf of Mr. Hardy—from Mr. Nathan L. Miller, former Governor of the State of New York. It has been my duty to appear on the stump against Mr. Miller, yet for him I have always had very high regard and respect. I think when he speaks in approval of a candidate for office he is very sincere in the matter.

Then we have Mr. George Z. Medalie. He does not belong to my branch of the Democratic Party or any other branch of the Democratic Party. But he had long experience as United States district attorney in New York and gained the respect of the community because of the fine way in which he conducted that office. He was also the opponent of my colleague, but in spite of that fact and also that he has always opposed me in my appeals for votes, he is an upstanding man whom my colleague and I respect.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume an examination of the record and the newspapers at the time would disclose the fact that Mr. Hoover, when he was defeated by Mr. Roosevelt, sent Mr. Roosevelt a telegram of congratulation. Would the Senator infer from that that Mr. Hoover was going to support Mr. Roosevelt?

Mr. COPELAND. I hold no brief for Mr. Hoover. I assumed when Mr. Roosevelt was elected President that Mr. Hoover, as a good citizen, would say, "I am for you and wish you well."

Mr. President, I have not been so fortunate when I have run for office always to have my opponent telegraph me his congratulations. I stayed home on one election night, though wishing to go down and join the celebrants, because I felt I could not go until I had had that letter or telegram of congratulation from my opponent. I did not get it and I missed all the fun. But if Mr. Hoover sent this telegram of congratulation, he did the proper thing, as I see it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Byrd in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Those persons who are recorded as having congratulated Mr. Hardy were not opponents of his for the office to which he was appointed, so there is no analogy between a defeated candidate congratulating his successful opponent and the endorsement of Mr. Hardy by these different men.

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct. I thank the Senator and agree with him.

I do not know how much it may mean to other Members of the Senate, but to me it is very significant to find certain names included in this list. I find, for example, a letter from Mr. William T. Chadbourne, who happens to be a personal friend of mine. He might have been my opponent if he had had votes enough in the Republican convention at the time the opponent who did run against me was nominated. Mr. Chadbourne sent a letter to Mr. Hardy. Mr. Chadbourne is a bosom friend and had much to do with the election of the present mayor, Mr. LaGuardia, of the city of New York. My colleague [Mr. WAGNER] reminds me, sotto voce, that Mr. Chadbourne managed Theodore Roosevelt's campaign in 1912.

I find here a very cordial letter from the Reverend Dr. Christian F. Reisner, of New York. Dr. Reisner is the best-known Methodist preacher in the State of New York, pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle. He is a man who has taken an unusual interest in civic affairs in the city of New York, a man who is often critical even of his friends.

When I ran for the Senate in 1922 the wet and dry issue was about as bitter as it has ever been in my State. Outstanding Democrats like the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] had not yet turned wet! When I was a candidate in 1922 my good old friend Dr. Reisner, whom I had known in the West and with whom I had a rather intimate acquaintance extending over a period of 25 years, denounced me because, he said, "While Dr. COPELAND is a Methodist, he is running on a platform which is as wet as the Atlantic Ocean." But the Reverend Dr. Reisner—a just man, a man who has a right to express his opinion, and does so no matter where the chips may fall, as I have already indicated—writes a letter to the President of the United States to say:

I cannot resist the impulse to heartily congratulate you over the most excellent appointment of Lamar Hardy—

And so forth.

It is perhaps unnecessary to go along with this argument or with the recital of more names, but I find here the name of Arthur Woods. Arthur Woods—a wealthy man who had no need to participate in political life in any manner whatever—was one of the best police commissioners the city of New York ever had. Arthur Woods is pleased over this nomination. He is not a lawyer, so I do not suppose he went to the Bar Association to make any comments on the subject.

I find here the name of William L. De Bost. Mr. De Bost is a leading citizen of Staten Island. For years he was president of the New York Board of Trade. He is one of the finest Christian gentlemen I have ever known, and a man who is respected throughout the length and breadth of New York. He says:

There is some justice in politics after all.

And, speaking of the President—

And his picking you out for this position is most gratifying to all self-respecting citizens here.

I should like to have Mr. De Bost say that about me sometime.

Mr. President, I am not going to say more. If I were regarding this purely as a matter of politics, I should not be for Mr. Hardy. In the first place, I never had an appointment from the administration, and I never expect to have one. I have every reason to be in opposition to the appointments made by the administration. In the next place, Mr. Hardy is not endorsed, as I said a little while ago, by the branch of the Democratic Party in New York to which I belong. But disregarding politics entirely, and speaking to you Senators as one man to a group of men, regardless of mistakes that may have been made, regardless of captious criticism of unfortunate legal entanglements, in spite of all the things that might be said in bitterness—all of which I think can be and have been explained away—I am here to say to you, my dear colleagues, that we shall never be called upon to pass judgment upon a finer character than that upstanding citizen of my city, Mr. Lamar Hardy.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I do not want to delay the vote upon the question of the confirmation of Mr. Lamar Hardy. However, I should not wish to create, as a result of keeping quiet, any impression that I might be indifferent to Mr. Hardy's confirmation. I regard him—and that is my only reason for supporting him—as eminently qualified, from the standpoint of character and legal acumen, for this very high and important office.

I do not criticize those who appeared before the Judiciary Committee in opposition to the confirmation of Mr. Hardy, nor do I question their sincerity; but it will be noted that all of the opponents admit that Mr. Hardy is a man of fine character and exceptional capacity, which he has exhibited not only in the private practice of the law but also in public office.

My colleague has just mentioned the fact that Mr. Hardy was corporation counsel of New York, and thus headed what is, I think, the largest public legal office in the United States; and it is generally recognized that we have never had a more able and conscientious man in the position.

Any misapprehension as to the character and ability of Mr. Hardy, which may have arisen as a result of some of the things that have been said here, may be removed without difficulty.

Let me emphasize first of all that the district attorney of New York County made a thorough investigation of the conduct of the companies which have been discussed here this afternoon. Now, I am not here to condone a single act or offense of some of those who conducted some of these mortgage companies. In my judgment, there were some individuals guilty of fraud, and others probably of criminal offenses. But the investigation, when it was completed, clearly exonerated Mr. Hardy of any unworthy act, or of any impropriety in association with these companies.

Secondly, the attorney general of the State of New York made a thorough investigation of the conduct of the companies; and as a result of his investigation it was clearly established that Mr. Hardy was free from any kind of wrongdoing.

I desire to add only one other thing. Very recently, Mr. Lamar Hardy rendered a public service of great value to the people of New York, for which he neither asked nor received any compensation whatsoever. At the time the Bank of the United States failed, several years ago, about 500,000 depositors were threatened with the loss of all their savings. Together with Mr. Max D. Steuer, of New York, Mr. Lamar Hardy volunteered his services to the depositors of the institution; and for months, without any compensation, Mr. Hardy gave practically his entire time to the task of salvaging as much as could be salvaged for the depositors of the bank. He also attempted to bring about a reorganization of the bank.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. I am seeking information. I find, on page 94 of the testimony, the following statement by a man by the name of Spence. I do not know Mr. Spence, but I am assuming that his testimony is correct. He said:

Now, to get back to the situation under which that company was operating, in 1930 and 1931 it still continued to sell to the public property which had been foreclosed, and sold such mortgages to the public for 3 or 4 years. Not only that but that company sold to the chamberlain of the city of New York over $3,000,000 of securities, mortgage certificates, and straight mortgages. All but some $250,000 of those mortgages are in default.

In other words, he states that this company, during the period when this man was chairman of the executive committee, sold mortgages which had been foreclosed.

Mr. WAGNER. I may say to the Senator that although I would be quite willing to rely upon Mr. Hardy's word that he had nothing to do with the particular transaction which the Senator has mentioned, it is not necessary to rely on that alone. There have been investigations by the Attorney General of the United States and by the attorney general of the State of New York and by the district attorney of New York County, not only into the conduct of this company but of a number of other companies involved. All reached the conclusion, which even Mr. Cook and Mr. Shearn, as opponents of Mr. Hardy, have reached, that Mr. Hardy's well-earned reputation for character and integrity were in no way affected by those transactions.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator from Nebraska read an account—and I do not know whether it was in a newspaper or from the testimony—in which it was emphasized that none of the gentlemen in opposition questioned the integrity or the capacity of Mr. Lamar Hardy.

Mr. NORRIS. I could not hear all of the answer of the Senator to the Senator from Montana, but regardless of how many investigations might have been made, does the Senator excuse the conduct of that corporation, as shown in the testimony at the bottom of page 94, when over $3,000,000 was invested in those securities, and it was shown that all but $250,000 of these mortgages were in default?

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, I do not excuse it. I might say to the Senator that I am one of several attorneys in New York who have attempted to reorganize some other companies, so that we might save at least a part of the fortunes which had been invested in securities. What I do say is that I am convinced by all of these investigations that Mr. Hardy is not involved in any of the transactions which have been criticized.

Mr. NORRIS. At the time of these occurrences Mr. Hardy was a member of the board of directors and chairman of the executive committee of the company.

Mr. WAGNER. I may say that at the bar association meeting Mr. Seabury and Mr. Cook and a third gentleman, whose identity I do not recall, spoke in opposition to Mr. Hardy, but conceded that, so far as his character and his capacity were concerned, they were in no way impugned. The opposition merely expressed the fear that because of Mr. Hardy's association with these companies public confidence in him might not be inspired.

In answer to that, let me say that my colleague read letters and telegrams from some of the most eminent people in New York, not merely lawyers who practice in court but others, endorsing Mr. Hardy.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator knows from his experience, with applications being made to him for appointment to office, that practically anyone can get endorsements of that kind.

Mr. WAGNER. No.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; it might have been shown here that he was a member of the church, that he contributed to charity, and all that sort of thing, indicating very good qualities.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. Abram I. Elkus and a host of others of similar standing would not, if they had the slightest question about the integrity of Mr. Hardy, endorse him. These matters have all been publicized in New York, and it was after that was done that these particular endorsements came to Mr. Hardy. I do not rely upon that alone, however. I have read the testimony in the case, and I think I know my conscience, and if I were satisfied that Mr. Lamar Hardy was not, from the standpoint of character and capacity—and character more than capacity—qualified for this office, I would not support him. Unlike my colleague, I was never consulted with reference to this nomination, nor did Mr. Lamar Hardy confide in me to the extent of asking my advice as to whether he ought to accept the office or not.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Securities Act had been on the statute books when Mr. Lamar Hardy was a member of the board of directors and chairman of the executive committee of this title company, he would have been responsible, would he not, for the character of advertising that was put out to the public concerning the securities they were offering for sale?

Mr. WAGNER. So far as that is concerned, at the time when Mr. Hardy was connected with the company, as I understand, a report had been made by the superintendent of insurance in which he found this particular company not only solvent but profitable.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was not referring to the acts which resulted in the indictment of other directors of the company. I was confining my inquiry to the question as to whether or not Mr. Hardy, as a director and chairman of the executive committee of this company, would not have been liable under the provisions of the Securities Act for knowledge and responsibility as to advertising in the press of securities which his company was offering for sale.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not know enough about the facts to answer whether or not there would have been any civil liability.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understood the Senator was absolving Mr. Hardy from responsibility on the ground that he did not know what was going on, but, as a matter of fact, he was a director of this company; and he was chairman of its executive committee when it was issuing advertising, as I understand, to the people of New York asking them to invest in these securities because they were so safe and because they were protected by this guaranty fund, when Mr. Halprin's report showed that the guaranty fund at that time was impaired to the extent of some four and a half million dollars.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from New York whether he would be willing to suspend now and resume tomorrow.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; I would be willing.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is apparent that some more time, perhaps an hour, will be required to conclude consideration of the nomination now before the Senate. I therefore desire to submit a request for unanimous consent.

I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its labors today it take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow, and that at not later than 1 o'clock the Senate proceed to vote on the nomination.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest to the Senator that it would be more equitable to provide for some limitation of debate so that no one Senator or two or three Senators could occupy the entire time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I will have to change the request, in view of the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its labors today it take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow, and that the consideration of the nomination now before the Senate be resumed in open executive session when the Senate convenes tomorrow at 12 o'clock, and that no Senator thereafter shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes on the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Executive reports of committees are now in order.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BYRD in the chair). The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the next nomination in order on the calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

NAVAL AIR STATION, MIAMI, FLA.

The Senate resumed legislative session,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BYRD in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8372) to authorize the acquisition of lands in the vicinity of Miami, Fla., as a site for a naval air station and to authorize the construction and installation of a naval air station thereon, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WALSH. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. WALSH, Mr. TYDINGS, and Mr. HALE conferees on the part of the Senate.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect, this House do now adjourn.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, as we have just learned, one of our beloved colleagues from New York, Hon. STEPHEN A. RUDD, has departed this life. He was a man highly respected and beloved by the people of his district, and, as I have already indicated, he was beloved by his colleagues. At a later time we shall hold more appropriate exercises in his memory. In the meantime, I send to the desk resolutions which I ask to have read and immediately considered.

The resolutions (S. Res. 273) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. STEPHEN A. RUDD, late a Representative from the State of New York.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MARCH 31, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James S. Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Gracious Father, have us go in the path of Thy commandments and incline our hearts unto Thy testimonies. Let Thy mercies come to us, O Lord, even Thy salvation, according to Thy word. Do Thou arrest our attention and shape the character of our thoughts and desires. In Thee may we learn is the destiny of humanity; enrich it with the ministries of Thy knowledge; enfold the least and the feeblest, the noblest and divinest. We pray Thee to enable us to guard most jealously our impulses and our conceptions of our high calling, that the lament of failure may not be a minor note in our service. O keep our people from the coils of disobedience and from being guilty lovers of lawlessness. Enthuse us all with the spirit of a deep sense of moral government and with the courage of a mighty crusade against the threatening vanities and selfish luxuries of modern life. O Prophet of God, may we be gratefully mindful of Thee as we approach earth's greatest hour. We kneel at the altar of our souls in recognition of Thy providence. An honored Member, a splendid citizen, and a good man has left us. Comfort the sorrowing loved ones and keep them in perfect peace. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 11945. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Department of Public Works of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for the construction, maintenance, and operation of certain free highway bridges to replace bridges destroyed by flood in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, just before we adjourned last evening, at my request there was an arrangement whereby we were to have a roll call on the passage of the Commodity Credit Corporation bill. I have changed my mind and withdraw my demand for a roll call vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1937

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 11035) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman tell us by how much the bill was increased in the Senate?

Mr. PARKS. The Senate increased the bill fifty-odd millions. It is because of this we are asking the conference, and I sincerely trust the gentleman will stay with us when we come back.

Mr. RICH. This is the War Department appropriation bill.

Mr. PARKS. Yes; but the increase was in the nonmilitary activities, rivers and harbors.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman recall that the House increased the bill $120,445,036 over last year's appropriation?

Mr. PARKS. I think the gentleman's figures are wrong.

Mr. RICH. No I am not wrong, the figures are correct. When the House of Representatives increased this bill $120,000,000 and over it was excessive.

Mr. PARKS. It was within the Budget.

Mr. RICH. Who made out this Budget?

Mr. PARKS. The powers that be, of course; the people who brought back prosperity made it out.

Mr. RICH. Whom does the gentleman mean by "the powers that be", who are they in Washington?

Mr. PARKS. The people who brought us back from this terrible depression we were in, the people who got this country so the gentleman's concern said, "We have had the best year in many, many years"; they are the people who helped make this Budget.

Mr. RICH. The people who brought back prosperity?

Mr. PARKS. That is right.

Mr. RICH. If there is prosperity, I should like to know just exactly where it is.

Mr. PARKS. In the gentleman's manufacturing concern. That statement was made on the gentleman's own letterhead.

Mr. RICH. There is no use getting funny about this.

Mr. PARKS. I am not funny; I am awfully serious.

Mr. RICH. This is not going to be funny; this is one of the most serious things facing the Nation today. The most serious problem we have facing this Nation today is unemployment; people in need. There is only one thing for us to do, and that is to conduct the affairs of Government in a sound, sensible, businesslike way. We owe certain obligations to the people back home, and I am trying to think of these people.

Every time we increase an appropriation bill over what it was the previous year we are increasing the cost of Government, and next year it will require larger appropriations than this year. The point I want to stress is that the sorrowful effects of this extravagance will not become apparent until the future. It is not what we are doing right now but what faces us in the future. We certainly are wrecking the Nation financially, and the future boys and girls will have to bear the burden.

Mr. PARKS. Will the gentleman now let me say one thing? We are asking this conference with the Senate in order that so far as it is possible and practicable we may stand by the figures of the House and not increase the bill by this fifty-odd millions of dollars, and I hope I may have the gentleman's assistance.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman certainly will have that.

I ask the gentleman if he does not think we ought to cut down the $121,000,000 increase the bill carried over last year? Otherwise we will be faced with a further increase next year.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKS. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The Senate has added amendments aggregating $62,000,000 to this bill. What the House of Representatives wants to do is to keep this $62,000,000 out of it. The House of Representatives kept this bill within the Budget, and it did not exceed the Budget until it went to the other end of the Capitol, and the Senate added numerous amendments carrying many millions of dollars to it.

Mr. RICH. The trouble with our conferees is that they let the Senate pull things over on them.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is very much mistaken about that. The House conferees are always able to hold their own with the Senate.

Mr. RICH. We want conferees who have some backbone.

Mr. BLANTON. I believe that the Speaker will appoint conferees who have plenty of backbone.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. PARKS, Mr. BLANTON, Mr. McMILLAN, Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania, Mr. DOCKWEILER, Mr. BOLTON, and Mr. POWERS.

THE DEPARTMENTS OF STATE, JUSTICE, THE JUDICIARY, COMMERCE, AND LABOR APPROPRIATION BILL, 1937

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 12093) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the Judiciary and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 2286), which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BACON reserved all points of order.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 4212) to amend section 2 of the National Housing Act, relating to the insurance of loans and advances for improvements upon real property, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

[To accompany S. 4212]

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4212) to amend section 2 of the National Housing Act, relating to the insurance of loans and advances for improvements upon real property, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the text of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"That section 2 of title I of the National Housing Act, as amended, is amended, effective April 1, 1936, to read as follows:

"Sec. 2. (a) The Administrator is authorized and empowered, upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, to insure banks, trust companies, personal finance companies, mortgage companies, building and loan associations, installment lending companies, and other such financial institutions, which the Administrator finds to be qualified by experience or facilities and approves as eligible for credit insurance, against losses which they may sustain as a result of loans and advances of credit, and purchases of obligations representing loans and advances of credit, made by them on and after April 1, 1936, and prior to April 1, 1937, or such earlier date as the President may fix by proclamation upon his determination that there no longer exists any necessity for such insurance in order to make ample credit available, for the purpose of financing alterations, repairs, and additions upon improved real property, and the purchase and installation of equipment and machinery upon such real property, by the owners thereof or by lessees of such real property under a lease expiring not less than six months after the maturity of the loan or advance of credit. In no case shall the insurance granted by the Administrator under this section to any such financial institution on the loans, advances of credit, and purchases made by such financial institution for such purposes on and after April 1, 1936, exceed 10 per centum of the total amount of such loans, advances of credit, and purchases. The total liability incurred by the Administrator for all insurance heretofore and hereafter granted under this section shall not exceed in the aggregate $100,000,000.

"(b) No insurance shall be granted under this section to any such financial institution with respect to any obligation representing any such loan, advance of credit, or purchase by it (1) unless the obligation bears such interest, has such maturity, and contains such other terms, conditions, and restrictions as the Administrator shall prescribe in order to make credit available for the purposes of this title, and (2) unless the amount of such loan, advance of credit, or purchase is not in excess of $2,000, except that in the case of any such loan, advance of credit, or purchase made for the purpose of such financing with respect to real property already improved by apartment or multiple-family houses, hotels, office, business, or other commercial buildings, hospitals, orphanages, colleges, schools, churches, or manufacturing or industrial plants, or improved by some other structure which is to be converted into a structure of any of the types herein enumerated, such insurance may be granted if the amount of the loan, advance of credit, or purchase is not in excess of $50,000: Provided, That after April 1, 1936, no insurance shall be granted under this section to any such financial institution with respect to any obligation representing any such loan, advance of credit, or purchase by it in the amount of $2,000 or less for the purpose of financing the purchase and installation of equipment and machinery upon improved real property.

"(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Administrator shall have the power, under regulations to be prescribed by him and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, to assign or sell at public or private sale, or otherwise dispose of, any evidence of debt, contract, claim, property, or security assigned to or held by him in connection with the payment of insurance heretofore or hereafter granted under this section, and to collect or compromise all obligations assigned to or held by him and all legal or equitable rights accruing to him in connection with the payment of such insurance until such time as such obligations may be referred to the Attorney General for suit or collection.

"(d) The Administrator is authorized and empowered, under such regulations as he may prescribe, to transfer to any such approved financial institution any insurance in connection with any loans and advances of credit which may be sold to it by another approved financial institution."

"Sec. 2. Section 3 of title I of the National Housing Act, as amended, is hereby repealed."

And the House agree to the same.

The House recedes from its amendment to the title of the bill.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4212) to amend section 2 of the National Housing Act, relating to the insurance of loans and advances for improvements upon real property, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate bill limited the loans, advances, and credit, and purchases of obligations representing loans and advances of credit made on and after April 1, 1936, to the financing of alterations, repairs, and additions upon improved real property and the purchase and installation of equipment and machinery upon such real property by the owners thereof or by leases of such real property under a lease for a period of not less than 1 year. Under this provision of the Senate bill, loans for new construction on vacant land would not be permitted but under the House amendment such loans would have been permitted. The conference agreement adopts the provision in the Senate bill in this respect, but in lieu of the provision with respect to leases contained in the Senate bill the conference agreement adopts the provisions of the House amendment, namely, that an eligible lessee should be one holding under a lease expiring not less than 6 months after maturity of the loan.

The House amendment also contained a provision, which was not contained in the Senate bill, under which the financing of the purchase and installation of equipment and machinery on real property was in connection with loans made to owners and lessees of property already improved by apartment or multiple-family houses, hotels, office, business, or other commercial buildings, hospitals, orphanages, colleges, schools, churches, or manufacturing or industrial plants. The conference agreement provides that the insurance provided for under the bill shall not apply to any loan in the amount of $2,000 or less for the purpose of financing the purchase and installation of equipment and machinery upon improved real property.

The House amendment also contained a provision not contained in the Senate bill under which the Administrator was authorized and empowered to transfer to any improved financial institution in connection with loans and advances of credit to it by another approved financial institution. The conference agreement retains this provision with minor clarifying amendments.

The House also recedes from its amendment to the title of the bill.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and fifty have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. BANKHEAD, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, since the House adjourned yesterday our beloved colleague, Congressman Rudd, of New York, has passed away. It was the purpose of the leadership of the House to adjourn immediately upon the call of the House this morning, except for the fact that a conference report on the Housing bill, extending its terms, has to be acted upon at once. The Housing Act expires tomorrow night. This conference report has already been adopted by the Senate. It is the purpose to send an airplane to the President to have this law continued before its expiration tomorrow night at 12 o'clock. For this reason, and this reason alone, the House is in session at this time, and, as I understand, we will adjourn immediately upon action being taken on this conference report.

Mr. Speaker, the conference report on the House bill is a unanimous report on both sides of the Congress. It was agreed to yesterday afternoon, and the Senate immediately adopted the report. It is desirable that the report be acted upon immediately in the House. Last evening I asked unanimous consent for immediate action in the House, but there was an objection. Under the rules action had to be deferred until this morning.

The House bill as adopted is practically as passed by the House, with the exception that the clause involving new construction on buildings covered by insured loans up to $2,000 was not left in the House bill. That provision was stricken at the instance of the Senate. The Senate agreed that equipment should be stricken out of the Senate bill, which, as I stated before, leaves this legislation practically in the form it left the House, with the one exception that the so-called cheap new construction involving loans up to $2,000 is no longer in the bill.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COLDEN. Does the striking out of this provision deprive the people of the greatest need in this country of the provisions of this aid?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I was just going into that feature. I can assure my friend that it does not deprive the people of this country of anything, and if the Members will bear with me I will try to explain why that is true.

Mr. Speaker, it was not intended by the Congress that new construction under title I involving loans of less than $2,000 should have been in the law, but after the law was passed it was construed as containing such a provision. The Federal Housing Administration was very reluctant to act under it, but they were compelled to do so. This has resulted in a racket which is destroying the modest home builders, and it is for their protection and their protection alone that this provision has been stricken from the legislation.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I notice in the conference report this statement:

The conference agreement provides that the insurance provided for under the bill shall not apply to any loan in the amount of $2,000 or less for the purpose of financing the purchase and installation of equipment and machinery upon improved real property.

As I understand this language, it simply means that a man who wants to install plumbing in his house or heaters or anything of that kind in a building of less than $2,000 cannot get it from the Housing Administration?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Of course, he could get aid for the installation of plumbing. The conference report shows no change from the bill as it passed the House on that proposition.

Mr. MAY. I would like to have the gentleman give us a little information on what the racket is, if this is eliminated.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The provision which the gentleman refers to is exactly as it left the House. There is no change in that. It is only in this new construction of buildings that the change has been made in the conference report.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CARPENTER. May loans of $2,000 be made for repairs?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes. It is only new construction that is involved. Now, let me explain about this racket.

Many of the banks of the country have built up large insurance reserves. You understand that when the banks have insured up to 20 percent the Federal Housing Administration not only insures the individual loan but it insures all loans that have been taken by the bank. A lot of these banks have built up tremendous reserves, some of them as much as two or three million dollars, and one of them in New York, the National City Bank of New York, about $12,000,000. So a builder can go to a man and say, "I will put you up a building at $2,000 and you will not have to put up a cent." What happens is that the builder constructs the house, a promissory note is given by the owner to the builder, the builder takes it to the bank, and the bank discounts it and is protected in its discount by virtue of this large insurance reserve which it has accumulated. This has become a racket, and has become a racket to such an extent that it is recognized by the large lumber dealers who value their reputation, and these large lumber dealers have now come to the Federal Housing Administration and insisted that this practice must be stopped, because these buildings will not be paid for. They are placed in undesirable locations. Often a man is taken out in the country and is told, "Here is a new property and here is A Street and here is B Street and here is C Street, and we can build you a house here and it will be an improved community in a short time." He builds the house and takes the note and the note is discounted by the bank. The bank is protected by its insurance and the owner, of course, has the bag to hold. He owes a note of $2,000 and has property that is undesirable.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 more minutes.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. MAVERICK. The Federal Housing Administration does not have to accept that undesirable note.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. They have to undertake the insurance.

Mr. MAVERICK. Does the gentleman mean it is compulsory for them to take such an undesirable note?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I mean the note does not go to them. When they have qualified the bank to do business, the owner's note is given to the builder. The builder takes the note to the bank and discounts it, and as soon as that note is discounted all the bank does is to report that loan to the Federal Housing Administration and that increases the insurance reserve of the bank.

Mr. MAVERICK. I do not understand how they can be made to take undesirable loans and I cannot understand what the location of the property has to do with the kind of equipment involved, because if the F. H. A. takes bad loans, they will take them whether there is equipment involved or not. I do not understand how that is relevant.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Equipment is not in the controversy. The House bill did not contain the equipment provision and the only controversy here is over new building construction.

Mr. MAVERICK. But there is such a thing as having new buildings in a new part of town that is good.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Of course, and that can be taken care of under title II of the Federal Housing Act. Title II of the Federal Housing Act provides that before these mortgages shall be accepted by the Federal Housing Administration they shall be on streets that have sewers, and where they will have schools and churches and things of that kind.

Mr. MAVERICK. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. May I ask the gentleman whether or not there is continued in this conference report the provision that the Government will finance loans for equipment like refrigerators and oil burners in houses?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. As the gentleman knows, when the House passed its bill a few days ago it did not contain that provision.

Mr. CELLER. I wanted to know whether the Senate had put in such a provision.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. No. It was in the Senate bill, and it was taken out in conference.

Mr. CELLER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. There seems to be some confusion as to the action of the Federal Housing Administration on these applications for loans. Is it not a fact that before the Federal Housing Administration agrees to insure a loan the Housing Administration itself passes on the loan? They have an appraisal made and then pass on the application.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is true under title II, but under title I they do not have a thing in the world to do with it. To illustrate the matter: You are a builder, and you come to me and you offer to build me a house for $2,000, and state that I do not have to put up any money. You recommend a location, and I agree to it. I give you my note for $2,000, and you take the note to the bank and have the note discounted, and it does not make a particle of difference to the bank whether the note is any good or not, because the bank has built up sufficient insurance reserves to cover the loan.

Mr. HEALEY. That is under title II?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. No; under title I.

Mr. HEALEY. You mean to say that the Housing Administration does not pass on the application or turn it down?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is the reason we want to get rid of it.

Mr. HARLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. HARLAN. If what the gentleman says is true, why is not it preferable to correcting it in one or two ways by giving the Housing Administration supervision of the small loans—making provision for insuring 20 percent of the total instead of insuring 20 percent of each individual loan?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Small loans can be made under title II, and the supervision can be made under title II.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DINGELL. The gentleman knows my enmity to this measure. I would like to ask whether the gentleman from Maryland would not change his attitude if he knew that the bankers were virtually in collusion with the banking racket?

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. What has been the gentleman's observation in relation to interest charges?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The result is this, that these small home owners who have built without any capital have to pay interest amounting to 9.7 percent.

Mr. McCORMACK. And in some cases higher.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes; in some cases higher; 9.7 is the minimum.

Mr. McCORMACK. And under title II you would not have to pay as much.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Under title II the interest would be less than 7 percent.

Now, I want to say a word or two about some other legislation. There is a bill here reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency giving the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the right to make rehabilitation of loans. This bill was reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency, and we have a rule from the Rules Committee.

I have introduced another bill to help the flood situation, to extend the power, under the National Housing Act, so there will be flood relief in the matter of construction. In other words, so far as the flood areas are concerned, 20 percent will be allowed as insurance for new construction, and the banks will be allowed to use the accumulated reserves. That legislation will be pressed just as fast as possible, and I very sincerely ask the Members of the House to rely upon the judgment of the Banking and Currency Committee and of the conference committee on this legislation. It is legislation we have had before us for 4 or 5 years. We have seen its operation in every possible aspect, and we believe that the conclusion that we have reached is sound and in the public interest. [Applause.]

I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I want the Members to take a look at this plan of a small cottage, which was fabricated by the Federal Housing Administration. It is a cottage approximately 22 feet wide and 26 feet long and contains 2 bedrooms, a large combination kitchen and living room, a bath, and a little alcove eating place. Their estimate upon this cottage, with labor at $1 per hour, is $966. Mind you, this is the Federal Housing estimate. And for a range, plumbing fixtures, electric fixtures, and all other necessary appurtenances $266. The total cost to set up that house equipped for a family would be $1,227 without the cost of the lot. I contend, and I believe experts in the housing field contend, that when once we can give some momentum to the building of cottages of this kind, so that we can appeal to the folks in the low-income brackets, we are going to absorb the carpenters and the plasterers and the hod carriers and the bricklayers and a great many others among the families who are unemployed at the present time. It seems to me that the whole hope of the unemployment program lies in giving momentum to a sane, common sense housing program that makes an essential appeal to the folks in the low-income brackets. There is the Government's own exhibit on a low-cost house. This is the thing that we are contending for, and have contended for under title I, and yet the conference report that is before you today is going to make it impossible to build those little homes under title I of the act if the conference report is adopted.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. But under title II the same house can be built.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I said title I. The gentleman should let me finish my story.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. All right, if the gentleman does not want to be fair. I cannot help that.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I would like to explain how we should consider title II in my own way.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I stated under title II that same house could be built and could be built where the interest charge would be less than 7 percent, while under title I it is nearly 10 percent, and under title II the owner would be protected in the location of his property.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I shall answer the gentleman in a moment. I want to build this thing up logically and get back to the legislation pending at the present time. We reported this bill out of the Banking Committee last week. We amended the language so as to make it possible to build new construction under title I. That bill came on the floor and was passed by this House. The Senate meanwhile had passed a bill with different language. It went to conference, and yesterday afternoon the conference report came back, so that the new construction feature was taken out of the bill, and as a result you cannot build new construction under title I. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] says that we have authority under title II to build those homes with the insurance feature.

Mr. Sisson. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. Sisson. I have a great deal of respect for the gentleman from Illinois, but is it not a fact that really the gentleman from Illinois is opposed generally to the philosophy of the Housing Act and that this one provision which we passed inadvertently and which has generally been regarded as unsound in the legislation is the provision for which the gentleman most zealously contends?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I hardly think that is a proper statement, although I know that my friend is always fair. The fact of the matter is that I am as much interested in housing as any Member of this body today, but I do not believe that the Housing Administration has conducted this thing in an efficient way so as to get results whereby a solution of the unemployment problem can be contrived.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not believe the Housing Administration has conducted this thing in an efficient way so as to get results, and that is borne out by the fact that the President is reported to have said last week that the Government housing program is a mess. If it is a mess in the language of the occupant of the White House, certainly we can possibly implement that program so as to give it momentum and get these people back to work on new construction.

Now let me answer the gentleman from Maryland. He says that this can be constructed under title II. As an abstract matter, that is absolutely correct; but the trouble with it is that when you want to build even a small home under title II these gentlemen down in the Housing Administration will tell you what the grade line of the lot has to be, how many closets you have to have in a bedroom, what your water supply has to be, and they will tell you what kind of sewage disposal they will approve or disapprove. They will dictate precisely the kind of a house you can build and where you can build it. They have made it so difficult to get mortgage insurance on new construction that their own record of new construction is their own impeachment. To the 31st of December 1935, after they had been doing business for 17 months, they accepted mortgages on 42,000 homes, and only 12,000 of those 42,000 homes were of new construction. What further proof is required to show that the F. H. A. has done a great deal to refinance existing mortgages and extremely little to inspire new construction? Financing mortgages on existing property creates no jobs. Insuring mortgages on new construction does create jobs. Their record for creating jobs is, therefore, quite unimpressive. Twelve thousand new houses! What is it? It is a mere drop in the bucket. Meantime, millions of people who would like to go to work upon new construction and get a job as a result of the housing program are not able to get those jobs, and the Federal Housing Administration is sitting on the lid. They say that under title I it will develop into a racket. Do not forget that under the provisions of this bill the insurance feature has been written down to 10 percent, so that on a $1,227 house, where they get a small lot, to make a total of about $1,600, the most they can get on any kind of a loan is going to be but 10 percent. Now, suppose a banker takes a first mortgage upon that property, say, a $1,000 mortgage; there remains the sum of $600 for a modernization loan. It means that 10 percent of that would be guaranteed by the Federal Housing Administration, which would only be a $60 guaranty on a $1,600 house.

How singular that we are willing to take billions of dollars and dump it into buildings where the Federal Government assumes the whole cost, and here we can get a housing program started on the basis of small homes, where we guarantee only 10 percent of the cost. I ask which would be the more acceptable of the two?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In order to clarify this issue, because I know a great many Members are seeking light, is it the gentleman's admission that under title II they have authority to make provision for this construction of which he has been speaking?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Under title I that is all they could do, is it not?

Mr. DIRKSEN. They have authority under title II, but it operates under a mutual mortgage system encumbered with red tape, whereby they so carefully look over all features as to simply throw a wet blanket on the whole program. We are contending that title I ought to be liberalized so as to permit new construction, because then you can get idle money everywhere in the country to go to work.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But this provision which the gentleman is advocating is not mandatory upon the commission, is it?

Mr. DIRKSEN. We are trying to make it so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But, as I understand it, the language of the bill does not require them to make these loans willy-nilly, does it?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Does the gentleman mean under title II or under title I?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Under title I.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Precisely as they have made over $370,000,000 worth of loans, using their own judgment in the matter, and recognizing the fact that the banks have a very precise interest in the money they loan.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has again expired.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. DIRKSEN. You cannot be unmindful of the fact that when a banker, a building and loan association, or an installment company or a financing institution makes a loan, they have a very abiding interest in the thing, because after all only a very small proportion of their loan is insured. I contend they are not going to permit an undue amount of abuse to creep in, because they are interested in the directional growth of their own community, and to see that it is not littered and dotted with a lot of paper-shell houses.

I think this is one of the finest provisions that could be written into the bill, and we ought to vote down this conference report.

It has been said that unless we curb the new construction activities under title I, a building racket will develop. What a singular admission to make after three hundred millions have been loaned under title I already and the efficiency with which it was done is loudly heralded and boasted of by the administration. It is said that if we authorize new construction under title I, there is a grave possibility of heavy losses. How does this stack up with the statement made before the committee by Mr. McDonald, the Administrator, that the losses have been very nominal? And if there have been no losses to speak of under title I in the past, by what strange reasoning do the proponents of this conference report now seek to make this House believe that there will be a larger proportion of losses in the future?

Frankly, I do not understand this reasoning. Heretofore we have been appropriating billions for relief and for unemployment. Will anyone contend that it is better to spend the whole cost out of public funds for building a dog pound at Memphis or a monkey cage in some other town as against a program where private funds are stimulated to a building program under which only a small percent of the loss is insured by the Government?

May I remind you that 76 percent of every building dollar goes for labor and that a program for the building of small houses will go further toward getting at our real unemployed problem than any other suggestion that has yet been advanced? Of this amount, 44 cents is expended on the site. On a $2,000 home, $880 would be expended for labor in the locality where such a house is built; and what a splendid thing it would be if a low-cost housing program could be initiated under title I of this act whereby work might be provided for thousands of men. Let us send this bill back to conference and insist that the original House language be restored whereby new construction under title I will be permitted.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DUFFEY].

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I think the full membership of this House should understand just exactly how this parliamentary situation arose today. On the 22d of January, H. R. 1051, introduced by myself, called for just a simple provision for the extension of effective date of title I, to April 1, 1937. From that time until last week not only was no action taken by the Committee on Banking and Currency but instead came a new bill with controversial provisions from the Housing Administrator and injected into the consideration of the extension of time of title I. It is not necessary, insofar as title I is concerned, that the legislation be passed today. It can pass a week from today or any reasonable time and still be operative thereafter.

The conference committee struck out that provision which makes reference to new construction of small houses up to $2,000 in value. The Senate eliminated a provision for electrical appliances. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that although the reports which have been given to us by the Housing Administrator have a great deal of encouragement, in the administration itself we have not gone right down to the depths of the situation in the building industry, which is so vital to recovery.

As has been so well and frequently said, the building industry was the first to suffer and perhaps the last to recover. Real prosperity depends on the return of that industry. It is a known fact that something like 35 crafts, 35 different types of laboring men, are involved in the construction of any new home. Although it might well be said that the emergency arising from the floods is merely a subterfuge or an outside argument why title I should be amended as it was passed by the House last week, yet we know that throughout the Nation there is great demand for small homes. People desire to have homes, and wide demand exists. It will open up the door to a type of business which, like other types, will help absorb unemployment.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this matter is so important that the membership of the House ought to vote down this conference report and send the bill back to conference with instructions that this provision for the small homes up to $2,000 should be retained by the House, and the conferees should be so instructed.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK].

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, it should take only a few words of explanation to clarify the meaning of the conference report which is now before the House. These reports are necessarily a compromise of the differences between Senate bills and House bills. It is our only means of ironing out the divergence of views between the Members of the House and Members of the Senate. After full and free discussion of these differences, your committee did its best to preserve the House views, but it was necessary that we should give way on one rather important provision, which seems to me to be the main reason for the opposition to the report. I am convinced in my own mind that the report is the best that we could secure in the interest of preserving the House views. Of course, it is a matter for you gentlemen to determine; you can adopt it or you can reject it. That is your prerogative and your right. A considerable number of the Members of the House have during the last several days had an opportunity to understand my attitude toward the operations under title I of the Federal Housing Act. I am glad to say that some of the abuses which I pointed out will hereafter not be possible under the language of the bill covered by the report. This, of course, in its final analysis, will depend upon the attitude of the officials in charge of the law and the extent to which they conform their operations hereafter to the expressed intent of Congress as disclosed in the debate.

The elimination of new construction under title I, as agreed to in the conference report, is entirely proper. A careful review of this legislation from its beginning clearly shows that construction of new homes was to be carried on under title II. Title I was devoted to insuring loans for the purpose of making repairs, alterations, and improvements to homes. Under later amendments authority was given the administration to insure the purchase and installation of mechanical appliances and equipment. This was, of course, a perversion of the original concept of the bill. All of these loans were originally intended to be character loans, and it was solely for that reason that Congress appropriated the $200,000,000 to protect the lending institutions against loss. If it had been known then that these lending institutions would have required security behind their loans, I am confident that this legislation would not be on the statute books today. Certainly no one here would hardly have supported it in the light of what has happened under the operations of title I.

To permit new construction under title I would be to encourage an unsound operation. It would operate against the owner of the home as well as the Government. In the first place, the Federal housing has little control of or supervision over the loans made under title I, and would therefore be unable to protect the borrower. In the next place, these loans could be second, third, or fourth mortgages, and could apply to any price home. This is, of course, absurd, in the light of the original purpose of title I. Then, too, we should remember that the interest rates and penalties allowed under title I against the borrower are inconsistent with true home-financing rates. Another reason why new construction should not be permitted under title I is that the loans only run for approximately 30 months, which would mean that the borrower would have to resort to the old abominable practices involved in refinancing, which always carry additional brokerage charges and exorbitant costs. No man could be more interested in seeing a sound and feasible plan developed for low-cost housing and well-built, low-priced homes than the man who is addressing you. I shall continue to labor for these accomplishments.

The plan of the beautiful little cottage, so emotionally described by my good friend from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] was never intended to be a title I project. My understanding is that it represents a pattern which the F. H. A. has been working on to take care of home owners whose incomes are in the low brackets. You should remember that under title II the F. H. A. has the authority and the means of insuring new construction up to $1,000,000,000. The interest rate, if I am correctly advised, including the insurance premium, would not exceed 7 percent, and the loans may be amortized over a period of 20 years. Through this plan the borrower has some real protection, but this depends largely upon the administration of the act.

The House should know that the Administrator recommended that the provision permitting new construction under title I be stricken out of the bill. I therefore feel that the House should abide by the judgment of its conferees, and especially when the report is actually in the interest of the low-cost home program to which several Members have referred in their remarks. As a matter of fairness, too, to the F. H. A., it should be remembered that under title I it is all going out and nothing coming in. The only means of covering their operations and providing for inevitable losses is eliminated when you permit new construction under title I, for there is no insurance rate charged against the borrower. No one is more ashamed of the accomplishments of F. H. A. under title II, so far as new construction is concerned, than I am. At the proper time I shall be prepared to advocate necessary changes which will insure that this phase of their activities will be paramount, rather than the refinancing of old loans, which has been largely another bailing-out process for certain financial institutions. This, however, is not the time to go into that matter.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Is it not true that under title I these loans are insured to the banks by the Federal Government without any cost whatever on their part?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. That is correct; and it is a point that I have labored here during the last week to make the House see and understand.

Mr. MAY and Mr. MAVERICK rose.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield first to the gentleman from Texas and then I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAVERICK. I wish to ask the gentleman two questions. We have heard a great deal of talk about the bankers' racket. My first question is, Are these loans properly supervised; and my second question is, Can a man make a loan to build a cottage costing around $2,000 under present regulations?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Answering the gentleman's first question, I will say that it is impractical and almost impossible for the F. H. A. to exercise strict supervision over loans insured under title I. Under title II arrangements, as I am informed, are being worked out to take care of the $2,000 type of new homes, similar to the design and plan presented to the House by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. MAVERICK. One further question, if the gentleman will permit. Are the laws adequate to provide strict supervision? Does not the gentleman think there should be strict supervision under title I?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. It would have been impossible for the legislation to be effective in the execution of its original purpose if the regulations were too binding and restricting or involved the usual bolts of red tape. We must not forget the conditions which were responsible for this unusual law.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I agree very fully with the gentleman's attitude, and I agree with him that we ought to make this housing crowd keenly conscious of what Congress wants them to do, which is to let the small man with moderate means build a small house if he wants to under this program. If this is the gentleman's idea, and I know it is, it is my idea and that of everybody else so far as I know, why would it not be the safest way to write it into the statute law so that they would know beyond peradventure what they should do?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Let me say to my friend from Kentucky that we thought the bill would be effective in accomplishing this very purpose. The language is quite clear. It must be said, however, in fairness to them, that the housing problems have not been as easy to work out as some would think. There are many complications and especially if the program is to be effectively sound. I have always felt like the Government should do everything proper to encourage home ownership. I have also always contended that a man with a family who wanted to own a home should be accorded preferential treatment in the matter of financing. There is no doubt that some of the failure of the F. H. A. to increase residential building is due to a lack of understanding of the problem or their inability to enlist the cooperation of financial institutions throughout the country. It is to be hoped, however, that a more efficient program is in the making.

Mr. MAY. Will it be possible, with the statute enacted as this report provides, for the administration to prepare regulations which would block these small loans of $2,000 under title II?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Of course not; but the effectiveness of the program will depend upon the attitude of those who formulate and administer it.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. The so-called racket that the Acting Chairman spoke about has resulted so far in a loss of less than five-thirteenths of 1 percent. In other words, the loss to the Government has been less than five-thirteenths of 1 percent?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I cannot answer the gentleman's question. As he well knows, I do not agree with many of the published figures of the F. H. A.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. The gentleman knows that $312,000,000 has been loaned under the provisions of this act and that the loss is less than $900,000?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I know the reported loss is supposed to be less than a million dollars. But, as I stated the other day, this is what you might call a "prospective" figure. Of course, no one can determine today the actual losses; but common sense tells us that the older the loans get the higher will be the curve of losses.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Why does the gentleman think that after improvement in general conditions these losses are going to be greater in the future than in the past?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Economic conditions will have their effect, but it is a matter of common sense that the older the loans get the more the loss will be. New loans do not usually show much loss.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Are not these loans getting gradually better by reason of payments?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I would say to the gentleman from Michigan that some of the loans will improve, but some of them will get worse. It does not stand to reason that out of 870,000 loans as reported of this kind, made under these conditions where the banks and installment financing companies are protected by the Government, more than 75 percent of them will ever be paid in full. Of course, that is my estimate, and is not worth, perhaps, any more than the estimate of any other person who is familiar with the operations under title I. If the loans had been strictly character loans this percentage would not have been something to decry. That is my view, though I know the gentleman from Michigan does not subscribe to it.

Mr. Speaker, I trust the House will adopt this report. Title I expires tomorrow by law. We cannot accomplish anything, in my opinion, by further delaying action. I therefore trust the House will uphold the hands of its conferees and adopt the conference report. [Applause.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I hope we may be able to clarify this situation. These character loans have been made under title 1, no matter whether the party had one, two, or more mortgages outstanding on the property. Why should one not build a little home costing $1,375 to $2,000 complete, as well as add to a home already constructed? Everyone realizes the red tape, the expense required under title 2. People will not build small homes under title 2; we all know that.

Our committee reported a bill permitting the financing of such homes. The conference committee of the House has, however, agreed with the Senate to prevent this, and the issue is clear. What has been done under title 2? Many banks had a great many mortgages which they insured and unloaded on other finance companies, which is easily done since the credit of the Government is back of them.

Three-fourths of the loans made under title 2 have been made on property already built and only 25 percent for new construction. The issue is plain. Few new small houses will be built under title 2, and just now, with the conditions resulting from the floods, we need this legislation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I regret to find myself in opposition to the conference report. Let no one in this House who believes we ought to vote down this report get the idea that the parliamentary situation is such that we must have this conference report adopted today in order to continue the Federal Housing Administration. It is going to continue regardless of what we do today. A delay of a week or 10 days in extending the administration of title I for another year is of no particular importance.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Of course, the Federal Housing Administration continues without this legislation as to all parts except title I?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. The gentleman is absolutely correct. It would be impossible under existing conditions to get this bill signed by the President in order to make it effective on April 1, the date when title I expires.

Mr. Speaker, there is a marked distinction between loans under title I and title II of this bill. A great deal has been said about the claim that mortgages could be obtained under title II of the act, which would fill the need covered by the existing provisions of title I. Title I does not contemplate the use of mortgages. It is a character-loan provision. It enables men and women who desire to build these small houses to borrow when it is impossible under existing conditions to give a mortgage. Whenever it is possible to give a mortgage title II is used; but under title II insurance has been provided by the Government to the amount of 20 percent, now 10 percent in the new bill, of the total amount of F. H. A. loans made by an insured bank for the benefit of those unable to give a lien.

If we eliminate the provisions of title I relating to small houses, and do not forget that we are changing the law as it has been in effect ever since the Housing Act was adopted, we are no longer going to be able to build the type of house that the gentleman from Illinois exhibited to the Members a while ago.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Notwithstanding the original idea that the loans under title I were to be based on character, has it not been the general practice to take security in order to cover these loans made by approved lending institutions?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. That is entirely up to the banks. They may or may not. The simple and direct way to do all that is wanted would have been to enact H. R. 10269, the bill introduced by my able colleague from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL], simply extending for another year the present provisions of title I. The same result would be reached by the adoption of the Duffy bill. Both of these gentlemen have a comprehension of the needs of the lumber and equipment industries and of their customers. Their solution is better than the restrictive provisions of this bill.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. Is it possible for the Federal Housing Administration to pass on all loans under title I? Do they pass on all applications?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. They pass on them in this way. They have established regulations to which the loans must conform, and if the applications do not conform to those regulations, the loans, if made, are not insured.

Mr. HEALEY. Then, as a matter of fact, they reserve the right to reject or approve the loan.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I very much regret to have to disagree with the chairman of the committee and with the conference committee, but I firmly believe, if we vote down this conference report today, we will get a measure here that will do two things. It will continue the policy of the past in making loans upon electrical equipment in the small home, and let me pause and digress a moment to say that under this bill a man who wants to spend $2,100 to put a gas furnace in a large home can get the loan under this bill, but the woman who wants to buy a washing machine cannot do it. This does not seem to me to be fair. Notes for the purchase of machinery and equipment based on prices of $2,000 and up to $50,000 are insurable, but notes for purchase of equipment of less than $2,000 are not insurable. Such discrimination is beyond my comprehension, and I am confident would be rejected if the House fully understood the facts. The other desirable change is the insurance of small-house construction loans.

The conferees had an opportunity to liberalize this bill by adopting the Senate provision insuring loans for the purchase of small machinery and equipment for homes, such as washing machines, and so forth, and adopting the House provision for the insurance of loans to encourage small-home construction. The conference report strikes out the liberal provision in both bills, and, in my judgment, largely emasculates title I. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remainder of the time.

Mr. Speaker, these small loans, as was said by the gentleman from North Carolina, were originally intended to be character loans, but the banks have built up insurance reserves; in other words, if the banks make 10 loans of $1,000 they are insured on each loan to the extent of $200, but this builds up an entire insurance reserve not of $200 on each loan but of $1,000. So they can apply this $1,000 on any of the loans that may fail. The result has been that banks have built reserves of as high as $12,000,000 in one case and of hundreds of thousands of dollars in other cases. So the result is that the loans are not character loans at all.

Let me go over it again. The builder goes to a man and says, "I can build you a house for $2,000, and you will not have to put up a dollar." The man says, "All right; you go ahead and build it." He builds it and takes the man's note for $2,000. He carries it to one of these banks, and the bank has built up a sufficient reserve to be able to take 100-percent risk on the payment of that note, and if he takes it he is getting 9.7-percent interest on the note. Therefore, these bankers are not only insured by the Federal Government on these loans 100 percent, but they get 9.7 percent interest on the loan.

This is the result insofar as the bankers are concerned. There is absolutely no consideration shown to the man who has bought the house. He has his note of $2,000 to pay, and he has it to pay with an interest charge of 9.7 percent, in the face of the fact that the bank is taking no risk at all and is getting a rate of interest of 9.7 percent.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Why does the gentleman from Maryland think it is necessary to pass an amendment to this bill, which I understand he has introduced, to permit loans on these small houses under title I in the flood area, if, as the gentleman says, these loans can be obtained under title II?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I did not say that loans in the flood areas could be made just as readily under title II, because under title II the Federal Housing Administration undertakes to consider the needs of the owner, where the property should be located, the sewer facilities, the school and the church facilities, and whether or not, as a matter of fact, the property will be permanently desirable, and this would not always be practicable in the flood area.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Can the gentleman conceive of a man able to own a $2,000 home wanting to finance it through a system whereby he will be charged about 10-percent interest and be liable for 5-percent default payment and cannot have the loan run longer than 30 months, when under title II he can get the same loan for less than 7-percent interest and it can run for 20 years?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Of course, the poor fellow is deluded into buying a house under title I, and 100 percent of them will lose their property—practically every one of them. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DIRKSEN) there were 112 ayes and 50 noes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I object on the ground that a quorum is not present and make a point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty-three Members are present, a quorum, and the conference report is agreed to.

On motion of Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

NAVAL AIR STATION—MIAMI, FLA.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8372) to authorize the acquisition of lands in the vicinity of Miami, Fla., as a site for a naval air station, and to authorize the construction and installation of a naval air station thereon, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. What is this bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am asking that a House bill passed with Senate amendments be sent to conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. VINSON of Georgia, Mr. DREWRY, and Mr. DARROW.

ROBINSON-PATMAN EQUAL OPPORTUNITY BILL

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, H. R. 8442, the bill to give independent merchants equal rights and privileges, is now pending on the House Calendar. Judge HUBERT UTTERBACK, for the Committee on the Judiciary, filed a report on the bill today. The report is several pages long, discusses the bill fully, and contains convincing reasons why the bill should become a law. A copy of this report may be obtained from the document room upon request.

MIDDLEMEN

Much is always said about the middleman. Eliminate the middleman, reduce the cost to consumers by direct sales, and so forth. As much as we talk about eliminating the middlemen, it is impossible—just as impossible as it is to eliminate modes of transportation from the producer to the consumer. You may change the methods of distribution and may call brokers, jobbers, and wholesalers by other names, but the services rendered by these brokers, wholesalers, and jobbers must be rendered by others. Their services cannot be eliminated although you may change methods and change names. It is in the interest of the country that we have independent brokers, jobbers, and wholesalers. If the present trend continues, these functions will be performed by agencies owned or in control of the large banker-controlled corporate chains. When that happens the producers and manufacturers will not have a fair competitive market. It will be a fixed market—fixed for the benefit of the corporate chains. A small manufacturer will not have the name of an independent broker in each city of the United States that he can send a mimeographed statement to announcing his wares for sale, which will permit orders to come piling in at a very small cost to him for the services rendered by the brokers. On the other hand, this small manufacturer must operate his plant for the benefit of the corporate chains or not at all. There will not be independent competitive channels that may be used for distributing his goods. The present trend is toward fewer buyers and fewer sellers. This is a definite trend toward monopoly.

BROKERAGE

Although this bill does not prohibit direct sales from the manufacturer to the consumer, and does not compel the payment of brokerage, it does provide that the payment of brokerage by a buyer to the seller or by the seller to the buyer shall be prohibited. This will eliminate a form of bribery. Recently it was learned that an agent for the potato growers on the Atlantic seaboard had a contract with the growers to furnish them seed, fertilizer, and spray materials at good prices; the growers to deliver their potatoes at harvesttime to him, and the agent would then sell the potatoes and after deducting proper charges divide the proceeds three-fourths to the growers and one-fourth to himself, the agent. It was discovered that this agent was under contract to a large mass buyer which compelled him to sell all potatoes to this mass buyer at the market price or forfeit $5 per car. In return for this the mass buyer was giving the farmers' agent a secret rebate of $2.50 a car, and incidentally, the buyer was so large that he made the market prices. No one would think about condoning his lawyer accepting a fee or secret compensation from the other party. No ethical person would expect to bribe or influence his competitor or the other party to a transaction by the payment of a fee or commission to his agent. This law will prevent such trickery, chicanery, and bribery.

CONSUMERS SAVED ENORMOUS SUM

All chain stores in the United States in all lines of business are doing about 25 percent of the retail distribution business. If these stores can save the people $750,000,000 a year on 25 percent of the sales, when all the other 75 percent—the independent merchants—receive the same prices as the corporate chains, the consumers of America will be saved two and a quarter billion dollars a year. Remember, our bill is not to compel manufacturers to raise prices to the chains, but to compel manufacturers to give the same prices to the independents based upon the same quantity and under the same conditions.

PERMITTING THE PRESIDENT TO VETO SEPARATE ITEMS OF AN APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I introduced a proposed amendment to the Constitution permitting the President of the United States to veto separate items of an appropriation bill.

Section 7, article 1, of the Constitution of the United States permits the President to veto bills. If the President desires to veto parts of an appropriation or a so-called rider to a bill, he must veto the whole bill. To veto a whole bill because of his objections to individual items may not always appear logical and reasonable. I believe that in our day, with bills and appropriations containing various matters and propositions, it is unfair to the President and to Congress to have a procedure of veto, which may often prevent real consideration of the part objected to.

We have on several occasions amended the procedural parts of our Constitution. It appears to me that this problem is worthy of our serious consideration. The importance of the veto is recognized in our Federal and in all the State Constitutions. My suggestion is not new. It has been brought up in Congress in previous terms. I am convinced that the time has arrived for consideration of this proposal.

At the present time 39 of the 48 States provide for a veto of separate items.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on the conference report have 5 legislative days to extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DEATH OF STEPHEN A. RUDD

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sorrow and deep regret that I rise in my place today to announce to the membership of the House the death of one of our distinguished colleagues, STEPHEN A. RUDD, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Mr. RUDD served in the Seventy-second Congress and was reelected to the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses. He was a member of the Board of Aldermen of the City of New York for 12 years and served with great distinction as a member of that body. He was born and reared in Brooklyn and respected and admired as one of its distinguished citizens and lawyers.

Mr. RUDD was a citizen of high character, a conscientious man, a good legislator, sincere in his efforts to do that which was for the general good and general benefit of the country—a splendid American.

I had a personal acquaintance with him for a period of 25 years. In all that time Mr. RUDD never swerved in his loyalty to his party and to his country. He distinguished himself as a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House with honor and distinction. He sat in his seat day after day; and though his life was fast ebbing away, he insisted on attending to his duties as a Member of this House.

Only on my earnest solicitation did he consent to leave the House and go to his home, never to return here. Mr. RUDD was the kind of man we must admire, the type that comes to a legislative body such as this who realizes his duty and appreciates its membership. He stood on the floor here like a soldier with his gun, defending his country, and he would not leave though his life was fast ebbing away. It is sad to think about a man of that type or to think of any Member of the House who is called to the Great Beyond, for, after all, with all of the work that we do, with all of the debates that we have, with all of the differences of opinion which we express on the floor of the House, yet when the final roll call comes, our bickerings are buried beyond recall.

STEPHEN RUDD will go down in the memory of this House and the country as one of the ablest men, one of the most sincere men, one of the most conscientious men that ever served in the House. As I said a moment ago, when I went to his seat—and he invariably sat in that same corner—I said, "Steve, you must go home." I could see him dwindling away and dwindling away. Yet his answer was, "Tom, I belong here, I want to do my duty; if the Lord calls me, I would just as soon be called here as at home." However, I prevailed upon him and sent him home, and at 6 o'clock this morning he passed away. This is a great personal sorrow to me, because of my close association with him. He was strong in his sentiments, strong in his convictions, strong in courage, and strong for his friends. He was peaceful, quiet, calm, collected. He was a good father and splendid husband. The Lord has called him, and may the Lord have mercy upon his soul.

Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 474

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. STEPHEN A. RUDD, a Representative from the State of New York.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the remainder of the resolution.
